Did you know?

Bradbury’s introduction to the 1967 edition of Fahrenheit 451 recalls his childhood love of books and libraries: “I ate, drank, and slept books…. It followed then that when Hitler burned a book I felt it as keenly, please forgive me, as his killing a human, for in the long sum of history they are one and the same flesh. Mind or body, put to the oven, it is a sinful practice, and I carried that with me.”

What do you think?

What message does the book cover art convey to you?

How do you distinguish among “book burning,” “banned books,” “censorship”?

Is censorship ever appropriate?
