SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Molocnea can be found in the following publications: "Molocnea," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehilot: Romanayab: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivassdam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 473; A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Bararabia și alte câteva întâmplări. Contribuții la istoria încercării de exterminare a evreilor (Bucharest: Glob, 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 2, part 1 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive," HM 2: 8 (2010): 18–26.

The following two collections at USHMMA may contain sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Molocnea: DAOO (RG-31.004M) and GARF (RG-22.002M). VHA holds one survivor testimony about the Molocnea camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #35994, Menaḥem Saraf testimony, August 21, 1997.
2. Mircu, Pogromurile din Basarabia, p. 28.
3. Ancel, Transnistria, p. 77, n. 52.

MOSTOVOI

Mostovoi, the seat of the Mostovoi raion in Berezovca județ (today: Mostove, Ukraine), in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located along the Chychykliya River, a tributary of the Bug. It lies 25 kilometers (15 miles) north-northeast of Berezovca.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Mostovoi on August 10, 1941. Immediately after taking control of the commune, the Germans rounded up the remaining few hundred Jewish residents. Most were killed soon thereafter by Einsatzgruppe D; the rest were sent to the German-run Krivorushiko camp in the Vaselino raion, Berezovca județ. The Romanian authorities took over control in September 1941 and romanianized the commune's name from Mostovoy to Mostovoi (or Mostovoie). The prefect in the Berezovca județ was Colonel Leonida Popp. The deputy prefect was Sublocotenent Alexandru Smochină. The praetor in the Mostovoi raion was Dr. Victor Petrenciuc. The commandant of the Mostovoi gendarmes post was Locotenent Dumitru Pandrea.

Ethnic Germans (Volksdeutsche) populated the Mostovoi area. They underwent an intense Nazification process concomitant with the arrival of Jewish and Roma (Gypsy) deportees. An office of the SS Office for Ethnic German Affairs (Volksdeutsche Mittelstelle, VoMi), the organization representing the economic and cultural interests of the Volksdeutsche in southern Transnistria, was based in Landau (in the Berezovca județ), not far from Mostovoi. The head of VoMi in Landau was Obersturmbannführer Müller. In the fall of 1941, VoMi set up a Volksdeutsche extermination force, Sonderkommando Russland (SkR). A section of SkR, Bereichkommando 11 (BK 11), was stationed in Rastadt, a village 8 kilometers (5 miles) east of Mostovoi. Its commandant was SS-Hauptsturmführer Rudolf Hartung. BK11 made repeated trips to the Mostovoi camp to collect Jews in order to kill them.¹

In October 1941, the dilapidated residence of a noble family served as a transit camp in Mostovoi. The imposing building was often called "the castle" or "palace" by the deportees. The camp was not surrounded by barbed wire, but a small group of Ukrainian auxiliaries together with Romanian gendarmes guarded it. The rooms had windows without glass; plumbing was nonexistent. Food was not provided. The first convoys of deportees to be held in the Mostovoi camp were Ukrainian Jews from Odessa and Romanian Jews from Bessarabia and Bukovina. The approximate total number of these deportees was between 5,000 and 10,000. Some remained in place, whereas others were dispersed to other camps on arrival. The German and Romanian authorities realized that the massing of Jews in the Berezovca județ in the winter of 1941, with many dying of typhus because of the inhumane camp conditions, endangered civilians and troops. The Jews' fate was sealed when the Romanians and the German SkR "cleansed" the Mostovoi area of typhus by either shooting the Jews or transferring them to killing camps in Bogdanovca and Domanovca (Golta județ). There existed in Mostovoi a hospital staffed by Ukrainian doctors and nurses. Doctor Sergei Kolpensky, a hospital chief, generously helped Jews who were sick with typhus and hid them from the German soldiers who were also treated in the same facility.²

In the spring of 1942, the remaining Jews sought to rent rooms from the Ukrainian residents of Mostovoi village in an area designated as a ghetto. This area, too, was not fenced in and only lightly guarded.³ The Jews worked or bartered goods in return for lodging. By April 1942, there were 346 Jews in Mostovoi.⁴ Unannounced visits by BK 11 sent panic through the camp and ghetto. The unit arrived periodically to pick up Jews to work on the animal farms (sovkhoses) belonging to ethnic German villages. When these workers became sick and their productivity decreased, they were simply shot and replaced. In June 1942, the number of Jews arriving at Mostovoi increased again. Some 1,200 of them were moved from the Mostovoi camp to the Suha Verba camp to work on the produce farm (kolkhoz), but were soon shot by the Lichtenfeld village's German police, BK 20, led by SS-Hauptsturmführer Franz Leibl.⁵

On September 22, 1942, approximately 600 Jews from Romania (the Old Kingdom and southern Transylvania) were sent by train from Bucharest to Mostovoi; they were deported after requesting Soviet citizenship so they could live in or move to Bessarabia and northern Bukovina, which the Soviet Union had annexed in June 1940. BK 11 collected them the day after their arrival in Mostovoi and transported them to Rastadt where they were shot.⁶ A few days later in September 1942, a group of 50 to 60 Jews from Romania, suspected of communist activity, were deported to the Vapniarca camp in Transnistria. In Tiraspol, however, the railcars were redirected to Mostovoi. Like the previous transport of deportees from Romania, these Jews disembarked at Kosolovca in the Mostovoi raion (today: near Kudryavtsivka, Ukraine) and then walked 13 kilometers (8 miles) to the Mostovoi camp. Their luggage was ransacked by Romanian gendarmes and Ukrainian auxiliaries. A soldier with General Vlasov's army simply shot anyone complaining about the robberies.⁷ Max Horowitz, a self-declared "Jewish mayor" working for the authorities, exploited the new group by demanding gifts in exchange for allowing them to remain in Mostovoi. The group, learning about conditions in the area from the few survivors of the previous massacres, sought immediate accommodation outside of the "castle" and in the ghetto. They were able to make themselves useful to the local residents and found lodging in their homes.⁸ Not as fortunate were a group of 90 Jews, refugees from Poland, who were assembled at the Mostovoi gendarmes post at the beginning of November 1942. BK 11 picked them up and transported them to Rastadt, where they murdered them.⁹

In February 1943 there were 260 Jews in the Mostovoi ghetto. In March 1943, approximately 100 or more (mostly Ukrainian) Jews were transferred from the Mostovoi ghetto to work for German construction firms across the Bug; they were likely deployed in building Highway IV (Durchgangstrasse IV), the strategic highway connecting Poland to southern Ukraine. These Jews, it was known to everyone, would never return.¹⁰ Some of the remaining Jews in the Mostovoi ghetto were assigned to do forced labor, but rarely according to their true professions; they worked in gardens, farms, or institutions in and around Mostovoi.¹¹ Compensation, always small and received sporadically, was in the form of seasonal produce. In September 1943, 123 Jews remained in Mostovoi (some from Bukovina and Bessarabia, but most from Old Kingdom Romania), not counting a few Ukrainian Jews.¹² In March 1944, the Jews from the Old Kingdom were released by the gendarmes and repatriated to Romania by train.

In September 1942, thousands of Roma ("Gypsies") were deported from Romania to Transnistria. Hundreds of those Roma were placed at the outskirts of Mostovoi, some in abandoned houses and others simply in huts built on an open field. The camp was neither fenced in nor guarded. In the winter of 1942, many Roma died of cold, typhus, and starvation. The situation improved very little throughout 1943, because the Roma in Mostovoi were not provided the means to support themselves. The local villagers scorned them for having to resort to theft. In October 1943, the Berezovca prefecture placed an order for 50 pairs of suits made out of sackcloth for the Roma in Mostovoi. The outfits were not finished until January 1944, by which time many of those who remained without clothes and possessions faced certain death by exposure.¹³ In February 1944, there were 234 Roma in Mostovoi.¹⁴ Their return to Romania in March 1944 was chaotic.

The Red Army recaptured Mostovoi in April 1944. The People's Tribunal in Bucharest tried and condemned many of Berezovca's leaders, including Popp, for the fate of the Jews and Roma in the Mostovoi raion.¹⁵ Popp was sentenced to hard labor in prison and the confiscation of his private property.

SOURCES More information regarding the fate of Jews and Roma in the Mostovoi camps and ghetto can be found in the following publications: I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009); Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 5 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For a collection of documents regarding the deportation of Romanian Roma to Transnistria, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews and Roma in the Mostovoi camps and ghetto are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), ANR (RG-25.002M), AMAN (RG-25.003M), AME (RG-25.006M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). ANR, Collection 60 (RG-25.089M), contains survivors' recollections about the Mostovoi camp. VHA holds 36 testimonies (in English, Romanian, and Russian) from Jewish survivors who were held in the Mostovoi camps and ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See the outline of VoMi's EG and SK units for Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 311, file 801, p. 321.
2. VHA #03131, Angela Genesco testimony, June 14, 1995.
3. Ion Antonescu's Military Cabinet inspection report, following a visit to the camps and ghettos for Jews and Roma in Transnistria, May 1943, USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 16, file 205, pp. 433–438 (esp. pp. 437–438).
4. Census of Jews to be deported even closer to the Bug, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 143.
5. See diary entry, June 1942, Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 211.
6. See diary entry, September 22, 1942, ibid., 3: 297.
7. VHA #02775, Vasile Bordeianu testimony, May 23, 1995.
8. VHA #49542, Hanta Brumfeld testimony, February 22, 1999.
9. November 1, 1942, diary entry, Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 299.
10. See statistical figure for February 1943: USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 19, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 590, p. 20. See correspondence between Prefect Isopescu of the Golta județ and Gheorghe Alexianu, governor of Transnistria, regarding the transfer of Jews from Mostovoi, USHMMA, RG-31.004M, reel 4, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1496, p. 161.
11. See table of accountants, for example, from the Mostovoi ghetto, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 18, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 24, n.p., and other professions, pp. 77–78; another distribution according to professions can be found in reel 19, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 590, p. 64.
12. See name list, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 19, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 591, pp. 77–78 (and verso).
13. See correspondence and order, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 19, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 171, p. 4, and delo 592, pp. 203–205.
14. See name list, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 19, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 591, pp. 5–8.
15. See court depositions against Leonida Popp, RG-25.004M, reel 26, file 39181, pp. 248, 252–253.

MURAFĂ

Murafa, a small town in the Șargorod raion, Moghilev județ (today: Murafa, Ukraine), in the northwestern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is divided by the Murafa River. It is 47 kilometers (29 miles) northeast of Moghilev-Podolsk. In 1926, the Jewish population was 1,421, whereas in 1939 the number of Jews in the raion was 2,626 (data for Murafa are not available). A general mobilization took place during the invasion of the Soviet Union in June 1941. Military-aged Jewish men were drafted into the Red Army, while others fled deeper inside the Soviet Union, but some 800 Jews remained in Murafa.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Murafa on July 21, 1941. Control over the area was transferred to the Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The prefects in the Moghilev județ were Constantin Dimitriu, Constantin Năsturaș, and Constantin Loghin, all army colonels. The deputy prefect and praetor in Șargorod was Iosif Dindelegan. Dimitrie (or Dumitru) Rusu was the first praetor. The commandants of the Moghilev Gendarmes Legion were Aurel Dănulescu, Gheorghe Botoroagă, and Romeo Orășeanu, all army majors.

An open ghetto was established in Murafa in late September 1941 or shortly thereafter. It was created in the area traditionally occupied by the local Jewish community, known as “Old Murafa” (as opposed to the “New Murafa” section where mostly Christian Ukrainians lived). The ghetto incorporated the Jewish school and the synagogue, which had been partly destroyed by the war, and its outer limits were demarcated by verbal order. Some 3,500 Jews deported from Romania arrived in Murafa in successive convoys between October and December 1941. They were mostly from southern Bukovina and the Dorohoi area, but smaller groups originally from Bessarabia and Cernăuți arrived there too. The convoys entered Transnistria via the Atachi-Moghilev-Podolsk crossing point, after having their members' belongings ransacked repeatedly. Although some Jews arrived in Murafa with some of their possessions and in relatively good health, others were robbed of all their belongings and exhausted after weeks of forced marches.

The local Jewish community of Murafa took in the Jews arriving from Romania. However, the ghetto became very overcrowded as subsequent convoys arrived in the village. Every habitable space was occupied, with several families sharing a single room; many also stayed in attics and barns.¹ The frigid temperatures in the winter of 1941, along with the typhus epidemic that erupted among the deportees, killed hundreds of the ghetto's inhabitants. In addition to a Jewish Council that represented the local Ukrainian Jews (known as the “Obschchina”), the ghetto's other inhabitants set up their own Jewish Council, headed by Nahum Bakal; a Jewish police force was also created to implement the demands of various Romanian, Ukrainian, and even ghetto authorities. The committees collaborated in setting up a number of welfare institutions to aid the many impoverished deportees who were unable to survive without help. Gradually, the ghetto established a soup kitchen, a hospital, a pharmacy, and a sterilization facility consisting of a few repurposed barns to combat the spread of lice (the vector in the spread of typhus). Toward the end of 1943, a small orphanage was set up. Jewish doctors from the ghetto took care of the sick and needy, although they often fell victim to the epidemics that they were fighting.² These projects were at first funded with ghetto money, extracted from taxes imposed on the Jews who still had means, but were supplemented by material and financial aid distributed by the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) throughout 1943 and into 1944.

Among the forced labor projects undertaken by the Murafa ghetto's Jews was the construction of the Murafa-Yaroshenka (Romanian: Iaroșinca) highway in June to September 1943. Boys and women, in particular, were taken to the tobacco fields during the harvest campaign in September and October 1942. In addition to clearing snow throughout the town in winter, the Jews undertook smaller projects for various local public institutions (until February 1943), as their skills permitted. Some also sought work opportunities in town or in the ghetto independent of the authorities' plans. Many simply begged from house to house for bread or potato peels, or bartered their last items, because hunger and starvation were rampant. In accordance with government ordinances (especially Ordinance No. 23), Jewish workers had to be remunerated for each day of work in German-issued scrip (Reichskreditkassenschein, RKKS): 2 RKKS for unskilled and 3 RKKS for skilled workers.³ Payment could be made in food or in food coupons, yet according to an official report from the Șargorod raion's Jewish Labor Office issued on April 30, 1943, only a fraction (approximately 15 percent) of the total payment due for the previous year's work was paid (that payment was in bulk food, namely 20 tons of barley and 5 tons of peas).⁴ From late 1942 and into 1943 small packages and sums of money were sent by individuals in Romania (Bukovina, especially) to their relatives or friends in the Murafa ghetto; such packages and funds, when not opened or confiscated along the way, aided greatly those who received them.

Further demands for Jewish laborers came in 1943. The German authorities requested from their Romanian counterparts a number of male Jews, in good health, for the Nicolaev building projects. These projects involved both the building of a bridge over the Bug River at Trihati as well as building roads (on the Romanian side of the Bug). A small number of Jews were selected from the ghetto and sent by train to these work camps; very few returned in March 1944. In addition to the harsh living and working conditions to which they were subjected by the German authorities, the inmates were shot when the forced labor camps were closed down.

A small number of cultural activities (poetry reading, singing, and lectures) were held in the Murafa ghetto in 1943, and prayer services were conducted in an improvised house of prayer. In March 1943, the number of Jews deported to Murafa was 2,510; in September 1943, there were 2,605 Jews in Murafa (2,179 from Bukovina and 426 from Bessarabia), not counting the Ukrainian Jews.⁵ Partisan activity around Murafa grew more intense in the summer and fall of 1943.

Priority in the general repatriation of the Jews to Romania was given to a few categories of individuals, such as World War I veterans and their immediate descendants, former state functionaries, and those deported from the Regat and the Doro-hoi area. A number of such Jews in the Murafa ghetto met one or more of these criteria and were repatriated in December 1943. Orphaned children from the Murafa ghetto were repatriated in March 1944, on the eve of the Red Army's recapture of the area.⁶ The Red Army liberated the ghetto on March 19, 1944, after a short but bloody battle for the town. Many survivors returned to Bukovina (especially the Cernăuți area) by foot or in army trains and trucks. The Soviet authorities picked up some of the survivors along the way and drafted them into the Red Army. The People's Court in Bucharest tried and convicted to years of hard labor Șargorod's praetor, Iosif Dindelegan, along with other higher authorities in the Moghilev gendarmerie.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Murafa can be found in the following publications: "Murafa," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 631–632; "Murafa," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 861; "Murafa," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiy spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 217; "Murafa," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 204), 5: 468–469; "Murafa," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sheniyah, vol. 1 (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969); Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 47; Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Sarah Rosen, "Surviving in the Murafa Ghetto: A Case Study of One Ghetto in Transnistria," in Thomas Kühne and Tom Lawson, eds., The Holocaust and Local History: Proceedings of the First International Graduate Stu- dents' Conference on Holocaust and Genocide Studies, Strassler Family Center for Holocaust and Genocide Studies, Clark University, April 23–26, 2009 (London: Vallentine Mitchell, 2009), pp. 143–160. For an account of religious life in the Murafa ghetto, see Iacov Geller, Rezistența Spirituală a Evreilor Români în Timpul Holocaustului (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2004), p. 356.

Primary sources documenting the Jews' fate in the Murafa ghetto are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), SRI (RG-25.004M), ANR (RG-25.002M), and DAVO (RG-31.011). Iosif Katz's memoir, available at USHMM (Acc. No. 2006.140), documents work and living conditions in the Nicolaev labor camps. VHA holds 184 testimonies (in seven languages) from Jewish survivors of the Murafa ghetto. A portrait photograph of Moissi Brandmann, a survivor of the Murafa ghetto deported from Cernăuți, can be found at USHMMPA (#38050). The ITS holds some CNI cards tracking the paths of persecution from the Murafa ghetto. This documentation is available in digital form at USHMMA.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #49994, Harry Kolisher testimony, July 18, 1999.
2. VHA #50184, Gusta Rusu testimony, August 17, 1999.
3. See "Ordonanța Nr. 23," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 20, fond 2361, opis 15, delo 1, p. 268 (and verso).
4. See the report in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 381–382.
5. See the following census reports: "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistriaășt pe localități, raioane și județe," reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345; and "Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 441.
6. For their names, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 6, file 7642, vol. 1.

NEMERCI

Nemerici, a village in the Copșaigora raion in the Moghilev județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Nemerche, Ukraine), is located 25 kilometers (15 miles) north-northwest of Moghilev-Podolsk. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,903 Jews living in the Copșaigora raion, of whom only a small number lived in Nemerici (census data for the village are not available).

The German and Romanian armies overran Nemerici and its surroundings in the middle of July 1941. After a short German military occupation, the area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Nemerche to Nemerici (occasionally appearing in documents as Nemerti). The praetor in the Copșaigora raion was Ion Vodă.

Some of the Jews deported from Bukovina and northern Bessarabia in the summer of 1941 arrived in Nemerici in October and November 1941. The majority of them entered Transnistria via the Atachi crossing point over the Dniester River and made a short stop in Moghilev-Podolsk, before being marched farther northeast toward the Bug River. The convoys of deportees were robbed of many of their possessions at the entry point into Transnistria, as well as en route to their deportation place, adding substantially to their misery. In Nemerici, the deportees were placed along a few streets in an area designated as a ghetto. They were crammed inside the homes of the local Jews, with multiple families sharing a single room. Rubin Roittmann and Mark Barac were among the ghetto leaders.

According to the statistical records of the Health Service of the Moghilev Prefecture, there were 453 Jews deported from Romania living in Nemerici in October 1942.¹ Siegfried Jägendorf, president of the Jewish Council of Moghilev (Consiliul Evreiesc Moghilev, CEM), estimated that 50 percent of the deported Jews in the district of Moghilev perished during the winter of 1941–1942 from cold, hunger, and typhus. It can be assumed, then, that the number of Jews in Nemerici at the end of the 1941 deportations was probably close to 700 or more.²

The Relief Commission from the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews in Bucharest (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) that visited Transnistria at the beginning of 1943 stopped on January 8 and 9 in Moghilev. The commission, led by Fred Șaraga, learned from the leaders of the Nemerici ghetto assembled in Moghilev at that time that 402 Jews were still living in the Nemerici ghetto (317 deported and 85 local Jews). The commission planned future shipments of goods to the ghetto, while allocating some funds for their immediate needs. Among the improvements made possible by these funds was the opening of a soup kitchen to feed 200 of the neediest among them and of a small dispensary, staffed by a pharmacist and a nurse.³

Life in the closed and guarded ghetto was filled with restrictions. Leaving the ghetto without permission was severely punished. Wearing the yellow star became obligatory. All able-bodied men were taken to do forced labor in road and rail repairs and in agriculture. Bribery and barter became essential means of survival.⁴ The Romanian local administration, which was their employer, owed them payment for their work, but such payment was delayed (if paid at all). A few deportees received, on occasion, a small sum of money from their friends or family members still living in Romania.⁵

By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Nemerici was 304, likely not counting the Ukrainian Jews; on September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 216 (4 from Bessarabia, 212 from Bukovina).⁶ The difference in number between the two censuses can be explained in terms of forced labor recruitment. Skilled and unskilled forced laborers from all over the Moghilev district were sent to the German-run bridge-building sites at Trihati (Trikhaty) and in the Nicolaev (Nikolayev) region in June 1943. Both of these locations were on the Bug River in the southeastern part of Transnistria. Work at the bridges lasted until late 1943, at which time the surviving workers were returned to Moghilev.

The repatriation of Jews deported from Romania began at the end of 1943, first with the Jews originally from Dorohoi district and the Regat, along with orphaned children and a few other special categories of Jews (for example, former state functionaries, World War I veterans, and widows). Few Jews from the Nemerici ghetto qualified for this early return. In February 1944, the number of Jews deported from Romania living in the entire Copăgorod raion was 2,339, of whom some were held in the Nemerici ghetto.⁷ The ghetto was liberated by the Red Army at the end of March 1944. Some Jews were immediately drafted into the Red Army, whereas others made the dangerous journey back to Romania.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Nemerici can be found in the following publications: “Nemerici,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds, Pinkas ha-kebilot: Romanayab: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishevim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivadam ve-‘ad le-‘abar Sho‘at Milhemet ha-‘alam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 478; “Nemerche,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 640; “Nemerche,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainkogo Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 220; “Nemerche,” Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007), 6: 31; and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, “The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive,” HM 2:8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Nemerici can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). VHA holds three survivor testimonies (in English and Hebrew) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time; Tsilah Trikhter’s VHA testimony (#39380) includes a drawing of a part of the ghetto.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10, Problem 33, vol. 20, p. 281.

2. Jägendorf memorandum, September 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, file 2699, vol. 22, pp. 257–289 (esp. p. 265).

3. For a visitor’s report, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, p. 128.

4. VHA #39380, Tsilah Trikhter testimony, December 22, 1997; VHA #21187, Efraim Lechtman testimony, October 20, 1996.

5. USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2241, opis 1, delo 1564, p. 119.

6. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345, and for the September 1943 census, see “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 457.

7. See population figures according to nationalities in the raions of the Moghilev district, USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reel 13, fond 2383, delo 44, p. 5 (see also p. 6 for population figures according to professions).

NESTERVARCA

Nestervarca, a village in the Tulcin raion, bordering the town of Tulcin in the Tulcin județ, in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Nestervarka, Ukraine), is separated from Tulcin by the Silnytsya River.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Nestervarca during the second part of July 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the area beginning in September 1941. The village’s name was romanianized from Nester-varka to Nestervarca, and the raion became Tulcin. The praetor in the Tulcin raion was Andrei Partenie.

The beginnings of the Nestervarca camp are unclear. The most accepted possibility is that a forced labor camp was created in Nestervarca at some time during the summer of 1942 when the Romanian and German authorities sought to exploit the area’s natural resource: the large reserves of peat used as fuel. During 1942 and 1943, Jews deported from northern Bessarabia and Bukovina in Romania, but also Ukrainian Jews from other parts of Transnistria, were brought to Nestervarca from other camps and ghettos in the bordering Moghilev and Balta județe. The majority of those sent to Nestervarca were able-bodied male and female Jews, although among them were also some elderly people and children. Some groups were transported to Nestervarca by train, and others were simply marched there: all were carefully guarded.

Those arriving by train disembarked at Tulcin, where Romanian and German escorts led them on foot to a kolkhoz (state collective farm) in Nestervarca. The empty buildings inside the kolkhoz had been repurposed as primitive living quarters, devoid of any adequate facilities, including beds. The camp was guarded by Romanian gendarmes and Ukrainian auxiliaries, with the guards also using dogs to watch the prisoners. The laborers marched to and from the swampy peat fields under escort. Beating the prisoners was common, especially by the camp supervisor (someone by the name of Lakatosh or a close variant).¹ Food consisted of hot water (“tea”), polenta, and a mix of peas and beans, including fodder peas not usually used for human consumption. The German authorities from the Tulcin military center, which included a Gestapo office as well, inspected the peat fields from time to time. Most of the prisoners worked in the peat fields as diggers, but a few groups were selected for laying railway tracks, loading the peat onto trains, and construction. Women labored in the same places as men and suffered the same inhumane treatment; in addition, they were hit on their breasts and genitalia as punishment.² Escaping from the camp was possible for those who knew the area, but anyone caught trying was summarily shot.³ Such was the fate of four Jews who escaped from Nestervarca and were caught in the Moghilev ghetto (where they had previously resided). They were shot on July 27, 1943.⁴ Because the heavy work destroyed their clothes, the deportees were outfitted with wooden shoes and brown clothes made out of sackcloth.⁵

The number of Jews held in the Nestervarca camp fluctuated, depending on the scale and number of the projects undertaken; even as late as August 1943, the camp received new prisoners from other camps and ghettos (Pecioara, Brațlav, and Trostineț), and some were sent to other places.⁶ The census of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) in March 1943 curiously did not list Nestervarca among the places where Jews deported from Romania lived; it may be that the delegation that gathered this information in January 1943 was not able to obtain any population figures for the camp or that the core production of Nestervarca had ceased for the winter and the camp had no or few forced laborers on site. The Romanian gendarmerie in Transnistria, however, listed the camp in its September 1, 1943, census as holding 422 Jews from Bessarabia and 1,168 Jews from Bukovina.⁷ There were also most likely Ukrainian Jews there, but they were not included in this census. They do appear in a subsequent census taken by the gendarmerie that counts “all” the Jews in Tulcin in October 1943: the Nestervarca camp had 2,403 Jews (1,742 men, 479 women, 124 children, and 58 elderly).⁸

The camp was either shut down or drastically reduced in size at the end of 1943 or the beginning of 1944, when conditions made peat exploitation unproductive. The remaining deportees were returned to a few ghettos, including the nearby Tulcin ghetto. From there, select groups were repatriated to Romania. The remainder stayed in place for a few more months. At the beginning of March 1944, the Romanian administration retreated from Tulcin, handing control to the German military authorities, who were in retreat before the Red Army. In March 1944, the Red Army recaptured Tulcin and Nestervarca, freeing the Jews who were still held there.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Nestervarca can be found in the following publications: “Nestervarka,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 646; “Nestervarka,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evre- jstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiĭ spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 222; “Nestervarka,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007), 6: 38; “Nestervarca,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-‘ad le-ahar Sho‘at Milhemet ha-‘alam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 479; and M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tiurmi ta getto na okupovanii teritorii Ukraini (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). See also A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in the Nestervarca camp can be found at USHMM, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), and AME (RG-25.006M). Affidavits containing the testimonies of Jews imprisoned in Nestervarca can be found at USHMM, collection Cernivtsi Jewish Survivors Organization (RG-31.020M). VHA holds 13 survivor testimonies in two languages (Russian and English) from Jews held in the camp for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #27409, Lothar Singer testimony, February 11, 1997; VHA #38851, Ruvin Gitman testimony, November 28, 1997.
2. VHA #27409; VHA #30655, Klara Woskoboĭnik testimony, April 20, 1997.
3. VHA #17870, Faia Fruchter testimony, July 29, 1996; VHA #34291, Raisa Gel’fgat testimony, July 17, 1997.
4. Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 311.
5. VHA #20791, Mikhael Kishelvich testimony, October 17, 1996.
6. Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3:312.
7. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 347; for the April 1943 census, see USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 17, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 711, p. 11, and delo 717, p. 42; for the absence of Manicovca from the September 1943 census, see “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 458.

8. USHMMA, RG-26.006M (AME), reel 11, vol. 21 (Problem 33), p. 585.

OBODOVCA

Obodovca (pre-1941: Obodovka), a village in the Obodovca raion, Balta județ (today: Obodivka, Ukraine) in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located along a stream. It is 41 kilometers (26 miles) southeast of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census there were 535 Jews in Obodovca, representing 6.9 percent of the town's population, and 754 Jews in the Obodovca raion, representing 2.49 percent of the raion's population.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Obodovca on July 28, 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the town in September 1941 and romanianized its name as Obodovca (also called Obodovca Veche). The village extended across the stream; the part north of the stream was called Novo Obodovca, or New Obodovca. Colonel Vasile Nica was the prefect of the Balta județ, and the deputy prefect was Alexandru Cojocaru. Locotenent-colonel Ștefan Gavăț was the commandant of the Balta Gendarmes Legion. The praetor in Obodovca raion was Dumitru Sofian.

Convoys of Jews deported from Romania were marched to Obodovca in October and early November 1941. By mid-November, an estimated 10,000 deported Jews had reached Obodovca. Some stayed while others were forced to continue their march after a short stop. A transit camp was created in the war-torn stables of the local collective farm (kolkhoz). A few Jews who after repeated robberies nevertheless possessed jewelry or foreign currency were able to bribe local civilian and military authorities and rent rooms from townspeople. However, the vast majority of the Jews were concentrated in the large cowsheds in the kolkhoz.¹

The conditions inside the farm were inhumane. Most stables were missing windows and/or doors, some were only partly covered, and all lacked beds, heating, running water, and toilets. Temperatures dropped well below freezing in November, and it was extremely cold in the winter of 1941. During this time, thousands of Jews died of cold, hunger, and sickness (typhus, dysentery, and infectious diseases). Piles of frozen corpses grew outside the cold barns because there were no tools to dig holes into the frozen ground. A wagon came around every few days to collect the dead bodies and remove them to a field on the outskirts of the camp.²

In December 1941, a typhus epidemic erupted in the camp and spread to the village. As a result, the entire kolkhoz was surrounded by barbed wire and guarded by sentinels. The impossible living conditions, including the inability to search for work and food, brought even more distress to the inmates. Nevertheless, people left the camp after dark under extremely risky conditions. There were no medications or delousing facilities to combat the typhus epidemic during the winter of 1941, resulting in an extremely large number of casualties: almost 60 percent of all Jews deported to Obodovca died of typhus. The Jews fared better in the following winter, when medication sent from Romania and better living conditions reduced the number of deaths.

Gradually, more Jews either moved outside the camp into empty houses vacated by those who fled with the Red Army, were taken in by local Jews from Obodovca, or rented rooms from villagers. A ghetto was thus created in an area of the village allocated for Jewish settlement (at which point the farm ceased to exist as a camp). Among the Romanian Jews deported to Obodovca were former state functionaries, such as teachers, doctors, lawyers, and clerks, and many World War I veterans, some decorated for acts of heroism.³

A number of farms and workshops (ateliere) were created in 1942 throughout the Balta județ, including in Obodovca. Skilled Jews worked in these workshops according to their former professions (tailors, cobblers, and furriers). They were usually paid insignificant amounts, if at all. A team of nine leaders was in charge of various aspects of the Obodovca ghetto: Bernad Rössler (ghetto chief), Moritz Siebuer (deputy chief), Iancu Vindisch (secretary), Herman Rasp (auditor), Ghesel Haviș (social services), Aron Cheiș (hospital and pharmacy), Ruvin Sandelman (workshops), and Haim Bernștein and Saul Faerștein (supplies).⁴ The majority of able-bodied Jewish men and women worked as seasonal laborers in agriculture and as street cleaners, painters, builders, bakers, and drivers, but also as dentists and accountants.⁵ In October 1943, 10 Jewish tailors from the Obodovca ghetto were sent to Balta to work in a tailoring workshop making clothes for staff members of the Romanian Railroad Company (Căile Ferate Române).

Financial and material support from Jewish communities in Romania facilitated the creation and maintenance of workshops and various ghetto services. Used items were also sent from Jews in Bukovina via the Județ Office of Jews in Cernauti (Oficiul Județean al Evreilor din Cernăuți).⁶ The Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) sent money and goods (glass, produce, coal, and tools) for the ghetto as a whole and for the workshops. Some of the aid was delayed due to bureaucracy, and some never reached the intended recipients either because it was intercepted by other authorities or stolen along the way.⁷ Late in 1942 and into 1943, financial aid from family and friends in Romania also reached the Obodovca ghetto.⁸ According to the March 1943 census of deported Jews, there were 1,550 Jews in Obodovca (including local Ukrainian Jews); in September 1943, there were 1,373 (excluding local Jews).⁹

Hundreds of skilled Jews from the Obodovca raion were sent as forced laborers to work on construction projects at Nicolaev and Varvarovca (in the Oceacov județ). That area was under the control of the Nazi SS who used Ukrainian auxiliitary police as guards on the building sites. Under strict supervision and with heavy workloads, poor sanitation, and little food, the Jews built barracks, bridgeheads, and bridges on the Bug River in the middle of 1943.¹⁰

In March 1943, the Romanian authorities ordered the transformation of two farms into disciplinary labor camps in the Obodovca raion. The camps at Verhovca and Dubina (today: Verkhivka and Dubyna, three to four kilometers [2 miles] north of Obodovca) were “for the placement in agricultural work of individuals who have become undesirable in their own communities.”¹¹ These camps appear to have been created for the general population, rather than for the confinement of Jews. Although deported Jews worked in some capacity in these camps, as accountants, for example, there existed independent forced labor camps for Jews near each of these farms where Jews worked alongside the other prisoners.

The repatriation of orphaned children from Obodovca took place at the end of 1943 and continued into 1944, when other groups of deportees were sent back to Romania. After a disorganized German retreat through Obodovca, the Red Army liberated Obodovca on March 15, 1944. Some Jewish men of military age were recruited into the Red Army and sent deeper inside the Soviet Union as laborers in the war effort.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Obodovca can be found in the following publications: “Obodovka,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 667–668; “Obodovka,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 923; “Obodovka,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Evrejtva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), pp. 236–237; “Obodovka,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007), 6: 103–104; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 49; Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries and vol. 2: Documents 1–558 (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 2 (parts 1 and 2) (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Matias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHHM, 2000).

Primary sources about the fate of Jews deported to Obodovca are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M); ACMEOR (RG-68.029M); OOYV (RG-68.130M); GARF (RG-22.002M, reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1259, p. 13, and in the same collection, delo 1242, pp. 125); and DAVINO (RG-31.011M, reel 6, fond 1683, opis 1, delo 10). VHA holds more than 250 testimonies in seven languages from Jewish survivors who stayed for various periods of time in Obodovca.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #05363, Henia Donenfeld testimony, August 10, 1995.
2. VHA #00523, Freda Rosenblatt testimony, January 10, 1995; VHA #22733, Aviva Benanav testimony, December 3, 1996. See also survivor Ioil (Iuri) Carlicovschi’s report, “Informație pe tema ‘Fermele de [la] Obodovca,’” USHMMA, RG-68.029M (ACMEOR), reel 11, file 62, pp. 1–3.
3. “Tabel nominal de evreii din raionul Obodovca care au fost funcționari de stat și familiile lor,” USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOYV), reel 2, file M-39/27 (DAOO: 2358/1/110), pp. 12–13 (and verso), 14–15 (and verso), 22, 44–45; for decorated veterans, see pp. 16–17 (and verso), 19.
4. List of work committees and ghetto chiefs for the Balta județ, “Tabel de membrii Biroului de Organiz. a Muncii Evreilor din Jud. Balta și a Comitetelor evreiești din Jud. Balta pe data de 1 Septembrie 1943,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, p. 72 (and verso).
5. See, for instance, a long list of Jewish forced laborers working in the Obodovca raion, “Tabel nominal de evrei utilizați la diferitele întreprinderi și instituții în cuprinsul raionului Obodovca,” USHMMA, RG-68.130M, reel 2, file M-39/32 (DAOO: 2358/1/666), pp. 1–20 (and verso).
6. Letter informing the Jewish Committee in Obodovca about the sending of packages, September 29, 1943, USHMMA, RG-68.130M, reel 1, file M-39/26 (DAOO: 2358/1/107), p. 7 (see also pp. 104, 110, 112).
7. See the exchange between the Obodovca Jewish Committee and the Prefect’s Office regarding missing aid, USHMMA, RG-68.130M, reel 1, file M-39/26 (DAOO: 2358/1/107), pp. 35–38, 96, but see also p. 82 in which a large quantity of salt sent for Obodovca was acquired by the Balta Jewish Committee.
8. See “Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din România deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Obodovca (Jud. Balta),” RG-68.130M, reel 1, file M-39/25 (DAOO: 2358/1/838), p. 2 (also pp. 6, 36, 38, 42).
9. March 1943 census: “Tablou numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346; September 1943 census: “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 439.
10. See “Tabel de meseriași pe naționalități din R. Obodovca,” September 30, 1943, USHMMA, RG-68.130M, reel 2, file M-39/30 (DAOO: 2358/1/663), pp. 146–149 (and verso).

11. See correspondence Nr. 23421 of Transnistria's Department of Labor in Odessa, requesting that two labor camps be created, March 1943, followed by correspondence Nr. 4341 from Balta Prefecture confirming their establishment, USHMM, RG-68.130M, reel 2, file M-39/30 (DAOO: 2358 /1/663), pp. 29, 32.

ODESSA

Odessa, seat of the Odessa raion and județ in the southern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, lies on the shores of the Black Sea. According to the 1939 Soviet census, 200,961 Jews lived there. Jewish refugees from Bukovina and Bessarabia flocked to Odessa in July 1941 following the German-Romanian invasion of the Soviet Union. Some of the city's long-term Jewish residents, however, had retreated with the Red Army or fled deeper into Soviet territory, but many stayed in place. When the city fell to the Romanian 4th Army on October 16, 1941, there were approximately 85,000 Jews in Odessa.

Romanian military and civilian offices were established soon after the city's capture, when Odessa became Transnistria's capital. The governor of Transnistria was Professor Gheorghe Alexianu. Odessa's military praetor was Colonel Mihail Niculescu-Coca, its first military commandant was General de brigadă Ion Glogojanu, and its mayor was Maior Gherman Pântea. The praetors in Odessa were M. Niculescu, Vasile Chindrias, Ion Costilă, and Radu Emilian. Transnistria's gendarmes inspectors, based in Odessa, were Colonel Emil Broșteanu and Colonel Mihail P. Iliescu.

Terror and chaos characterized the first week under Romanian occupation. The entire male population was ordered to report for document verification,¹ at which time many were arrested on suspicion of being "dangerous" communists and Jews. Young residents were deported to labor camps in Romania for allegedly serving in the Red Army. Of those confined in the Odessa penitentiary, the most suspicious were shot or hanged; others committed suicide while under arrest. Romanian soldiers resorted to looting and raping on the pretext of searching for "Jewish collaborators" and resisters left behind by the NKVD (People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs, Narodnyi komissariat vnutrennikh del).² Fear that anti-Romanian pockets of armed resisters were aiding Soviet units hidden deep inside Odessa's catacombs engendered a climate of terror.

Ukrainian Jews wait in line to register after the German and Romanian occupation of Odessa, October 1941.

USHMM WS #76454, COURTESY OF THE DEUTSCHE FOTOTHEK DER SAECHSISCHE LANDESBIBLIOTHEK.

The city's first ghetto was established on October 18, 1941. It was built around the penitentiary, located on Fontanskaia Daroga Street and commanded by the gendarme locotenent, Teodor Alectoride. The ghetto encompassed a residential area stretching toward the sea. Entire families were forced to move into the ghetto and could bring with them only a minimum of personal items, the clothing they were wearing, and no food. A Jewish delegation from the ghetto procured food for the inmates. The men worked as street cleaners, moving debris and removing barricades and land mines.

On the evening of October 22, 1941, a mine exploded in the Romanian Army headquarters, the former NKVD headquarters. The blast killed 66 Romanian officers, including Glogojanu, and 4 German naval officers. Viewing the explosion as an act of sabotage, Romanian authorities retaliated cruelly. On the night of October 22 and into the next day, 5,000 people, not exclusively Jews, were hanged on tram posts and planks on street corners.³ Many others were shot. On October 24, Jews held in the ghetto were escorted to Dalnik, a suburb of Odessa, where many were shot in antitank ditches or machine-gunned inside four warehouses. The buildings were set on fire, except for one warehouse that was dynamited at the very same hour that the army headquarters had exploded two days earlier.

On October 25, 1941, 25,000 more of Odessa's Jews were concentrated in Slobodca, an Odessa neighborhood designated as a ghetto. This second ghetto was surrounded by barbed wire and was guarded by gendarmes. Life inside Slobodca was harsh, characterized by overcrowding, malnutrition, cold, and exposure to the elements, because almost everyone slept out in the open. A hospital was set up in the ghetto, but the harsh conditions led to many deaths. After 10 days, on November 3, the women were permitted to return home.

The deportation of Odessa's Jews occurred in two waves. One group of at least 7,000 Jews was deported as early as October 27, 1941. They left on foot from Dalnik, after a short confinement in a temporary camp there. Alexianu's Ordinance No. 23 of November 11, 1941, encouraged other deportations from the Odessa raion and județ, so that by mid-November 40,000 Jews had already been sent in the direction of Berezovca and farther east to Bogdanovca (Golta județ). On Alexianu's orders, the second wave of deportations, conducted from January 12 to February 22, 1942, resulted in the removal of 20,792 Jews to the Berezovca and Ochacov regions.⁴ Jews who escaped previous deportations were eventually deported in March 1942, together with those held in the Odessa prison.

Some Jews were returned to Odessa in 1943 to perform forced labor in government workshops (ateliere), under the Department of Labor (Direcția Muncii). The workshops at Adolf Hitler Street, No. 6 specialized in sewing, shoemaking, hair-dressing, electrical work, carpentry, and tinsmithing. A dentistry and medical office also operated there. Jews also worked in administration in the Department of Health and Department of Industries, as well as in printing. Others worked in factories.⁵ The work regime was strict for everyone, with only occasional remuneration. Even non-Jews, aged 16 to 60, were obligated to do compulsory labor (sanctioned by Ordinance No. 26 of November 21, 1941) or face detention in a hard labor camp.⁶

A delegation from Bucharest's Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) was permitted to make a short visit to Transnistria in January 1943. Governor Alexianu and other state functionaries met with the Jewish delegation on the evening of January 2, 1943, and conferred about the solutions to be implemented to alleviate the life of the deportees.⁷ On January 3, the delegation visited the 54 Jews (31 men, 19 women, 4 children) who worked and lived in the Adolf Hitler Street workshops. According to a census of deported Jews that followed the delegation's visit, there were 60 Jews left in Odessa in March 1943.⁸ Some of the Jewish forced laborers in Odessa received private funds from family or relatives in Romania, via a money-transfer channel of CER.⁹

The Red Army liberated Odessa in April 1944. In April 1946, the People's Tribunal in Bucharest condemned Alexianu to death for committing criminal acts against Odessa's Jews. He was executed on June 1, 1946.¹⁰

SOURCES Information about the fate of Odessa's Jews can be found in the following publications: "Odessa," in A. I. Kruglov, The Catastrophe of Ukrainian Jews, 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), pp. 237–239; "Odessa," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., The Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 925–928; "Odessa," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2007), 6: 109–121; Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival and vol. 6: War Crimes Trials (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3a: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Alexander Dallin, Odessa, 1941–1944: A Case Study of Soviet Territory under Foreign Rule (Portland, OR: Center for Romanian Studies, 1998); Charles King, Odessa: Genius and Death in a City of Dreams (New York: W. W. Norton & Co., 2011); and Yitzhak Arad, The Holocaust in the Soviet Union (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 2009); for the 1939 Soviet census, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed.,

Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 21.

Archival information about the fate of Odessa's Jews can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO, SRI, and ANR. For a list of praetors in Odessa, see RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 1, fond 2242, opis 4s, delo 23, p. 3; for SSI information reports, see RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 18, file 402/1941, pp. 11–34; for Fred Șaraga's report following the visit to Transnistria, see RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, pp. 106–156; for Jewish labor in Odessa's workshops, see RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 2, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1358, p. 83; and for the prosecution's statement against Ion Antonescu before the People's Tribunal, see RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 34, file 40010, vol. 49, pp. 49–59 (esp. p. 59).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. "Jews wait in line to register shortly after the German and Romanian occupation of Odessa," USHMMPA, WS #69334 (Courtesy of YVA).

2. See Romanian SSI reports, "Raport Informativ," for period October 20 to 28, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 18, file 402/1941, pp. 11–34.

3. "A German soldier stands near the bodies of eight Jews executed in Odessa shortly after the occupation of the city," USHMMPA, WS # 78240 (Courtesy of YVA).

4. See "Ordonanța Nr. 23," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 20, fond 2361, opis 15, delo 1, p. 268 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/20/2361/15/1, with page); "Ordonanța Nr. 35," USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 33, file 40010, vol. 28, p. 37 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-25.004M/33/40010/28, p. 37).

5. "Prefectura Județului Balta [către] Subinspectoratul General al Jandarmeriei," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/307, n.p.; and "Tabel nominal al meseriașilor evrei din Atelierul Guvernământului Odessa, Strada Adolf Hitler 6," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/2/2242/1/1358, p. 83; "Către Direcția Sănătății Odessa," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/1/2242/1/307, p. 359; "Nota," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/14/2264s/1/40b, p. 31; "Către Direcția Muncii," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/23, n.p.; "Către Guvernământul Transnistriei Direcția Muncii Odessa," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/15, p. 216; "46 Oameni din fosta fabrică de încălțăminte din Odessa, mutați la Birzula," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1561, p. 93.

6. See "Către Direcția Muncii," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/1/2242/1/307, pp. 215–216.

7. See "Raportul oficial al Comisiunii Evreiești care a fost în Transnistria," produced by Fred Șaraga, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/9/2710/33, pp. 106–156.

8. "Tablou numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," in Ancel, Documents 5: 348.

9. "Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din Romania deportați în Transnistria aflați la Novi-Bug prin Odessa," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/ 5/2242/1/1507, p. 181.

10. Prosecution's statement, "Ion Antonescu," USHMMA, RG-25.004M/34/40010/49, pp. 49–59 (esp. p. 59); executions under Decree Law 312/1945, article 1/paragraphs a–b, and article 2/paragraphs a–o.

ODESSA/INTERNMENT AND LABOR CAMPS

Odessa was the capital of Romanian-controlled Transnistria from November 1941 to March 1944. In addition to subcamps for Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) that existed in Odessa throughout the war, the Romanian administration of Transnistria set up a number of other correctional camps. Two such camps were the Odessa internment camp (Lagărul de Internare, Odessa) and the Lusdorf labor camp (Lagărul de Muncă Lusdorf). The Odessa Gendarmes Inspectorate, the Odessa police (Criminal Bureau), and the Office of Labor of the Department of the Civil Government of Transnistria played roles in coordinating, supervising, and exploiting these camps.

The Odessa internment camp, commanded by Zaharia, held both men and women, civilians, and former military. By the summer of 1943, 1,434 soldiers who had deserted the Romanian Army were interned in this camp, according to a note issued by the Punishment Bureau.¹ The prisoners in this camp were used as temporary manual laborers for private business and government departments. According to a list of demands for and the available supply of laborers, the prisoners were deployed in diverse institutions in Odessa, including the airport, the government departments of health and roads, the Orthodox Church Mission Office, the Office of Labor, the Agricultural University, state farms (Dalnik, Ștefan Cel Mare, and Ponom), the military hospital, and the local Ford automotive plant; a few prisoners were sent to the German headquarters (Kommandantur) in Trihati.² The prisoners were briefly examined by a doctor before being dispatched to work assignments. The camp maintained a degree of autonomy and self-administration, as was also common with Soviet POW camps.³

The Lusdorf labor camp was located on Lusdorf Way No. 11 on the outskirts of Odessa. The camp commandant was Grigore Colos, assisted by Grigore Ploteanu; Marfa Dvajala was the camp's Russian-Romanian interpreter. A group of gendarmes, under the command of Sergeant major Anghel Nisteanu of the 3rd Company, 1st Gendarmes Battalion, guarded the camp. The camp held people of both sexes, and it appears to have been a disciplinary camp for citizens of Odessa suspected of subversive activity (such as supporting communism).

The Lusdorf camp's commandant treated the prisoners with contempt, particularly the women. He sexually assaulted two female prisoners in June 1943, physically abused other prisoners, and freed some in exchange for bribes of money or jewelry. In August 1943, the Odessa military court condemned Colos to nine months' imprisonment for abuse of power. The Chișinău military court investigated Sergeant major Nisteanu for complicity in these abuses.⁴

The fate of the camp and its prisoners prior to Odessa's occupation by the Red Army is not known. Most likely those prisoners originally from Romania (including Bessarabia) and who had longer sentences to serve were repatriated to other correctional facilities inside Romania or were released.

SOURCES Primary sources are available at USHMMA, in collection RG-68.130M, reel 4 (OOYV).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Note of Punishment Bureau, July 1943, USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOYV), reel 4, M-39/83 (DAOO: 2264/1/8), p. 4.

2. See the demand and supply list, July 22, 1943: "Situția cererilor de lucrători, satisfacerea cererilor de către raioane și biro și trimiterea de lucrători diferitelor instituții pe ziua de 22.VII. 43," USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOYV), reel 4, M-39/83 (DAOO: 2264/1/8), p. 2 (but see also p. 3).

3. See correspondence between the camp and the Office of Labor, December 17, 1943, USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOYV), reel 4, M-39/83 (DAOO: 2264/1/8), pp. 123, 149–151.

4. See police correspondence regarding Colos, August 1943, USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOYV), reel 4, M-39/83 (DAOO: 2264/1/8), pp. 17–19.

ODESSA/LPRS

The main camps for Soviet prisoners of war (Lagăre de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici, LPRS) in Transnistria were in Tiraspol, the first capital of the German- and Romanian-controlled Transnistria. The camps were Tiraspol Camp No. 5 (LPRS No. 5) and Tiraspol Camp No. 11 (LPRS No. 11). Even after Transnistria's capital was moved to Odessa following its conquest on October 26, 1941, the camps remained in Tiraspol until early 1944. Gradually, the two main camps formed networks of subcamps to accommodate the large influx of POWs captured by German and Romanian armies fighting in Transnistria and beyond, and to respond to the need to house laborers of various institutions inside Transnistria.¹

Of the many subcamps attached to LPRS No. 11 and scattered throughout Transnistria, there existed a subcamp (sublagăr) in Odessa. All of LPRS No. 11's subcamps came under the jurisdiction of the Headquarters Rear Area for the East (Comandamentul Etapelor de Est). The commandant of LPRS No. 11 was Locotenent-colonel Victor Ioanid. At his disposal, the commandant had 15 officers, 13 noncommissioned officers (NCOs), and 340 troops, all recruited from the Bucharest 3rd Frontier Battalion (Batalion de Graniceri). This contingent was used to manage LPRS No. 11 and its subcamps (with additional troops recruited locally where the subcamps were situated).

The Odessa subcamp (sublagărul Odessa) was not a single site, but incorporated other smaller subcamps, not all of which were in Odessa. In the city of Odessa, there were smaller camps in three factories where Soviet prisoners worked: Combicorn factory (19 POWs), guarded by the 590th Infantry Battalion; Anatra grain mill for the army with 72 Soviet prisoners guarded by the 2nd Company Explorations; and the Roata wagon factory with 171 Soviet prisoners guarded by the Odessa 590th Infantry Battalion.

In the neighboring Ochacov județ, there existed three other small camps that belonged to the Odessa subcamp. They were located in collective farms where Soviet prisoners were put to work: the Reno farm with seven Soviet prisoners, Adeleni (or Ardeleni) farm with nine Soviet POWs, and Feodorovca farm with nine Soviet prisoners.

In addition to the small camps attached to the Odessa subcamp, three other subcamps in the Odessa județ also belonged to LPRS No. 11. The Vacarjani subcamp had a contingent of 30 Soviet prisoners (a Romanian index of localities in Transnistria places Vacarjani in the Bilaievsca raion, Ovidiopol județ (today: Ukraine).² The Mândrov subcamp had 50 Soviet prisoners. The Manheim (or Mannheim) subcamp also had 50 POWs, but its exact location is difficult to determine. A Romanian index of localities in Transnistria places it near Liubopol, Antono Codincevo raion, Odessa județ. If this placement is correct, Manheim is today near Lyubopol, southeast of Kominternivske.³

LPRS No. 11 and its network of subcamps were administratively autonomous, as were other camps for Soviet POWs in Romania. The camp received material resources of food, clothing, work tools, and so on, from the Headquarters Rear Area for the East for the purpose of maintaining its labor potential.⁴ The exact time of the opening of the subcamps in Odessa is unknown, but it is safe to surmise a date in early to mid-1942. Similarly, descriptions of the early conditions of imprisonment are hard to find, but they likely corresponded to those in other Soviet POW camps under Romanian control throughout Transnistria and Romania. In these camps, improvements in food, clothing, and housing occurred only after a second or sometimes third year of operation (generally by late 1942 and early 1943). The mortality resulting from maltreatment and negligence was highest in the first year (the fall of 1941 to the fall of 1942) in every camp for Soviet POWs.

SOURCES Secondary sources documenting the fate of Soviet POWs in the Odessa subcamp and other subcamps in the Odessa județ are not available.

Primary sources are available at USHMMA, in collections ANR (RG-25.002M) and DAOO (RG-31.004M).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Secret note about LPRS in Transnistria of the General Inspectorate of Gendarmes, “Nota. Lagărele existente în Transnistria,” March 21, 1943, USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 33, file 79, 1943, pp. 408–413.

2. For the index, see “Tablou de județele, raioanele și cătunele din Transnistria,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 7, fond 2242, opis 2, delo 37, p. 23 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/7/2242/2/37, p. 23).

3. USHMMA, RG-31.004M/7/2242/2/37, p. 20.

4. Transnistrian Gendarmes Inspectorate’s report, March 20, 1943, “Dare de seamă asupra lagărelor existente în Transnistria,” USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 33, file 79, 1943, pp. 416–419 (esp. pp. 416–417).

OLEANIȚA

Oleanița (pre-1941: Olyanitsa), a village in the Trostineț raion, Tulcin județ (today: Olyanytsya, Ukraine), in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located 3 kilometers (1.9 miles) west of the Bug River and 29 kilometers (18 miles) east of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,731 Jews in the Trostineț raion, representing just over 4 percent of its population (census data for Oleanița are not available).

The German and Romanian armies occupied the area around Oleanița on July 25, 1941. Oleanița came under the Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941, and the village’s name was romanianized as Oleanița (also appearing in documents as Olianța). Colonels Ion Lazăr, Constantin Loghin, and Constantin Năsturaș were Tulcin’s prefects. The commandant of the Tulcin Gendarmes Legion was Maior Mihailovici, who was succeeded by Căpitan Fetecău. The praetor in Trostineț was Constantin Alexandrescu.

On July 3, 1942, a convoy of Jews deported from the Dorohoi județ to the Ladijin/Stone Quarry camp passed near Oleanița (a train station was located a few kilometers from Ladijin and Oleanița). The Jews had been deported from Dorohoi and its nearby villages and townships in June 1942 in what represented the second wave of deportations from Bukovina.¹ The convoy contained the family members of men who were undertaking forced labor in other parts of the country (for example, at Brăila); when the men too were eventually deported after their return home, their family members were scattered among different camps in Transnistria. The deportees appealed to the governor of Transnistria for the reunification of their families, with some requests being granted. For example, some female deportees asked for permission to move to Oleanița where their husbands had been deported. An appeal of September 15, 1942, evoked the misery in which the women lived and the fear that, without the help of their husbands, they and their children would not survive the approaching winter.²

Transported by freight cars to Atachi near the Dniester River, the Jews of Bukovina entered Transnistria via the Moghilev crossing point. Once in Moghilev, they were again put on freight cars and transported to their destination. Shortly afterward, on July 6, another large convoy of Jews from Bukovina (mostly from Cernăuți) was transported to the Ladijin/Stone Quarry camp. After delousing, 600 Jews from the camp were moved to Oleanița where they were held in the stable of the village’s former collective farm. The facility, partly encircled by a fence and guarded, was completely inadequate for human habitation. Nevertheless, the deportees were forced to live there in primitive conditions, bartering their remaining possessions for food. On August 19, 1942, at the request of the German authorities across the Bug River, Tulcin’s prefect, Loghin, consented to handing over 522 Jews from the Oleanița camp for labor projects conducted by the Nazi construction company, Organisation Todt (OT). The principal project was likely the building of the Nemirov-Bratslav-Seminki-Gaysin segment of Highway IV (Durchgangsstrasse IV, DG-IV) that connected Lvov to Stalino in southern Ukraine. It is believed that the majority of those sent died because of maltreatment. Seventy-eight Jews remained in Oleanița for a few more months. Individual aid from relatives and friends in Romania was sent to the Jews held in Oleanița to help them survive, but because the news about the sudden transfer of most of the Jews to the German authorities had not yet reached those in Romania, many remittances were returned undelivered.³ It is not known where exactly the remaining Jews were eventually transferred, although it was probably to Cetvertinovca (in Trostineț raion) or Tulcin, but it is clear that the camp no longer existed at the beginning of 1943.⁴

The Red Army liberated the village of Oleanița in March 1944.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews in Oleanița can be found in the following publications: “Olianita,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 689; “Olianita,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007), 6: 139; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainского Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 243; “Oleanița,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kebilot: Romanyah: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-‘ad le-abar Sho’at Milbemet ha-‘olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 397; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 48; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary sources on the fate of the Jews held in the Oleanița camp are available at USHMMA, in collection DAOO (RG-31.004M). Information about the deportation of Jews from Bukovina in June 1942 can be found in AME (RG-25.006M). Although VHA does not have testimonies of Jewish survivors of the Oleanița camp, there are multiple testimonies in various languages from survivors of camps and ghettos that existed in close proximity to Oleanița (places such as Ladjiin, Cetvertinovca, and Trostineț).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Bukovina governor’s reports for the Military Cabinet for Bessarabia, Bukovina, and Transnistria in Bucharest regarding the deportations of Jews from Bukovina (according to counties): USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 150–217.

2. Letter of September 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 3, fond 2241, opis 1, delo 1490, p. 213 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/3/2241/1/1490, p. 213).

3. For example, see “Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară evacuați în Transnistria și aflați la Oleanița (Jud. Tulcin, Gara Ladajin),” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/9/2255/1/1189, p. 140, but for other remittances, see also in the same collection and reel, pp. 85, 89, 117, 124, 173, 184–188.

4. For example, the name of the camp does not appear in the March 1943 census of Jews in Transnistria; see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346.

OLGOPOL

The Olgopol commune, the seat of the Olgopol raion, Balta județ, in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Ol’hopil’, Ukraine), is located along the Savranka River. It is 30 kilometers (19 miles) north-northwest of Balta. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 660 Jews in Olgopol, representing more than 11 percent of the town’s residents. Jewish men of military age were drafted into the Red Army, although the advancing German Army reached some Jewish families retreating with the Soviet administration and sent them back. All others stayed in place.

The German and Romanian authorities occupied Olgopol in early August 1941. The remaining Jews were rounded up and shot soon thereafter. The Romanian civil administration took control of the area in September 1941 and romanianized its name as Olgopol (also spelled Oligopol in some documents). The prefect in the Balta județ was Colonel Vasile Nica. Locotenent-colonel Ștefan Gavăț was the commandant of the Balta Gendarmes Legion. The commandant of the Olgopol gendarmes sector was Locotenent Gheorghe Grigorescu, and the commandant of the Olgopol gendarmes post was Sublocotenent Oscar Depner. The Olgopol raion’s praetor was Ion Hațiegan. The military commandant of the Olgopol ghetto was Plutonier Constantin Ruxandra. Plutonier Mihail Dumitrescu and Sergeant major Macarie Sârbu from the Olgopol gendarmes post guarded the Olgopol ghetto.

Jews deported from Bessarabia and Bukovina in the summer and fall of 1941 arrived in Olgopol at some point during October of that year, after weeks of forced marches from camp to camp and repeated imprisonments in those transit camps. Ukrainian Jews deported from other parts of Transnistria arrived around that time as well. A ghetto was gradually set up on the outskirts of town in the former residences (destroyed and vandalized) of local Jews who were murdered or had fled;

a few Jews rented rooms in the homes of Ukrainian residents.¹ The ghetto was not encircled by barbed wire, but was guarded by the Romanian gendarmes from the Olgopol gendarmes post and a few Ukrainian auxiliaries.² The deportees lived in crowded and unsanitary conditions, bartering the last items of their belongings for small amounts of food. A market day was held each week where items could be bought or exchanged. The winter of 1941–1942 was extremely difficult to survive, with Jews dying from starvation, cold, exhaustion, and illness, especially typhus.³

The Jews in the Olgopol ghetto set up a number of institutions to help them better cope with the many challenges they faced. They first elected a Jewish mayor, Iți Fabricant, who was succeeded by Iancu Pecher. From early 1943 onward, there existed a larger organizational structure with more responsibilities in the Olgopol ghetto, namely the Jewish Committee (comitetul evreiesc). Its president was Alexandru Rado. The chief of the Jewish labor service was Rubin Alămaru, and Nicolae Stern was chief over the workshops.⁴ Thanks to the few surviving Jewish doctors among the deportees, a small hospital for Jews was created in 1942 in one of the empty buildings. Doctor I. Seibelman and pharmacist Baca Rivelis were in charge of the hospital. The ghetto hospital also had an outpatient clinic, but medications were extremely limited. Additional material support from the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER), started trickling in via the Balta ghetto (31 kilometers [19 miles] south of Olgopol) in late 1942 and throughout 1943. A CER delegation that visited Transnistria in January 1943 met with the mayor of the Olgopol ghetto in Balta on January 11, 1943. The delegation allocated a sum of money to set up a small soup kitchen for the elderly and the 50 orphans.⁵

On March 17, 1943, some 427 Romanian Jews accused of communist activity who had been interned in the Vapniarca camp in September 1942 were acquitted of the charges by a Romanian Interior Ministry commission reviewing their cases. They were consequently released from the camp, but had to settle in Transnistria, being denied permission to reenter Romania. For 100 of them, Olgopol was their new place of assigned residence. They were transported there by train, under military escort, in April 1943. Romanian Jews placed in the Olgopol ghetto from the Vapniarca camp, as well as Jews from the Dorohoi region, were later repatriated in December 1943 and January 1944.⁶ On May 5, 1943, the number of Jews in the Olgopol ghetto reached 761 (174 men, 355 women, and 232 children).⁷

The ghetto administration set up workshops (atelieri) in accordance with Ordinance No. 23. Skilled Jews found work as tailors, shoemakers, and mat weavers in these workshops and were able to earn small sums of money or food in exchange for their services. Other Jews worked as farmers in the raion's collective farms (kolkhozes).⁸ Jewish doctors sent from Romania in 1943 arrived in Olgopol and undertook forced labor in the ghetto's hospital.⁹ More than one-third of the ghetto's population, however, was unable to work, either because of lack of skill, age, or illness. These Jews had to be helped each day from the ghetto's limited resources.¹⁰ Adding to the general distress was the abuse of Romanian gendarmes, who regularly entered the ghetto searching for and confiscating food and demanding money or jewelry in exchange for granting certain privileges; for example, letting the Jews leave the ghetto on certain days to buy provisions.

Orphaned children were repatriated to Romania by train (via Tiraspol) at the end of February 1944.¹¹ On February 25, 1944, the ghetto had 754 Jews (234 men, 385 women, 135 children).¹² By the middle of March 1944, the ghetto was closed. The Romanian Jews were repatriated to Romania (mostly on foot, walking toward the Dniester River), while Ukrainian Jews dispersed or remained in place. The Jews imprisoned in the Olgopol prison were freed at that time and were not handed over to the retreating German forces that arrived in Olgopol at that time. The Red Army recaptured Olgopol at the end of March 1944. The following year, in April 1945, the Bucharest People's Court investigated the abuses committed by military and civilian leaders in Olgopol; it confiscated their private property and sentenced many of them to hard labor.¹³

SOURCES Further information about the fate of Jews imprisoned in the Olgopol ghetto can be found in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009); Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust, vol. 2 (New York: New York University Press, 2001); A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiï spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001); Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia, vol. 6 (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007); Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 49; Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries and vol. 2: Documents 1–558 (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 2 (parts 1 and 2) (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Ihiel Benditer, Vapniarca: Lagărele Vapniarca și Grosulovo, închisoarea Ribnița, ghetourile Olgopol, Savrani, Tridubi, Crivoi-Ozero și Tribati (Tel Aviv: Anais, 1995).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews imprisoned in the Olgopol ghetto can be found at USHMM, in collections

DAOO (RG-31.004M), OOVV (RG-63.130M), and SRI (25.004M). Rado Alexandru's memoir is available at USHMMA, RG-25.021M (FUCER), reel 15, file III-367. Testimonies from his companions can be found in the same collection, file III-370. Another memoir is by Geza Kornis, USHMMA, Acc. No. 2003.384. A published version of Kornis's testimony is Überlebt durch Solidarität: KZ Wapniarka, Ghetto Olgopol in Transnistrien, Arbeitslager in Rumänien: ein Zeitzeugenbericht, trans. Erhard R. Wiehn (Konstanz: Hartung-Gorre, 2004). Finally, a memoir by survivor Polina Gitterman (née Trostyanskaya) about the Olgopol ghetto is available at USHMMA, Acc. No. 1995.A.0611. VHA holds 87 survivor testimonies in three languages (Hebrew, Russian, and Ukrainian) from Jews imprisoned in the Olgopol ghetto.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For a name list of 866 Jews imprisoned in the Olgopol ghetto, prepared by the Claims Conference in Tel Aviv, Israel, see USHMM Resource Center, File no. RT-0424, http://masterwww.ushmm.org/online/hsv/source_view.php?SourceId=30143.

2. Report on the Olgopol ghetto, May 1943, USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 16, file 205, pp. 440–443.

3. See the inspection report by the Balta prefect, Vasile Nica, in December 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 695, p. 145 (and verso).

4. List of Jewish committees in the Balta județ, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, p. 72.

5. See official report following the visit to Transnistria in January 1943 of a Jewish commission led by Fred Șaraga, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, p. 136.

6. See governmental reports and correspondence announcing the release of Jews from the Vapniarka camp to three destinations in Transnistria—Olgopol, Savrani, and Tridubi, reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 442–445 (Docs. 230–232); a name list is available at RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 674, pp. 12–14 (and verso).

7. May 5, 1943, census following the inspection of delegates from the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, Military Cabinet, USHMMA, RG-25.002M, reel 16, file 205, p. 446.

8. The Olgopol raion had 44 collective farms and 12 villages, according to a report of the Balta agricultural service, USHMMA, RG-31.004M, reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, p. 19.

9. For their name, specialty, and place of origin, see a table listing medical personnel in the Olgopol ghetto, USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOVV), reel 2, M-39/32 (fond 2358, opis 1, delo 666), p. 12.

10. For a distribution of workers and those unable to work in the Olgopol ghetto, see USHMMA, RG-68.130M, reel 2, M-39/32 (fond 2358, opis 1, delo 666), pp. 50–51, 62, 73.

11. The names of the older orphans (ages 16 to 18) can be found in Ancel, Documents, 5: 545.

12. The statistical figure was provided by the ghetto mayor, USHMMA, RG-31.004M, reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 675, pp. 34–35; a slightly higher figure, 764 Jews, is provided in a different census from the same month, USHMMA, RG-63.130M, reel 2, M-39/27 (fond 2358, opis 1, delo 110), p. 90.

13. See court depositions of witnesses and the accused, USHMMA, RG-25.004M, reel 29, file 40013, vol. 3 (starting on p. 1 in pencil); and reel 30, file 40013, vol. 6.

ONEȘTII-NOI

Oneștii-Noi, a small town in the Lăpușna județ, in Bessarabia, in the eastern part of Romania (today: Onești, Hîncești raion, Moldova), is about 48 kilometers (30 miles) west-southwest of Chișinău.

In August or September 1941, Bessarabia's governor, General de Divizie Constantin Voiculescu, ordered that an internment camp be set up in Bessarabia for those suspected of harboring pro-Soviet or anti-Romanian sentiments.¹ It was to be a "camp for suspects," and indeed, the camp was known as "Oneștii-Noi camp for suspects" (Lăgărul de suspecți Oneștii-Noi). A dilapidated military base in Oneștii-Noi was repurposed as a site for this new camp. It contained a few primitive wooden barracks and was encircled by a barbed-wire fence. A few small houses were allocated for the gendarmes guarding the camp and the command headquarters. The camp was under the control of the government of Bessarabia and its military cabinet. Gendarmes from the Lăpușna Gendarmes Legion, commanded by Căpitan Dumitru Brotea, guarded the camp. Bessarabia's Inspectorate of Gendarmes, commanded by Colonel Teodor Meculescu, also exercised control over the camp and implemented the governor's orders.

Beginning in late 1941 and early 1942, after the first (and the largest) mass deportation of Jews from Bessarabia to Transnistria had ended, the Romanian authorities began sending small groups of Jews to the Oneștii-Noi camp. These Jews were from among the few hundred Jews from the Chișinău ghetto who had been able to postpone their deportation by bribing ghetto and/or city officials or by converting to Catholicism. Thus, in January 1942, some 57 Jews (male and female) were sent from the Chișinău ghetto to the Oneștii-Noi camp, and in March of the same year another 134 Jews were sent to the same camp.² It is very unlikely that these Jews were in the camp for more than a few months and certainly not after the second wave of deportations to Transnistria from Chișinău that occurred in June 1942.

In addition to Jews, members of outlawed religious minorities from Bessarabia were also interned in the Oneștii-Noi camp in the summer of 1942. Religious minorities banned by the Romanian state were pejoratively called "sects" (secte) and their followers "sectarians" (sectanți). Thus, in June 1942, two Christians, named Grușovan and Starciuc, were sent to the camp "for communist, Baptist, and anti-religious propaganda, being deemed to endanger public order and state security."³ Members of other forbidden religious minorities were interned in the camp; for example, Inochentists (millenarians deemed heretical by the Orthodox Church), Seventh-Day Adventists, and Jehovah's Witnesses. The charges also included the making of religious propaganda and the holding of religious meetings without a permit.

While in the Onești-Noi camp, the internees did forced labor as needed in the running of the camp. They also underwent an intense program of reeducation that sought to reconvert them to the Orthodox faith. The program was coordinated by the Chișinău Gendarmes Inspectorate in cooperation with the camp commandment and Orthodox clergy. “Sectarians” were forced to attend a series of cultural events with strong nationalistic and religious undertones organized especially for them. These events included musical shows and plays, as well as talks that celebrated patriotic ideas and the importance of adhering to the Orthodox faith. Some internees renounced their minority faith and were freed, but many did not, even after going through the camp’s “reeducation” program. For the latter, the camp commander proposed harsher terms of internment; for example, the doubling of their imprisonment term, the annulment of family visits, and finally, their incarceration in special camps outside Bessarabia (i.e., in Transnistria).⁴ At the end of 1942, there were 82 people held in the Onești-Noi camp because of their religious beliefs. Seventeen internees were released before the year’s end after signing a declaration of reconversion and abandoning their faith.⁵

By March 1943, the authorities in the regional gendarmes center, seeing no intention among the rest of the “sectarians” to abandon their faith even under a harsher regime, sought their deportation—or at least that of their leaders—to Transnistria. The majority of those interned were common believers, but interned among them were also the prominent Bessarabian Baptist leaders, Eugen Jurencu and Nicolae Clinovici.⁶ With the governor’s approval, the religious leaders (particularly the Baptist leaders) interned in the camp were deported to the Golta ghetto (Golta județ) in Transnistria in the spring of 1943.

A year later, in March 1944, members of the religious minorities who had been deported to Transnistria from the Onești-Noi camp were repatriated to Romania, along with the remaining Jews and Roma.⁷ While back in the country, the Romanian police continued to monitor their activities closely and forbade any public manifestation with a religious (“sectarian”) character. The Baptists and Seventh-Day Adventists, whose faith had been legal in Romania before 1941, regained their freedom only after August 23, 1944, when Romania switched sides in the war. The Inochentists and Jehovah’s Witnesses (along with other unrecognized groups) continued to be outlawed even after 1944. The camp was shut down in April 1944.

The persecution of Jews and non-Jews (religious minorities) in Bessarabia and their imprisonment in the Onești-Noi camp played a role in Voiculescu’s trial and condemnation. In May 1946 the People’s Tribunal in Bucharest handed him a life sentence in a hard-labor prison and the confiscation of his private property.⁸

SOURCES More information about the persecution of Christian religious minorities under the Antonescu regime can be found in Viorel Achim, ed., Political Regimului Antonescu Față de Cultele Neoprotestante. Documente (Bucharest: Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013); and Viorel Achim, “Situția ‘sectelor religioase’ în Provincia Bucovina. Un studiu al Inspectoratului Regional de Poliție Cernăuți în septembrie 1943,” ArchMol 6 (2014): 351–427. On the deportation of Jews from Bessarabia and the persecution of the country’s religious minorities, see also Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Primary sources attesting to the fate of those interned in the Onești-Noi camp are available at USHMMA, in collections ANR, fond IGJ (RG-25.010M), ANRM (RG-54.001M), and AMAN (RG-25.003M).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See Voiculescu’s instructions, USHMMA, RG-25.010M (ANR, fond IGJ), reel 9, file 132.
2. See name lists of Jews imprisoned in the Onești-Noi camp in January and March 1942, USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 7, fond 679.1, and reel 8, fond 679.1, respectively.
3. Achim, Politica Regimului Antonescu, pp. 493–494 (Doc. 214).
4. See the secret report of the Chișinău Inspectorate of Gendarmes to the government of Bessarabia, Military Cabinet, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 128, file 120, pp. 27–28 (see also p. 24 for the governor’s resolution).
5. See Bessarabian government note, early 1943, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 128, file 120, p. 111.
6. USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 128, file 120, pp. 16–17.
7. See police report on Eugen Jurencu in Achim, Politica Regimului Antonescu, pp. 876–877 (Doc. 500).
8. See “Actul de Acuzare,” USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 16, file 22539, vol. 12, pp. 434–442 (esp. pp. 434–436), 455–456, and in the same collection, reel 19, file 40011, vol. 2, pp. 129–130. Verdicts were based on the Minister of Justice, Law 312/April 24, 1945, concerning the sanctioning of those guilty of war crimes.

ORHEI

The seat of the Orhei județ and raion in Bessarabia in eastern Romania, the town of Orhei (today: in Moldova) is located 45 kilometers (27 miles) north of Chișinău and 97 kilometers (60 miles) northeast of Iași. Orhei’s Jewish population was 6,302 in 1930; in 1939 the number of Jews in the Orhei județ was 19,211, half of whom likely lived in the town of Orhei (although census data for the town are not available). During the Soviet occupation of Bessarabia (June 1940 to June 1941), some of Orhei’s wealthiest Jews (merchants, shop owners) were deported to Siberia because of their “capitalist” disposition.¹ Jewish men were mobilized in the Red Army in June 1941. Other Jews fled eastward, across the Dniester River, alongside the retreating Soviet authorities, reaching as far as Soviet Asia and Uzbekistan. German air bombardments of roads, bridges, and trains killed many of the refugees; others died of disease and hunger while fleeing the area.²

The German and Romanian armies took control of Orhei at the end of June 1941. The town, however, was not officially occupied until July 8. The commandant of the Orhei Gendarmes Legion was Maior Filip Bechi, aided by the first deputy commandant, Căpitan Iulian Adamovici, and the second deputy commandant, Locotenent Constantin Popoiu (the latter was the prefect of Orhei in 1938). Soon thereafter, Romanian and German troops stationed in the area carried out a murderous campaign aimed at “cleansing the territory” of ethnic and political “undesirables” behind the front lines. Many killings of Jews (including the elderly and young) occurred throughout the entire Orhei județ in July 1941, under the pretext of eliminating “dangerous elements.” Many non-Jewish villagers collaborated in those atrocities, serving as scouts and translators for the perpetrators.

In the town of Orhei alone, for example, the members of the Jewish committee that welcomed the arrival of German and Romanian authorities in town with a traditional platter of bread and salt were shot soon thereafter. Jews from the town were then searched and imprisoned in three places: 200 to 300 in a synagogue and a large private house, 600 in an industrial school, and 500 in the police courtyard. The Jews held in the synagogue and the house were massacred in Siliștea, a few kilometers south of Orhei, on July 21, 1941, by a firing squad of 36 gendarmes. That same evening, the Jews from the industrial school were escorted to Slobozia Doamnă, a suburb of Orhei, where 500 were shot by a firing squad composed of Romanian gendarmes and a platoon of German soldiers (the latter were returning from shooting 70 elderly Jews in the vicinity).³

Concomitant with these killing operations the Romanian authorities established a ghetto in Orhei for the remaining Jews and for those from the surrounding villages. The ghetto, sealed with large wooden gates at both sides, encompassed a few streets in the town’s eastern part. While in the ghetto, the Romanian authorities starved the Jews, forcing them to rely only on barter. Armed German and Romanian soldiers guarded the ghetto, and at night searchlights were used to prevent escapes. A few dozen Jews, unaware that the bridge over the Răut River was destroyed, attempted to flee the town and hide in the Orhei forest; Romanian gendarmes soon caught up with them and shot the entire group of men, women, and children. The killers confiscated their possessions and dumped the corpses in a hole in the nearby stone quarry.⁴ Meanwhile, the town’s authorities contracted local peasants with horse wagons to transport some of the Jews and their belongings to the closest crossing point into Transnistria, which was at Rezina, some 45 kilometers (28 miles) northeast of Orhei.

Deportations to Transnistria began in August 1941. Groups of Jews were moved out of the ghetto to a nearby soccer field, and from there they were loaded onto wagons that formed convoys. Soldiers from both the German and Romanian armies escorted the wagons and the people marching behind them to the crossing point. The forced marches lasted a few days, with the Jews under the constant threat of death, robbery, rape, and further deprivations; anyone caught leaving the convoy or remaining behind due to exhaustion or sickness was summarily shot.⁵ The local residents of Orhei looted Jewish homes after their owners were deported.⁶

A number of Jews remained in the ghetto for a few more months, however. They came from mixed marriages, or were Christian converts, or had bribed the authorities. They were divided into two groups for the purpose of forced labor: one group (58) consisted of people under age 15, and a second group (188) was between 16 and 60 years old.⁷ They were assigned to various branches of the local administration and public institutions, under the supervision of the Romanian authorities.⁸ In May 1942, all the remaining Jews in the Orhei ghetto were deported to camps in Transnistria via Tiraspol. In mockery, the departing Jews were led out of the city with music played by a Roma (Gypsy) band, while some elderly Jews were forced to dance.

While in Transnistria, most of the Jews deported from Orhei died of hunger, disease, or exposure or were shot en route to their assigned camps and ghettos. A few survived, however, and returned in March and April 1944, as the Red Army advanced through Transnistria. The Red Army reoccupied Orhei in April 1944. The People’s Tribunal in Bucharest tried and confined to many years of hard labor some of the Romanian authorities responsible for the massacres of Jews in Orhei and the Orhei județ, including Bechi and the gendarmes Ion Budica, Ion Rusca, and Petre Ivănescu.⁹

SOURCES Further information regarding the fate of the Jews from Orhei and of those imprisoned in the Orhei ghetto can be found in the following publications: “Orhei,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 943; “Orhei,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-‘ad le-abar Sho‘at Milbemet ha-‘olam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 2: 327–331; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 5 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Mariu Mircea, Pogromurile din Basarabia și Alte Câteva Întâmplări: Contribuții la Istoria Încercării de Exterminare a Evreilor (Bucharest: Glob, 1947).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews in the Orhei ghetto are available at USHMM, in collections ANRM (RG-54.001M), SRI (RG-25.004M), and AMAN (RG-25.003M). Under RG-50, USHMM also holds five oral history interviews by witnesses of the Orhei ghetto. VHA holds 22 testimonies (in five languages) from survivors of the Orhei ghetto or those deported from the Orhei județ. For an English-language memorial book commemorating the destruction of the Jews of Orhei, see Y. Spivak and Terry Lasky, eds., Orbeyev Alive and Destroyed: Memorial Book of the Jewish Community of Orhei, trans. by Marsha Kayser (New York: JewishGen, 2012).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #37518, Olga Breitman testimony, January 14, 1998; VHA #34290, Daniel Broitman testimony, July 15, 1997.
2. USHMMA, RG-50.572*0019, Pavel Cojocaru, oral history interview, August 15, 2004.
3. Court testimonies attesting to the crimes are available in AnceL, Documents, 6: 489–490.
4. USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 17, fond 22539, vol. 45; USHMMA, RG-50.572*0026, Gheorghe Stratan, oral history interview, September 23, 2006.
5. USHMMA, RG-50.572*0126, Dumitru Purici, oral history interview, December 20, 2008.
6. USHMMA, RG-50.572*0026, Gheorghe Stratan, oral history interview, September 23, 2006.
7. For their names, see USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 2, fond 666.2, file 165.
8. For a work distribution, see USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 2, fond 666.2, file 262.
9. See prosecution's depositions and court sentences in USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 16, file 22539, vol. 12, pp. 251–254, 434–459.

OSIEVCA

Osievca, a small village in the Berșad raion, Balta județ, in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Osiivka, Ukraine), is situated near the Bug River. It is located 45 kilometers (28 miles) north-northeast of Balta. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 4,545 Jews in the Berșad raion, 4,271 of whom lived in the city of Berșad. At the time of the attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, a handful of Jews remained scattered throughout the raion's villages (exact census data for Osievca are not available).

The German and Romanian armies overran Osievca at the end of July 1941. After a short German military occupation, the area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September. The village's name was romanianized from Osiivka to Osievca (sometimes spelled Osifca) and the name of the raion from Bershad to Berșad. The praetor in the Berșad raion was Constantin Alexandrescu.

Jews deported from Bukovina and northern Bessarabia were sent to Osievca in November 1941. Some arrived there after spending a short period of time in the city of Berșad, and others went directly to Osievca, but all were force-marched for weeks on end before reaching the small village. The Romanian authorities placed approximately 220 Jews inside an abandoned and dilapidated kolkhoz (state collective farm) in Osievca. A camp for Jews was thus created. The term sometimes used for it was a colony (colonie). A part of the kolkhoz was used as living quarters, and other parts continued to be used for animals. It is not clear whether the camp was fenced, but it was certainly guarded by Romanian gendarmes and Ukrainian auxiliaries. Fișel (Fishel) Raiber was the chief of the Osievca camp.¹

The inhumane and unhygienic living conditions in which the deportees lived during the bitterly cold winter of 1941, coupled with mass starvation and exhaustion, soon led to the outbreak of epidemics. Typhus and other diseases ravaged the camp, resulting in many victims in both the first and second year of the camp's existence. According to a statistic provided by the Soviet State Extraordinary State Commission (Chrezvychainaia Gosudarstvennaia Komissiiia, ChGK), 160 of the Jews held there perished of sickness and hunger.² Bodies were disposed of unceremoniously in nearby fields and forest. It was only gradually, by 1943, that living conditions improved a little, thanks in part to the assistance provided by the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER). CER had consolidated its assistance for the large Berșad ghetto, only 17 kilometers (11 miles) west of Osievca. Jews in the Osievca camp probably received a small portion of this aid. Still, many remained in great poverty.³

Partisan units became increasingly active in the area of Berșad in 1943; according to one anonymous witness, some non-Jewish locals from the Osievca village were shot by Romanian troops for allegedly assisting the partisans.⁴ It is well documented that many Jews and non-Jews in the area of Berșad were shot at the end of 1943 and the beginning of 1944 because they were helping the partisans.⁵

The Red Army recaptured Osievca in the first part of March 1944, liberating the Jews who were still in the camp at that time.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Osievca can be found in the following publications: I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 779; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evreistva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiĭ spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 245; Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007); and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tiurmi ta getto na okupovaniĭ teritorii Ukraini (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000), pp. 29–30; Jean AnceL, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean AnceL, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Osievca can be found at USHMMA, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M) and DAOO (RG-31.004M); the latter archival collection contains a contemporaneous map of the Berșad raion showing the exact location of Osievca in reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 691, p. 250. Yahad-in Unum conducted an interview with a Ukrainian witness, which is available at USHMMA as RG-50.589*0107. VHA holds 17 survivor testimonies in three languages (Russian, Yiddish, and Portuguese) from Jews held in the camp for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. List of Balta ghetto and camp leaders, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2241, opis 1, delo 1562, p. 72 (and verso).

2. USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1242, p. 48.

3. VHA #36829, Bela Korenman testimony, September 28, 1997; VHA #16825, Mikhail Gruzman testimony, June 26, 1996.

4. Anonymous interviewee No. 503, USHMMA, RG-50.589*0107 (Yahad-in Unum), July 22, 2007.

5. USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1242, p. 5.

OSMANCEA AND COBADIN

Osmancea, a small town in the Constanța județ, in south-eastern Romania, is 31 kilometers (19 miles) southwest of Constanța and 183 kilometers (114 miles) southeast of Bucharest. According to the December 1939 Romanian census, there were 1,804 Jews in the Constanța județ; in September 1941, the number reached 2,113; and by May 1942, the total census figure dropped to 1,539.¹

Constanța was Romania's largest Black Sea port city, and many German army offices were established in the city before and during the war. Shortly after the joint German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the Jews from the city of Constanța were rounded up without (or with little) warning and held in the city's police headquarters for two days. The order for their arrest was signed and enforced by General de brigadă Hugo Schwab, then commandant of the 19th Infantry Division in Constanța. Distrusting the Jews, Romanian authorities deported the city's Jewish population inland, to Cobadin. From the police station they Jews were marched to the train station where they left on freight trains. The date of their transfer to Cobadin is believed to be June 26 or 27, 1941, with the number of deportees reaching 1,750 to 2,000.² Meanwhile the German authorities expropriated the city's Ashkenazi and Sephardic synagogues and turned them into warehouses for storing food and army supplies.

The Cobadin camp was set up in some barracks that had belonged to the German Army. It was surrounded by a fence and guarded by armed Romanian gendarmes. While in the camp, Jewish men were forced to do menial work, digging a large hole in the ground "for depositing waste" and making trenches around the camp "to prevent escaping."³ A roll call took place three times a day. The camp authorities did not supply food to the internees; as was frequently the case, the local or regional Jewish community was asked to care for those in the camps. This was difficult to accomplish because, among the detainees, were the chief rabbi of Constanța, Joseph H. Schechter, and the president of the Constanța Jewish community, Avram Bercovici. Because the possibilities for paid work were limited in Cobadin, the police sought their relocation in areas where people could find work. The region of Slobozia in the Ialomița județ was suggested, but this transfer was never pursued.⁴ The Jews survived on barter and food bought by the Jewish camp leaders for the entire camp population.

By the middle of July 1941, all the Jews in the Cobadin camp were moved to the nearby village of Osmancea, and the camp was closed down. A selection took place as soon as the Jews arrived in the Osmancea camp: some Jews were sent to Mereni and others to Ciobănița, two villages near Osmancea. The region became known as the Osmancea internment area (Zona de Internare Osmancea), which had its headquarters in Osmancea. The commandant of the Osmancea camp was Sublocotenant Petre N. Ionescu, a lawyer by profession and, as it turned out, a generous man. In each of these three makeshift camps, the Jews were housed in huts or barracks, in poor, unhygienic living conditions, on the village's outskirts.⁵ Still, thanks to the commandant's benevolence, the internees were gradually able to improve their fate by being allowed to procure additional food, cooking facilities, and some medication.⁶

Able-bodied men and women did forced labor, cleaning and restoring roads and government buildings in the villages in which they were placed and in agriculture. The older adults, along with the elderly and the young, were released from the camps in the fall of 1941 and returned to Constanța, where they continued to live under close monitoring. Younger adults (including women) were enlisted in forced labor detachments that worked both inside and outside the Constanța județ. Some of those workers returned home in the spring of 1942 and remained eligible for periodic recruitment for forced labor over the next two years; others continued to undertake forced labor almost without stop until September 1944.

All of the forced labor camps and detachments for Jews were dissolved in September 1944, after Romania switched sides in the war on August 23, 1944.

SOURCES Further information about the imprisonment of the Jews of Constanța in Cobadin and the subsequent camps can be found in the following publications: "Constanta," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001); “Constanta,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivvasdam ve-ad le-abar Sho’at Milhemet ha-’alam ha-sheniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 232–234; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 1: Legionarii și Rebeliunea (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României. Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom published in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013); Florin Stan, “Evreii din Constanța,” Cumidava 29 (2007): 229–241; Florin Stan, “Sinopticum. Din trecutul celor de lângă noi. Incursiuni în istoria comunităților entice Dobroge,” RevTo 1: 454 (2008): 71–74; 2: 455 (2008): 68–70; 3: 456 (2008): 71–74; and Florin Stan, “Imaginea evreilor din Constanța în presa interbelică locală,” AUO 4 (2007): 105–114. For a brief history of Constanța synagogues, see http://anale-arhitectura.spiruharet.ro/PDF/1_2012/5PATRIMONIO%20EVREI%20CONSTANTA-2012-ENGL-final-final.pdf.

Primary sources documenting the camps in Osmancea, Cobadin, Mereni, and Ciobănița are available at USHMMA, in collections RG-25.021M (FUCER), RG-25.062 (ANR-Constanța), and RG-25.051 (FUCER). VHA holds two survivor testimonies from Cobadin and Osmancea camps.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For Romanian census figures, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, fond 2694, vol. 18.

2. The higher number is found in Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României, vol. 2, part I, p. 279.

3. Survivor testimony of Dan Vardi, available at www.worldwar2.ro/arr/?language=ro&article=181.

4. Regional police inspector’s request, July 17, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 14, file 2986, vol. 5991, n.p.

5. VHA #13708, Adrienne Rothschild testimony, April 19, 1996; VHA #31505, Sofia Lucaci testimony, July 30, 1997.

6. See survivor George Radu Bogdan’s homage to the camp commandant: www.observatorcultural.ro/De-ce-\(II\)*articleID_9365-articles_details.html*articleID_9365-articles_details.html). Other survivors’ testimonies commending the commandant appear in USHMMA, RG-25.021M (FUCER), reel 25, file III, p. 503.

OVIDIOPOL

The raion and county seat in the Ovidiopol județ (today: Ovidiopol, Ukraine), in the southwestern corner of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, Ovidiopol is 34 kilometers (21 miles) southwest of Odessa. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 429 Jews in the Ovidiopol raion, representing 1.3 percent of its entire population.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Ovidiopol on October 16, 1941. The prefect of Ovidiopol was Colonel Mihai Botez (succeeded by N. Canari), and the sub-prefect was Justin Zancu. Maior Gabriel Sireteanu was the commandant of the Ovidiopol Gendarmes Legion from 1941 to 1942, followed by Maior Anghel Dedulescu and Locotenent Marin Popa from 1943 to 1944. Dumitru Pascu was the chief of the labor bureau for Ovidiopol. The mayor in Ovidiopol was C. Damian, and the praetors in the Ovidiopol raion were M. Criste and Ștefan Stegaru.

A total of 150 Jews from the area who did not or could not flee to Odessa earlier were killed following the city’s capture in October 1941. The killing operation, conducted mostly by Romanian troops, was aimed at eliminating any remaining “undesirable elements” in the territory. The last 23 Jews of the Ovidiopol județ were deported deeper inside Transnistria, so that by April 1942 the entire județ was practically “cleansed of Jews.”¹ After its incorporation into Transnistria, Ovidiopol, together with Cetatea Albă, the city across the river in Bessarabia, became the southernmost entry point into Transnistria. Jews deported via Ovidiopol were typically resettled in areas north of the Odessa județ and in southern Golta.

Thus the city of Ovidiopol itself did not hold Jews, but at least seven forced labor camps for Jews and non-Jews existed in nearby villages.² Twenty Jews from the Moghilev ghetto were held from April to the end of June 1943 in a camp in Alexandrovca (today: Oleksandrivka), 18 kilometers (11 miles) from Ovidiopol. At the end of their assignment, they were sent to the Bogdanovca camp (Golta județ) instead of being returned to the Moghilev ghetto.

In October 1942, 267 Jews from Bucharest were deported because of their absence from or tardiness in reporting to forced labor duties. After arriving in Tiraspol, they passed through Ovidiopol on their way to the Sevchenko-Berezin farm (sovkhos) in Vigoda in the Belaevca (or Bilaevka) raion (today: Bilyavka), approximately 41 kilometers (25 miles) north of Ovidiopol.³ Agricultural gendarmes (jandarmi agricoli), under the command of Sergeant Fanache, conducted the Bucharest group to their destination in Ovidiopol and beyond. The Sevchenko-Berezin camp held 284 Jews at some point in a former villa that was only partly damaged by war. The commandant of the Ovidiopol Gendarmes Legion appointed Avram Creștinu, an informer for the state security services, as chief representative of the Bucharest Jews. A rudimentary medical office, headed up by 14-year-old “nurse” Sonyah Palți, was created in the camp, as was a makeshift shower where everyone washed and shaved their bodies in order to ward off epidemics. Work usually consisted of harvesting sunflowers. A young Jewish woman from the camp was sexually abused by the chief agricultural engineer, Gogleață, who controlled the farm. In November 1942, after completing their work assignment, the Jews were transferred to the Alexandrovca farm where they stayed a month tending to the vineyard of the Transnistrian governor, Gheorghe Alexianu. On December 26, 1942, they left Alexandrovca for Ochakov, then Bogdanovca, and finally Golta, where they arrived in March and stayed until November 1943.⁴

An additional contingent of 136 Jews was quartered in a second, separate camp in Belaevca, where they were deployed in forced labor in the electrical factory there. The Jews gathered peat to use as fuel for the boilers and transported it to the factory. When the assignment was completed, 26 Jews were redirected to the peat field near Tulcin, and the rest of the Jews were sent back to the Moghilev ghetto.

The Franzfeld raion's praetor, Gheorghe Lehrer, requested 10 skilled and 10 unskilled workers from the Moghilev ghetto in September 1943 for a building project. Large ethnic German (Volksdeutsche) communities populated the Franzfeld raion. The 20 Jews were returned to the Moghilev ghetto (or killed, the phrasing is unclear) on November 8, 1943.⁵

Jewish doctors from Romania served 30-day forced labor stints in various capacities in medical centers or as medical personnel attached to military and civilian units in Transnistria. Doctors Adolf Doifing (from Braila) and Lazar Roșianu (from Bucharest), both internal medicine physicians, completed their term in August 1943 in Ovidiopol. In the fall of 1943, three pharmacists—Isu Schlesinger, Mihail Safir (both from Bucharest), and Iulius Segal (from Iași)—took their place.⁶ Individual aid from family and friends in Romania was sent from late 1942 through 1943 via the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) and reached a few fortunate Jews held in the Alexandrovca and Belaevca camps.⁷

A temporary labor camp (lagăr de muncă), apparently for non-Jews, also existed in Ovidiopol. Inmates in the camp worked as skilled and unskilled construction workers for the new prefecture being erected in Ovidiopol's city center, under the direction of chief engineer Gorbov. Other such labor camps existed alongside many collective farms throughout the Ovidiopol raion. Forty Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) were held in the summer of 1943 in a camp in the Belaevca raion. Formally belonging to the camp for Soviet POWs (Lagărul de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici, LPRS), LPRS No. 5, Tiraspol, the POWs worked in road building and maintenance for Ovidiopol's Road Directorate (Direcția Drumurilor) and its Forestry Department (Ocolul Silvic).⁸

The Red Army liberated Ovidiopol in March 1944.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews in Ovidiopol can be found in the following publications: "Ovidiopol," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 957; "Ovidiopol," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2007), 6: 107; "Ovidiopol," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainского Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 237; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 53; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews, Soviet POWs, and others detained in forced labor camps around Ovidiopol are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004), DAMO (RG-31.008), and MAE (RG-25.006M). VHA holds five testimonies in three languages (Romanian, English, and Russian) from Jewish survivors held in camps in the Ovidiopol județ.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For the April 1942 census of Jews in Transnistria, see "Situație numerică de everii evacuați din Transnistria," USHMMA, RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 135, but see also pp. 139–140.

2. See reports on the situation of Jews in Ovidiopol for the government of Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 15, fond 2357, opis 1, delo 352, pp. 107, 141–142 (RG-31.004M, 15/2357/1/352, pp. 107, 141–142); and, in the same collection, the Ovidiopol raion's report, p. 205.

3. Ovidiopol Gendarme Legion's note to the prefecture, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/15/2357/1/352, p. 124.

4. VHA #18100, Sonyah Pați testimony, July 31, 1996.

5. Praetor Lehrer's note, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/15/2357/1/352, p. 206, but see also p. 120. For the other camps mentioned, see in the same collection, pp. 2–5, 27, 32, 35–36, 44, 53–54, 57, 64–66, 74, 107, 120, 131–150, 186, 204–206; and delo 35, pp. 11–13.

6. See tables with names, dates, and placements of Jewish doctors and pharmacists, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/5, pp. 280–281.

7. Receipts of remittances for Alexandrovca and Vigoda, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 519, pp. 162, 164, 180, 182, 184, 186, 188.

8. For official correspondence regarding Soviet POWs and other camp inmates, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M/15/2357/1/352, pp. 60–61, 76, 115, 152, 187.

OZARINȚI

Ozarinți, a village in the Iarișev raion in the Moghilev județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria

(today: Ozaryntsi, Ukraine), is situated along the Nemiya River, a tributary of the Dniester. It is located 11 kilometers (7 miles) north of Moghilev-Podolsk. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 581 Jews in the Iarișev raion, of whom 509 were in the town of Iarișev (data for Ozarinți are not available).

The German and Romanian armies overran Ozarinți and its surroundings during the early part of July 1941. During the short German military occupation, the village's Jews were severely mistreated and their homes robbed while they were crowded inside the village's synagogue; 79 Jews were killed on July 21, 23, and 25.¹ The area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Ozaryntsy to Ozarinți (occasionally spelled Ozarinet, Ozarenți, or Ozarineti) and the name of the raion from Yarișev to Iarișev. The praetor in the Iarișev raion was Gheorghe Oșanu.

A ghetto was created in Ozarinți either during the German occupation or shortly after the installation of the Romanian administration. Jews deported from Romania (Bukovina and northern Bessarabia) were brought to Ozarinți in October and November 1941. They were crowded inside the homes of local Jews, with multiple families sharing each room. They survived on barter, begging, the generosity of some non-Jewish villagers, and the little employment available with the village administration. Still, many perished in the ghetto in the winter months of 1941, their bodies left unburied and as prey to wild animals.²

According to the statistical records of the Health Service of the Moghilev Prefecture, there were 400 Jews deported from Romania to Ozarinți in October 1942.³ According to an estimate by Siegfried Jägendorf, president of the Jewish Council of Moghilev (Consiliul Evreiesc Moghilev, CEM), 50 percent of the deported Jews in the Moghilev județ and district perished during the winter of 1941 from cold, hunger, and typhus, chief among other fatal diseases.⁴

Among the leaders of the ghetto were Lupu Vicder and Aron Grisaru. They visited with the representatives of the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER), who held a regional conference in Moghilev in January 1943 to learn firsthand of the needs of the deported Jews in Transnistria. The total number of Jews in the Ozarinți ghetto at that time was 850 (300 local Jews; 550 from Săveni and Dărăbani in the Dorohoi district, Bukovina).⁵ By March 1943, the known number of deported Jews in Ozarinți was 448, likely not counting the Ukrainian Jews. On September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 87 Jews in the camp (40 from Bessarabia, 47 from Bukovina).⁶

Relief in the form of medicine, sent by CER, arrived for the Jews held in the Ozarinți ghetto in the fall of 1942 and through 1943. CER also facilitated the transfer of sums of money from undeported relatives or friends in Romania to their loved ones in Ozarinți.⁷ Even so, the suffering remained great among the deportees, because only a small fraction benefited from such help and then only rarely.

During 1942, small groups of Jews from the Ozarinți ghetto (especially those who happened to be in the Moghilev-Podolsk ghetto at the time of the roundups) were sent to the Pecioara camp; in June 1943, others were drafted for forced labor at the Trihati camp.⁸ The repatriation of the Jews from the Dorohoi județ and the Regat took place in December 1943; the orphaned Jewish children in Transnistria also returned at that time. Only a few Jews in Ozarinți were so repatriated. The Red Army recaptured the village in April 1944, liberating the ghetto. Some of the Jews were immediately drafted into the Red Army, but most deportees made their way back to Romania amid great challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Ozarinți can be found in the following publications: "Ozarinty," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 678; "Ozarinty," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), pp. 239–240; "Ozarinty," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2007), 6: 123; and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive," HM 2:8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Ozarinți can be found at USHMM, in collections DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and GARF (RG-22.002M). VHA holds 61 survivor testimonies in five languages (English, Russian, Ukrainian, Hebrew, and Yiddish) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time. For an Ozarinți ghetto survivor's memoir, see Boris Khandros, Mestechko, kotorogo net (Kiev: Alterpress, 2000).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. USHMM, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 4, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 2171, pp. 57–58.

2. February 8, 1942, entry, in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3:282.

3. USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.

4. Jägendorf memorandum, September 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, file 2699, vol. 22, pp. 257–289 (esp. p. 265).

5. See post-visit report, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, p. 131.

6. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345, and for the September 1943 census, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 457.

7. See CER money transfer receipt for Ozarița, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1564.

8. USHMMA, RG-50.226*008, Boris Naumovich Chandros testimony, August 8, 1994.

PECIOARA

A village in the Spikov raion, Tulcin județ (today: Pechera, Ukraine), in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, Pecioara (pre-1942, Pechora) is located near the western bank of the Bug River, 22 kilometers (14 miles) northwest of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,291 Jews in the Spikov raion. At most, 62 Jews lived in Pecioara.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Pecioara on July 23, 1941. The Jews of the village were placed in a ghetto in the town of Spicov on September 24, 1941. Later they were moved to the Rogozna ghetto, and the surviving remnant returned to Pecioara in September 1942. The village came under Romanian control in the fall of 1941, and its name was romanianized as Pecioara (in some documents spelled Peciara or Peciara) as part of the Tulcin județ. In succession, Colonels Ion Lazăr, Constantin Loghin, and Constantin Năsturaș were Tulcin's prefects. The Tulcin Gendarmes Legion commander was Căpitan Ion Fetacău. The commandant of the Pecioara gendarmes was Sergeant major Strătulat.

In September 1941, the Romanian authorities converted the summer estate of the aristocratic Potocki family at Pecioara, a former sanatorium for Red Army officers, into a “death camp” (lașărul morții) for Jews. Sergeant major Strătulat, who commanded the gendarmes, was put in charge of the camp as well. The camp's purpose was extermination through starvation. Except for the rear area facing the Bug, the camp was well fenced. Romanian and Ukrainian guards patrolled the fence, while German soldiers watched the camp's rear from across the river. Inside the camp were two large three-story residential buildings, a cellar, a family tomb, stables, a greenhouse, and large statues. Most of the buildings were damaged by war. The rooms lacked doors, the windows lacked glass, and prisoners slept on the ground or straw. The first floor of the larger building housed the camp's Jewish leaders and a makeshift soup kitchen. The noncontagious sick were on the second floor, and women lived on the third floor. The second building housed inmates with communicable diseases, especially typhus. Next to the two buildings was a garage repurposed as a morgue. Inside, bodies were piled up each day before being thrown in the mass grave outside the camp. In addition, there were a few stables and barracks where prisoners of both sexes and various ages were crammed together.¹ The camp held 400 to 500 people when it functioned as a sanatorium.

Two large transports of Jews are documented, in addition to smaller roundups of escapees and transfers from Bratslav, Trostineț, Rogozna, and other places. In the first wave of deportations, 3,005 Jews were marched from the Tulcin ghetto to the Pecioara camp in November/December 1941. The chief inspector of Transnistria's gendarmerie, General Mihail Iliescu, ordered the Moghilev ghetto's poorest 3,000 Jews to the Pecioara camp. The order acknowledged that those sent to Pecioara were doomed. Its implementation was delayed for months, and so the order was reissued in June 1942. Because the camp's horrible conditions were well known, Jews hid in basements, attics, and fields to avoid deportation, but were hunted by police dogs and loaded onto freight cars. Still, between September and November 1942, the 3,000 Jews (600 Ukrainian Jews and the rest from Bukovina, Bessarabia, and Moldavia) were transported from the Moghilev ghetto to the Pecioara camp.² After two or three days of travel by train without food or water, during which time the very sick died, groups of 400 to 500 Jews from Moghilev disembarked at Israilovca and marched the 14 kilometers (8.6 miles) to Pecioara under the beatings and curses of gendarmes.³

The conditions inside Pecioara were abysmal. A sign hanging on the camp's gate read “death camp.” There were no work assignments, and consequently, the prisoners did not receive food, water, or soap. Approaching the fence to barter goods with villagers for food was forbidden, but some did so anyway. In one incident, Ukrainian guard Smetansky murdered two inmates caught buying a bucket of cherries at the fence.⁴ A small water faucet at the bottom of a slope leading to the Bug could only be approached at night when the guards were not watching. Extreme hunger quickly reduced the prisoners to eating plant roots, twigs, leaves, human excrement, and even dead bodies. Romanian and Ukrainian guards raped Jewish young women, who in turn killed themselves. Such conditions fostered mental illness and suicide.

A Jewish Council was formed under the leadership of President Motel Zilberman-Lipcani, but its pleas for assistance came to nothing. In 1943, the doctors in the Pecioara camp were Huna Vijnievski and Bertha Vijnievski.⁵

Overcrowding, malnutrition, cold, and squalor resulted in as many as 30 to 40 deaths each day. Typhus, dysentery, tuberculosis, scabies, and organ failure were common. Corpses piled up in the morgue, especially when the ground was frozen and too hard to dig large ditches. The valuables remaining on the bodies, namely gold teeth, were immediately removed from the dead for use as barter and to prevent their falling into the gendarmes' hands. Samarenco, the head of the Ukrainian police, terrorized the Jews, beating and killing them for the slightest infraction.

Between 1941 and 1943, approximately 4,000 Jews perished in the Pecioara camp. Dozens more were shot trying to escape. Despite enhanced security patrols, some inmates succeeded in escaping and returning to Moghilev. Those recaptured were usually shot on the spot.⁶

Across the Bug, Nazi SS units recruited Jews from Pecioara on the pretext of their doing “labor.” Instead, those selected were taken to the German side and killed. On October 16, 1942, Hans Rucker, who commanded a camp across the Bug, demanded that all young Jewish girls aged 14 to 20 serve as nurses in German hospitals in the Vizhnitsa area. One hundred and fifty young women were transported to a forest between Bar and Vizhnitsa, where they were raped before being shot (one woman escaped). Similarly, on November 30, 1942, 500 Jews were shot on arrival on the German side. On May 10, 1943, another 600 Jews were transported to the other side of the Bug and shot. Finally, on August 3, 1943, another 100 Jews were handed over to the Germans, probably as forced laborers deployed on the Nicolaev Bridge.⁷

In February 1943, Căpitan Fetecău and Colonel Loghin visited Pecioara. Repulsed by the camp’s awful appearance, they refrained from entering any building. A few days later, Fetecău announced that the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) in Bucharest was permitted for the first time in 18 months to send assistance to the camp. Wood and financial support were delivered to set up a soup kitchen that served 1,600 prisoners daily.⁸ Fearing the spread of disease to soldiers, the authorities encouraged the creation of a clinic where the sick received food and purified water. The situation improved slightly as additional support arrived from CER. On March 15, 1943, the healthiest 220 men were recruited for labor on the state farm at Rahnei (today: Rakhny, 22 kilometers [13.6 miles] southwest of Pecioara), which enabled them to survive.

The number of Jews imprisoned in the camp varied significantly over time. There were 3,591 (Romanian and Ukrainian) Jews in April 1, 1942; 1,200 in March 1943; and 535 in November 1943.⁹ At the end of February 1944 there were 550 Jews in the camp, those from the Old Kingdom and the orphans having already been repatriated. By early March 1944 the number decreased further, as more inmates escaped and sought refuge in nearby villages. On March 17, 1944, the Red Army liberated the camp’s remaining 350 Jews.

SOURCES Additional information about the Pecioara camp can be found in the following sources: “Pechera,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossen, 2009), pp. 743–744; “Pecioara,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kebilot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivadam ve-‘ad le-ahar Sho’at Milhemet ha-‘olam ha-sheniya (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 488–490; “Pechera,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., The Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 977; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 47; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival and vol. 8: The Regat and Southern Transylvania, January–August 1944, Anti Jewish Legislation, Addenda (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Lya Benjamin, ed., Evreii din România între anii 1940–1944, 4 vols. (Bucharest: Hasefer, 1996); Fabius Ornstein, Suferințele deportaților în Transnistria (Bucharest: Asociația Foștilor Deportati în Transnistria, 1945); and Rebecca L. Goldberg, “Holocaust Sites in Ukraine: Pechora and the Politics of Memorialization,” HGS 18: 2 (2004): 205–233.

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews in the Pecioara camp are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004), and AME (RG-25.006M). The ChGK investigation of the Pecioara camp can be found at USHMMA in RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1271; and reel 4, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1341. USHMMA also holds a number of unpublished survivors’ accounts from Pecioara, such as Yeva Taran, “A memoir relating to Jews in Pechora,” n.d. (Acc. No. 1995.A.437), and oral history interviews, including Ester Yankelovna Bartik, August 13, 1994 (RG-50.226*0005). A Yiddish song on the Pecioara camp is available at NBUV in the Moisei Beregovskii archive of Jewish music. In collection 243BO6, YVA holds a photograph of the mass grave at Pecioara. For the photograph of a monument erected in memory of those who perished at Pecioara, see USHMMPA, WS #56477. VHA holds 505 testimonies in seven languages that refer to the Pecioara camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. “Pecioara,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 8: 443–444.
2. See Order 30320, June 4, 1942, signed jointly by Governor Alexianu and Inspector Iliescu, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 3, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1488, pp. 83–84 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/3/2242/1/1488, pp. 83–84).
3. VHA #651, Leah Kaufman testimony, January 18, 1995.
4. VHA #24165, Minna Varshavskay testimony, December 27, 1996.
5. See “Tabel nominal al medicilor evrei aflați în județul Tulchin,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1562, p. 218.
6. VHA #12907, Lea Klinghoffer Rechler testimony, March 11, 1996.
7. See a list of skilled workers available from Pecioara, “Tabel de evrei meseriași disponibili din jud. Tulcin,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/23, n.p.

8. For the government's approval, see a copy of Order No. 84714, November 28, 1942, reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 301.

9. For April 1, 1942, see "Situația numerică a evreilor aflați neevacuați din Transnistria, la data de 1 Aprilie 1942, pe lagăre și ghetouri cu specificarea: bărbați, femei și copii," USHMMA, RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 143 (USHMMA, RG-25.006M/10/33/21, p. 143); for March 1943, see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 347; for November 1943, see "Situație numerică de toți evreii ce se află în raza județului Tulcin precum și de toți lucrători și funcționari aflați la diferite instituții," USHMMA, RG-25.006M/11/33/21, p. 585.

PODUL ILOAIEI

Podul Iloaiei, a town in the Iași județ, in the northeastern part of the Romanian Regat (the Old Kingdom), is 26 kilometers (16 miles) west of the city of Iași. According to a Romanian census, there were about 1,550 Jews in Podul Iloaiei on April 1, 1941, representing approximately 37 percent of the town's population.¹

Following the pogrom against the Jewish residents of Iași that unfolded June 26–30, 1941, hundreds of mostly Jewish men and a handful of women of all ages were transported from the Iași Police Office (Chestura) to Podul Iloaiei. They were transported by train, in sealed freight cars, in extremely overcrowded conditions (80 to 150 people in a car). This was the second "death train" (trenurile morții) that transported Jews out of Iași, and it left in the morning of June 30, 1941, carrying 1,902 Jews. Although it did not travel a long distance (approximately 26 kilometers), the train moved very slowly. It also made frequent stops during which time the deportees could not open the car doors or windows to get fresh air because the doors were tightly shut and the windows were covered. Anyone trying to escape by squeezing between the floor planks was shot. Asphyxiation, exhaustion, and extreme thirst in the overheated cars killed the majority of the Jews before they reached Podul Iloaiei eight hours later: 1,114 perished that day and were buried in the local Jewish cemetery, and only 708 survived.

At first, the surviving Jews were placed in a local synagogue, but were then dispersed among the Jewish families of Podul Iloaiei. The newly arrived Jews were thus placed in the same part of town as the local Jews and shared their fate. This area was guarded by a handful of Romanian gendarmes belonging to the Podul Iloaiei gendarmes post.

An open ghetto was thus created in Podul Iloaiei. The authorities referred to it by the designation "camp" (lagăr) or "concentration camp" (tabără de concentrare), but it can be more accurately described as an open ghetto. How many people were included in the ghetto, in addition to the Jews from Iași, is hard to determine. If the local Jewish population and the group from Iași are added together, then it can be estimated that more than 2,200 Jews lived in the ghetto. A telegram to the Cabinet

Survivors wait outside the open railcar of the Iași death train after it reached Podul Iloaiei. The railcar is filled with the corpses of Jews who died along the way, June 1941.

USHMM WS #27455, COURTESY OF AMERICAN JEWISH JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE.

of the Romanian Interior Minister in Bucharest puts the number of Jews from Iași at 783, with the following breakdown: 693 men, 20 women, and 70 children.²

Living conditions inside the ghetto soon deteriorated, mainly due to overcrowding and limited access to food and work. A curfew was introduced for the evening and night hours, and leaving the ghetto area without a permit was severely punished. The Jews brought from Iași arrived with only what they were wearing when they were arrested or picked up from the streets. In addition, they were not permitted to receive parcels of food or clothing. Many of these Jews barged the prefect's office with written petitions asking that they be allowed to return to Iași under escort for a day or two to pick up a small amount of clothes (especially as the cold season was fast approaching) and other basic necessities; some were granted permission, but others were not. In these circumstances, it was not uncommon, as the commandant of the Iași Gendarmes Legion appreciated, for the internees to resort to unruly behavior or intentional disobedience in order to be arrested and sent back to Iași for trial. Their hope was that, while in police custody in Iași, their family would visit them and care for their needs.³

On October 27, 1941, 21 women and 5 children younger than 10 years old who were deported from Iași were released and returned. Soon thereafter, the remaining 757 Jews from Iași were released from the ghetto as well, but only gradually. The first groups left on November 10, 1941. The released Jews, however, were to be made available for forced labor for the needs of various local and regional enterprises and institutions, as stipulated by the orders of the Army General Staff (Marele Stat Major, MSM).⁴ By the end of that year, the ghetto in Podul Iloaiei ceased to exist. In April 1942, all the Jews of Podul Iloaiei were deported to Iași where they were housed in the city's synagogues and supported by the city's Jewish community.

In addition to the ghetto, a small room in the Junimea School (Școala Junimea) was repurposed and became a prison for 15 Jews who were held hostage to ensure the good behavior of the community; another 4 Jews were also held there on charges of being communists.⁵ The hostages were released after the dissolution of the ghetto in January or February 1942.

SOURCES Additional information about the Podul Iloaiei detention site can be found in the following publications: "Podul Iloaiei," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah, (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 197–200; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 2 (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Radu Ioanid, "The Holocaust in Romania: The Iași Pogrom of June 1941," Contemporary European History, 2/2 (1993): 119–148; Maris Mircu, Pogromul de la Iași (Bucharest: Glob, 1945); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 3 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary sources are available at USHMMA, in collections ANR, Iași Branch (RG-25.029M) and SRI (RG-25.004M). The VHA contains 10 testimonies (in six languages) from survivors of the Iași pogrom who were deported to Podul Iloaiei, as well as from other Jews who were deported from Podul Iloaiei to Iași.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For population figures, see the confidential letter of Colonel D. Căptaru, the prefect of Iași, to the Romanian Interior Ministry, April 1, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.029 (ANR, Iași Branch), reel 4, file 10, p. 155.

2. USHMMA, RG-25.029M (ANR, Iași Branch), reel 5, file 16, p. 21.

3. Secret letter from Maior Aristotel Alexandrescu, the Iași Gendarmes Legion commandant, to the Iași Prefecture, October 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.029M (ANR, Iași Branch), reel 5, file 16, p. 113.

4. Interior Ministry letter to the Iași Prefecture, November 10, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.029M (ANR, Iași Branch), reel 5, file 16, pp. 199, 277. See also information report, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 6, file 7635, p. 12.

5. Statistical report of the Siguranța Bureau, USHMMA, RG-25.029M (ANR, Iași Branch), reel 5, file 16, p. 27.

POPIVȚI

Popivți, a small town in the Copșaigorod raion in the Moghilev județ in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Popivtsi, Ukraine), is located 50 kilometers (31 miles) north of Moghilev-Podolsk. According to the 1939 Soviet census, of the 1,903 Jews living in the Copșaigorod raion, 850 lived in Popivți. Although some Jews retreated with the Soviet authorities after the invasion of June 1941 and fewer still were drafted into the Red Army, most stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Popivți in the second part of July 1941. After a short military occupation, during which time the Jews were mistreated, the Romanian civil administration took control of the town beginning in September 1941. The town's name was romanianized from Popovtsy to Popivți (also spelled Popiveț or Popovți in some documents). The praetor in the Copșaigorod raion was Ion Vodă.

A ghetto was established in Popivți probably in August or September 1941, initially for the local Jews. Additional groups of Jews deported from Bukovina (especially the Hotin, Dorohoi, and Cernăuți județe) and northern Bessarabia (Soroca județ) were brought to Popivți between October and late November 1941. The majority of these people entered Transnistria via the Atachi crossing point over the Dniester River and made a short stop in Moghilev-Podolsk before being marched farther northeast toward the Bug River. The deportees in the convoys were robbed of many of their possessions at the entry point into Transnistria, as well as en route to their deportation place, adding substantially to their misery. Once in Popivți, they were crowded into the houses of the local Jews, with 15 to 18 people to a room. Epidemics (especially typhus), hunger, cold, and exhaustion killed 790 Jews over the frigid winter of 1941.¹ Local police, made up of gendarmes and local auxiliaries, regularly robbed the deportees. Wearing the yellow star became obligatory.

The deportees took some steps to cope with this disastrous situation. There existed in the camp an underground group, led by a man named Kotsman, whose objective was to sabotage the activities of the local administration and assist the local partisans. An orphanage was set up to provide for the children whose parents had perished. The surviving Jews searched for work throughout the ghetto and, at great risk, beyond it; children went begging through the village. Barter was a key means of survival, as was the generosity of a few kind local non-Jews.² A small number of deported Jews were fortunate enough to still have surviving relatives or friends who were not deported and who sent them on occasion a small sum of money to purchase food from the local market.³

According to the statistical records of the Health Service of the Moghilev Prefecture, there were 905 Jews deported from Romania living in Popivți in October 1942.⁴ The Relief Commission of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews in Bucharest (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) visited Transnistria at the beginning of 1943, stopping on January 8 and 9 in Moghilev. The commission, led by Fred Șaraga, learned from the leaders of the Copaiğorod ghetto assembled in Moghilev at that time that 1,400 Jews (deported as well as local Jews) were held in the Popivți ghetto. The commission planned future shipments of goods to reach them.⁵ By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Popivți was 791, most likely not counting the Ukrainian Jews; on September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 829 (752 from Bessarabia, 77 from Bukovina).⁶ In February 1944, the number of Jews deported from Romania living in the entire Copaiğorod raion was 2,339; the majority lived in the Copaiğorod ghetto, although some were held in the Popivți ghetto.⁷

In the spring of 1943, small groups of skilled and unskilled Jews from the Popivți ghetto were taken for forced labor to the bridge-building construction site in Trihati (Trikhaty), in the southeastern part of Transnistria, and to the peat extraction site near Tulcin (Tulchyn); others were moved as and when they were needed during the rest of 1943.⁸ In both locations, the forced laborers endured even harsher conditions than in the ghetto.

Repatriations of deported Jews originally from the Dorohoi județ and the Regat took place in December 1943, with a few cases applying to the Popivți ghetto. The next to be repatriated were orphaned children up to age 18, with again a small number in Popivți. The Romanian administration retreated from Popivți at the beginning of March 1944, several weeks before the Red Army's recapture of the town at the end of that month. The Jews who remained in the ghetto were liberated at that time and began their difficult journey back to Romania.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Popivți can be found in the following publications: "Popovtsy," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 1015; "Popivți," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kebilot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 487; "Popovtsy," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 779; "Popovtsy," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij sprabochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 262; "Popovtsy," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2007), 6: 278; and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrai- nian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive," HM 2: 8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Popivți can be found at USHMMA, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). A list of Jews imprisoned in the Popivți ghetto can be found in the Chernivtsi Jewish Organization Affidavits, RG-31.020M, Microfiche 22, folder 5, vol. 540. VHA holds 70 survivor testimonies in six languages (Russian, Ukrainian, Hebrew, Yiddish, Spanish, and Portuguese) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Estimate derived from reports produced by the ChGK, April 1945, USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1239, p. 13.

2. For an example of a local giver of aid, see VHA #48078, Efrosin'ia Krivoruchko testimony, August 26, 1998.

3. USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 10, fond 2255, opis 1, delo 1180, p. 518.

4. USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.

5. For a visitor's report, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, p. 115.

6. For the March 1943 census, see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345, and for the September 1943 census, see "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 457.

7. See population figures according to nationalities in the raions of the Moghilev district, USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reel 13, fond 2383, delo 44, p. 5 (see also p. 6 for a population figures according to religious affiliation).

8. See a list of movements of Jews in Copaiğorod raion, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, opis 1, delo 6, p. 182.

RÂBNIȚA

Râbnița (pre-1941: Rybnitsa) is a town in the Râbnița județ (today: Rybnitsa raion, Moldova), on the southwestern border of central Transnistria, located near the eastern banks of the Dniester River, across from the smaller town of Rezina in Bessarabia. According to the 1939 Soviet census, 3,216 Jews lived in Râbnița, representing 28 percent of the town's population. Approximately 1,500 Jews remained in the town after the outbreak of war, the rest having left with the retreating Red Army.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Râbnița on August 5, 1941. A small number of Râbnița's Jews were killed by the occupation forces on arrival. Shortly after its occupation, control of the town was transferred to the Romanian civil administration, which romanianized its name as Râbnița. The commandant of the Râbnița Gendarmes Legion was Maior Ion D. Popescu. The chief of the Râbnița police bureau was Plutonier Neculae Mesariuc.

Râbnița was an entry point into Transnistria and a transit site for almost 25,000 Romanian Jews (24,570 according to a November 1942 gendarmerie report) who were deported across the Dniester River. After crossing the river, most deportees were marched toward camps and ghettos near the Bug River in the Tulcin județ (to places like Bobric and Crivoie Ozero) and the Golta județ.¹

In late August 1941, the Romanian authorities created a fenced-in ghetto around two or three modest streets in the city's Jewish district (around Shalom Aleichem Street). The ghetto's population quickly climbed to more than 3,000 Jews, half of whom had been deported from transit camps such as Mărculești and Vertujeni in Bessarabia. Living conditions and sanitation were deplorable. By late December 1941, more than half the prisoners had died from hunger, typhus, and cold, and only 1,467 were still alive. The ghetto area became smaller in 1942 because of building projects for the city organized by the local authorities. By November 1943, the ghetto numbered 87 houses with a total of 309 rooms. There also existed a soup kitchen within the ghetto for 250 to 300 of its neediest residents.

Life in the Râbnița ghetto was fraught with restrictions and dangers. The Jews were allowed to leave the ghetto twice a week, on Thursdays and Sundays, for one hour each day to visit the market and buy food. Those without cash bartered goods in exchange for foodstuffs; others with nothing left roamed the roads in search of beets fallen from trucks on their way to the sugar-beet factory near Râbnița. Leaving the ghetto without permission was risky, but many were forced to do so to search for food; others, who escaped from elsewhere, broke into the ghetto. Forty-eight Jews were shot on April 4, 1942, for leaving the ghetto without permission. Random shootings by gendarmes were a frequent occurrence. The frequency of shootings increased with the German (re-)occupation of the town in March 1944.

The Râbnița ghetto had a Jewish committee headed by Nahman Ghelfman. Haim Roizman directed the ghetto's Jewish labor committee. In January 1943, Roizman's assistants were Nachman Stuchman, Moise Ahtemberg, Mordeo Prodanajischi, and Moise Torgan. As of December 6, 1943, the following doctors were working in Râbnița: Friderich Herșcovici and Segal Mendel in the Râbnița hospital; Benjamin Schwartz in the Râbnița's praetor's medical office; and Lida Rusnac, Mendel Șut, and Mihail Șandor Mihail in the ghetto itself.²

The Jews in the ghetto undertook forced labor, cleaning streets and building the "Ion Antonescu" park in Râbnița. The ghetto also supplied forced laborers for the building of a new bridge over the Bug at Trihaty in the summer of 1943. Financial aid sent by family members or friends from Romania reached some of its intended recipients in the ghetto.³

The ghetto's population fluctuated from one year to the next. On April 1, 1942, it held 1,371 Jews (254 men, 548 women, and 569 children). At the beginning of 1943 a large group of Jews was transferred to the Balta ghetto to relieve Râbnița's overcrowded conditions at a time when it was already plagued by typhoid fever. In March 1943, there were approximately 600 Jews in the ghetto. The figure may not have included local Ukrainian Jews, or if it did, it reflected the population loss due to the Balta ghetto transfer. A subsequent census in September 1943 found 407 Romanian Jews among a total of 1,458 Jews.⁴

On October 14, 1943, the Wapniarca concentration camp (in Juguastu județ, north of Râbnița) was shut down. A group of 50 to 60 of the Jews from Wapniarca, condemned for what the Romanian authorities deemed "subversive activity," was transported by freight train to the Râbnița prison. The prison was located on the city's outskirts in what used to be the buildings of a former frontier army unit. The prison's commandant was Maior Delcea, and its chief guard was named Văluță. The prison held 200 prisoners, mostly Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) and former members of communist groups and kolkhoz (collective farm) leaders. On the evening of March 19, 1944, as the retreating German authorities took control of the prison, the prisoners were shot in their cells by a small Kalmyk unit belonging to Andrey Vlasov's army attached to a Waffen-SS division that was withdrawing. The prison was subsequently set on fire. Three or four Jews survived.⁵

From October 1943 to March 1944, Râbnița was the base for several groups of Jewish forced laborers from the 120 Balta Labor Battalion commanded by Colonel Pătrășcoiu. One such group looked after cow herds held in large animal sheds in Ghidirim, 6 kilometers (3.7 miles) south of Râbnița. Another group from the same labor battalion was assigned construction duties for the German Army. The laborers lived in cowsheds with the animals, slept on lice-infested hay, and were fed watery pea soup.⁶

The Red Army liberated Râbnița on March 30, 1944. During the war, some non-Jewish residents of Râbnița provided assistance to their Jewish friends or neighbors from the ghetto.

For their kindness, the following families were recognized as Righteous Among the Nations: the Chinkovskaya, Koblas, Lubinetskaya, Marncenko, Migilevski, Nikolayeva, Pozdnikova, Plugar, Stratulat, and Tontysh families.

SOURCES Additional information about the Râbnița ghetto can be found in the following sources: “Rybnitsa,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 882–883; “Rybnitsa,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007), 6: 397–398; “Rabnitsa,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds. Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasdam ve-ad le-abar Sho’at Milhemet ha-’alam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 509–511; “Rybnitsa,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., The Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 1108; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For the 1939 Soviet census, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 26. For the Righteous Among the Nations at Râbnița, see the Moldova chapters in Encyclopedia of the Righteous Among the Nations: Rescuers of Jews during the Holocaust, vol. 5 (Europe, part 2) and supplementary volumes 2000–2005, Israel Gutman et al., eds. (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 2010 and 2011) and db.yadvashem.org/righteous/familyList.html?placeTemp=Rybnitsa&results_by=family&placeFam=Rybnitsa&language=en.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews in Râbnița are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and AME (RG-25.006M). USHMMA, collection RG-54.003 (SISRM), microfiche 01, 06, and 44, contains the trial records of other prominent figures from the Râbnița ghetto. VHA holds 214 testimonies in seven languages about the Râbnița ghetto, prison, and forced labor detachments. Liza Lyuber’s memories of life in the ghetto appear in “The Greatest Value: Those Who Helped and Rescued,” in Svetlana Shklarov, ed., Voices of Resilience (Calgary: Jewish Family Service), pp. 41–48. For a description of the Râbnița prison massacre, see two accounts by former prisoner Matei Gall, Masa-crul (Bucharest: Editura de Stat pentru Literatură, 1956); and Eclipsa (Bucharest: Du Style, 1997). Also useful is a pro-communist publication from the Banat region containing a short article on the Râbnița prison: Comitetul regional din

Banat al Apărării Patriotice, eds., Apărarea Patriotică contra teroarei fasciste (Timișoara, 1945), esp. pp. 71–75 (a photograph with three victims of the prison massacre appears on p. 71).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Transnistrian Gendarmes Inspectorate report for Transnistria Government, November 9, 1942, but based on earlier reporting, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 161.

2. “Tabel cu medicii evrei aflați în Județul Râbnița,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 6, p. 166a (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/6, p. 166a); for Jewish labor heads, see governmental decision, “Decizia Nr. 385,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/18/2361/1/26, p. 62.

3. “Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Râbnița (Jud. Râbnița),” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/4/2242/1/1501, p. 146.

4. For the April 1, 1942, census, see “Situația numerică a evreilor aflați neevacuați din Transnistria, la data de 1 Aprilie 1942, pe lagăre și ghetouri cu specificarea: bărbați, femei și copii,” USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 143; for the March 1943 count (based on CER estimates), see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 348; for the September 1943 count (of the Transnistria Gendarmes service), see “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 442; “Tabloul cuprinzând ghetourile și situația numerică a evreilor aflați în raza Județului Râbnița la data de 1 Octombrie 1943,” September 30, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/22, n.p.

5. VHA #9632, Matei Gal testimony, February 14, 1996.

6. VHA #1162, Eugen Leonida testimony, February 28, 1995; VHA #20058, Salomon Marcu testimony, September 24, 1996.

REZINA

Rezina, a small town in the Rezina raion, Orhei județ (today: Rezina raion, Moldova), in the northeastern province of Bessarabia, is situated near the western bank of the Dniester River. The town is located about 83 kilometers (52 miles) north of Chișinău. According to the 1930 Romanian census, there were 2,889 Jews living in Rezina. In 1941 the Soviet authorities deported to Siberia some of Rezina’s Jews deemed hostile to the regime. After the attack on the Soviet Union in June 1941, some of the remaining Jews retreated with the Red Army or fled deeper inside the Soviet Union (where many of them were later captured).¹ Approximately half of the Jewish population remained in the town.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Rezina in mid-July 1941. Control over Rezina went to the Romanian authorities immediately after its capture. Bessarabia’s chief gendarmes inspector was Colonel Teodor Meculescu, and his deputy was Locotenent-colonel Lazăr Radu. Maior Filip Bichi was commandant of the Orhei Gendarmes Legion. During the deportation of Jews from Bessarabia to Transnistria, two improvised transit camps existed near Rezina in the villages of Mateuți and Ceneșeuți for one month's duration, due to their proximity to the Dniester. The two holding places, which held deportees from the Vertujeni transit camp and the Chișinău ghetto, were not fenced, but the sites were closely guarded.

An operation aimed at "cleansing" Bessarabia of "Judeo-Bolsheviks" was planned by General de corp de armată Constantin Z. Vasiliu, the inspector general of the gendarmerie, prior to the start of the war. According to Vasiliu's orders, rural Jews were to be shot on sight, "suspect" citizens arrested, and urban Jews ghettoized for further deportation, all in the interest of "national security." Acting on these orders, the gendarmes and local policemen proceeded in the second part of July 1941 to shoot Rezina's Jews on the streets and in their homes. After three days of rounding up Jews who were hiding or trying to escape town, the gendarmes and policemen shot 500 in the town's slaughterhouse and impaled some children with bayonets. They herded another 600 into the town's stables. Of them, 350 were shot, and the remaining 250 were allegedly burned in the limekiln and their remains scattered in the Dniester River. These murderous actions occurred before or concomitantly with Order No. 61 of July 24, 1941, issued by the governor of Bessarabia, General de divizie Constantin Voiculescu, which decreed the institution of camps and ghettos for Bessarabia's Jews. In total, 1,265 Jews were murdered in Rezina between 1941 and 1942.

In mid-August 1941, some 13,000 Jews from southern Bukovina and northern Bessarabia who had already been deported to Transnistria were returned by the German authorities to Bessarabia. They were marched to the Vertujeni camp near the Dniester in the Soroca județ where they were soon joined by more than 7,000 Jews from the smaller camps of Rublenița and Alexandru cel Bun (Soroca County). Their treatment by the Germans and Romanians was cruel. General de brigadă Ion Topor, the 3rd Romanian Army's great praetor, ordered the (re)deportation of Bessarabia's Jews to Transnistria in early September.

On September 12, 1941, the Vertujeni transit camp, which held 22,150 Jews at that point, was evacuated. On Colonel Meculescu's orders, half the deportees marched 90 kilometers (56 miles) south to Rezina. Meculescu instructed that columns of 1,600 Jews escorted by the Soroca Gendarmes Legion were to march a distance of 30 kilometers (approximately 19 miles) per day, so they would reach Rezina three days later. The first crossing over the Dniester at Rezina-Râbnița was scheduled for September 15, 1941. Gendarmes commanded by Locotenent Constantin Popoiu, deputy commandant of the Orhei Gendarmes Legion, were to meet the convoys one day before they reached Rezina and escort them across the river. The crossing was to be done quickly. Obtaining food for the duration of the journey was the deportees' responsibility, the authorities providing 50 carts to carry the very old and sick, as well as some of the luggage. Those dying along the way, or killed because they were unable to keep up, were to be buried in designated common graves dug in advance.²

Almost none of Meculescu's orders were implemented as given. Many of the Jews on the march were elderly or young mothers with small children. This situation slowed down travel despite the gendarmes' constant threats. Rainy days made the winding, dirt roads almost inaccessible by carts and difficult to travel on by foot. Resting places were in open fields or forests on the outskirts of villages or between villages; purchasing or bartering for food (or water) became difficult so many went hungry and thirsty for a long time. The gendarmes and cart conductors abused deportees and robbed them; at other times they allowed villagers to rob them in exchange for a bribe. On a few occasions when a robbery by a villager was reported, the thieves were not pursued. Exhausted and weakened, many Jews fell prey to illnesses of all kinds. The dying and the dead were left unburied wherever the convoy stopped; those shot because they were unable to keep up were pushed into small ditches along the side of the road. The Vertujeni camp's evacuation and the crossing operation lasted about a month.

In October 1941, half of the approximately 11,500 Jews ghettoized in Chișinău were also deported to Transnistria via Rezina. The Chișinău ghetto's evacuation was similar to that of the camp at Vertujeni: large groups left every other day, marched on foot to Rezina (also 90 kilometers [56 miles] away) escorted by gendarmes, rested on the outskirts of villages, and avoided the main roads. Just like the Jews from the Vertujeni camp, these Jews from the Chișinău ghetto were robbed and beaten by gendarmes and villagers, while young women were raped by guards. Those unable to keep up, usually the elderly, were shot. This evacuation, too, lasted about a month.³

During the deportation to Transnistria, a number of sites along the way from Vertujeni and Chișinău served as stopping places. The convoys rested in such places for a day or more, at which time more Jews were added to the convoy, guard forces were changed, and carts were repaired or replenished. At two such sites near Rezina, the convoys were held for slightly longer periods of time so as not to congest the crossing area. Gendarmes, young men enrolled in pre-military school, and local police patrolled the areas. The first improvised transit camp was 3 kilometers (1.8 miles) north of Rezina on the outskirts of Mateuți village. The Jews held here were under the supervision of Vitan Paun, chief of the gendarmes post, and Sergeant major Dumitru Gavrila, chief of the gendarmes section. The second transit camp was at the outskirts of Ceneșeuți village, three kilometers southwest of Rezina. Sergeant major Gavrila was in charge here too, assisted by Sergeant Grigore Maritz and Sergeant major Ion Neaga. Both places had been "cleansed" of Jews in July 1941. At Ceneșeuți, 27 Jews were shot on the village outskirts, and a 14-year-old Jewish girl handed over to the Mateuți gendarmes was raped and shot outside the village by the two soldiers escorting her. Convoys reaching Rezina from both directions were handed over to Locotenent Constantin

Popoiu and Sergeant major Traian Saftenco for the crossing to Transnistria at Râbnița.

On January 28, 1942, only nine Jews, deemed useful to the town's administration, remained in Rezina.⁴ Bessarabian orphans were repatriated from the Balta ghetto in Transnistria in the winter of 1943; some of those orphans had been deported via Rezina.⁵ In 1949, the Bucharest's People's Tribunal sentenced to hard labor the heads of the Rezina, Mateuți, and Ceneșeuți gendarmes posts.

SOURCES Additional information about Rezina can be found in the following sources: "Rezina," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 841; "Rezina," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2007), 6: 341–342; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival and vol. 6: War Crimes Trials (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, vol. 2 (parts 1 and 2) (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Paul A. Shapiro, The Kishinev Ghetto, 1941–1942: A Documentary History, with Chronology by Brewster Chamberlin and Radu Ioanid (Tuscaloosa: University of Alabama Press in association with USHMM, 2015).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Rezina's Jews and those interned there are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), AMANR (RG-25.003M), and ANRM (RG-54.001M). Twenty VHA testimonies in French, Hebrew, Russian, and Spanish offer additional information about Rezina and are available at USHMMA.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #27785, Ivan Barbul testimony, February 4, 1997.

2. "Instrucțiunile relative la evacuarea evreilor din lagărul Vertujeni-Soroca," USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMANR), reel 126, file 29, pp. 94–95, reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 85–87 (a map showing the routes the deportees were to follow on their way to Rezina is on p. 87).

3. "Raport de anchetă al comisiunei instituită conform ordinului domnului Mareșal Ion Antonescu, Conducătorul Statului, pentru cercetarea neregulelor de la ghetto-ul Chișinău," USHMMA, RG-54.001 (ANRM), reel 1, fond 706, opis 1, delo 69, pp. 1–46, augmented by a second and shorter report, pp. 48–55.

4. "Tabel nominal de evreii ce se gasesc in Tg. Rezina," USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 13, fond 680, opis 1, delo 4476, p. 171.

5. "Tabel nominal de copii orfani de ambii parinti de la 1–15 ani plecati in Romania," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 674, p. 43.

SĂDĂGURA

Sădăgura, a town in the Cernăuți județ (today: Sadhora, Ukraine), in Bukovina, in the northeastern part of Romania, is 7 kilometers (4 miles) northeast of Cernăuți. In 1930, Sădăgura's Jewish population was 1,459. The Soviet authorities deported many Jewish tradesmen and former business owners to Siberia prior to their retreat from Sădăgura in June 1941. At that time, some Jews retreated with the Red Army, whereas military-aged Jewish men were drafted into the Red Army. Approximately 654 Jews remained in place in Sădăgura.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Cernăuți and its surroundings on July 5, 1941. A few days later, a squad of Romanian soldiers entered Sădăgura, encouraging the locals to mistreat the Jews for 24 hours. Forming a leadership group called the "national guard," a group of locals, headed by Vladimir Rusu, took over the town hall and immediately began a pogrom against the Jewish population. Armed with guns, they searched for Jews, some of whom were their neighbors, and rounded up 72 people, depositing them at the town hall in the nearby village of Jucica Nouă. At midnight the Jews were led to some trenches outside the village and shot. Among the victims were elderly people and children; a few were only wounded and survived the ordeal. The following day, all of Sădăgura's Jews were rounded up and detained at the town hall for a few days, during which time a committee searched for "communist Jews" among them. Those found to have been involved with the Communist Party during the Soviet occupation of Bukovina (June 1940 to June 1941) were imprisoned in a camp erected at or near the town hall; the rest returned to their homes, which had meanwhile been broken into and looted by their neighbors.

While still in Sădăgura, the remaining Jews undertook forced labor and were stigmatized. Jewish men and women were routinely ordered to do forced labor (without pay) by the town's public institutions and private citizens. The renowned rabbi of Sădăgura, Mr. Landau, along with his Hasidic followers, was forced (apparently by Mayor Bartoi) to clean the town's streets wearing dress clothes on the Sabbath. A group of armed civilians guarded them as they worked. Soon thereafter, in early August 1941, the remaining Jews of the town of Sădăgura and those from nearby villages were congregated in a school yard and, taking with them only what they could carry, were force-marched in the direction of the Dniester River toward Transnistria.¹ Around the same time, small groups of Jews who had fled with the retreating Red Army were overtaken by the rapidly advancing German and Romanian armies before they could reach safety. They were forced back and held in a camp in Sădăgura for a short while, before also being marched to Transnistria. Forced marches typically lasted four to five weeks, or longer, before the deportees, reaching transit camps such as Edineți, Vertujeni, and Atachi, crossed into Transnistria and continued walking for a few more weeks toward their destination. While in transit, the Jews were brutalized, molested, and repeatedly despoiled of their possessions by military authorities as well as by the civilian population.²

A penal camp (lagăr de detinuți) existed in Sădăgura on the grounds of the 12th Artillery Regiment. The camp commandant was Locotenent D. Burghilea. The camp had a number of barracks and was surrounded by barbed wire. Beds inside the barracks were multitiered to hold three times more people than the normal capacity. Some 1,500 Jews were held there from August to October 1941, many having been brought there from Cernăuți police prisons or holding centers. The prison population was organized into platoons and companies, with their own respective leaders. The inmates had to procure food for themselves, because the camp administration did not issue rations. Endless roll calls, beatings, and hard labor (street cleaning, road repairing, and camp maintenance) made camp life difficult. By rotation, a number of prisoners were required to remove waste from camp lavatories using buckets, dishes, and cups, and even their bare hands, and transport it to a dumping ground outside the city. On October 15, 1941, the entire camp population was escorted by gendarmes to Cernăuți.³ At night, they were loaded onto a freight train and transported to Bălți (in Bessarabia), where, after a short rest period, they were taken by train to Mărculești and placed in a camp there. At Mărculești, they stayed for a few days in dirty and damaged houses, surrounded by barbed wire. Brought before representatives of various committees, they were searched and required to exchange money; jewels and other precious metals were bought for uncompetitive prices, if not confiscated. A convoy was formed and prisoners had to walk 30 kilometers (19 miles) to Cosăuți on the Dniester River; they crossed the river at night over a pontoon bridge toward Iampol in Transnistria.⁴

Jews and non-Jews were interned in the Sădăgura camp for various infractions. For example, between November 1941 and May 1942, hundreds of Jews (men and women) from all over Bukovina were interned at Sădăgura for failing to wear a yellow star. Internment usually lasted 10 or more days.⁵

On June 1, 1942, there were 45 Jews (men and women) in the Sădăgura camp, most of whom had been recently transferred there from the Videle internment camp, in the Vlasca județ (today: Teleorman județ, 49 kilometers [30 miles] southwest of Bucharest), where they had been held since June 1941. A few other Jews were interned there because they were suspected of communist activity, whereas still others were there because they had been caught gathering food supplies for the Jews deported to Transnistria the previous year. The Police Bureau in Cernăuți reviewed the files of the entire group and determined that there were “good grounds” for suspecting them of illicit activity, and thus they were eligible for deportation.⁶ On June 5, 1942, 76 “undesirable” Jews from Bukovina province were interned in the Sădăgura camp for two days, as they awaited deportation to Transnistria alongside the 1,705 Jews from Cernăuți; they all left on June 8.⁷ The camp continued to hold other detainees until late June or early July 1942, when it moved to the town of Edineți with a contingent of 264 prisoners.⁸ The Romanian Army then repurposed the camp for its own uses.

The Red Army recaptured the area in April 1944. In May 1944, Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) and Hungarian and Czechoslovak Jews were held on the outskirts of Sădăgura, most likely in the former camp. Some of the Jewish POWs escaped into Cernăuți looking for work, whereas others were enlisted into the Red Army and Czechoslovak armies and sent to the front in Hungary and beyond.⁹ In 1945, the People’s Tribunal in Bucharest sentenced Bukovina’s governor and other military authorities to many years of hard labor and confiscation of private property for crimes committed against the town’s Jewish population.¹⁰

SOURCES Further information regarding the fate of Sădăgura’s Jews can be found in the following publications: “Sadagura,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 1117–1118; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 279; “Sadgora,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2007), 6: 407–408; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3a: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Bucovina și Doroboi (Bucharest: Glob, 1945), particularly pp. 61–65 dealing exclusively with the town of Sădăgura; and Boris Nidergofer, The Path of Death, trans. Aliza Brayer (Tel Aviv: B. Nidergofer, 2009).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews interned in the Sădăgura camp are available at USHMM, in collections DACkO (RG-31.006M), SRI (RG-25.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and FUCER (RG-25.021M). Relevant information in Soviet sources can be found in ChGK (RG-22.002, reel 15, fond 7021, opis 79, delo 69, and delo 79). VHA holds 30 survivor testimonies, in several languages, about the fate of Sădăgura’s Jews as well as the fate of Jews held in the Sădăgura camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See a list of Jews from this camp hospitalized in the Jewish Hospital in Cernăuți, USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 22, fond 38, opis 6, delo 73, pp. 1, 3–4. The ill Jews were from the “Rosa camp,” most likely the name of the school where they were held in Sădăgura.

2. VHA #33158, Michael Surkis testimony, August 17, 1997.

3. See Sădăgura camp registry, October 14, 1941, entries no. 436 and no. 442, USHMMA, RG-25.021M (FUCER), reel 100, file III-1075, n.p.

4. VHA #41577, Herbert Gropper testimony, March 17, 1998.

5. See a table listing their names, place of origin, and dates of internment and removal from the camp, USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 2, fond 307, opis 3, delo 75, pp. 369–371 (and verso).

6. See correspondence and annexed tables, USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 3, fond 307, opis 3, delo 14, pp. 210–213 (and verso). A handwritten insertion in the typed text indicates the opposite—that there were “not” sufficient grounds to suspect the listed Jews of any illegal activity.

7. Bukovina’s governor General de divizie Corneliu Calotescu’s report to the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, June 12, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 196–198, 205.

8. See correspondence regarding the moving of the Sădăgura camp to Edineți, USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 10, fond 307, opis 1, delo 2246, pp. 1–40.

9. VHA #25734, Jacob Lefkowitz testimony, February 4, 1997; VHA #18062, Carl Berger Lieber testimony, August 6, 1996.

10. See survivors and witness depositions against, for example, Vladimir Rusu, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 15, fond 1241, vol. 1, pp. 136–145, and vol. 2, pp. 1–8.

ȘARGOROD

A small town and a raion center in the Moghilev județ in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, Șargorod (pre-1941: Sharhorod; today: Sharhorod, Ukraine) is located 39 kilometers (24 miles) northeast of Moghilev-Podolsk. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,664 Jews in Șargorod, representing 74 percent of the town’s population. A general mobilization took place at the outbreak of the war against the Soviet Union in June 1941. Military-aged Jewish men were drafted into the Red Army, and others fled deeper inside the Soviet Union, but more than half of the Jewish population remained in the town.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Șargorod on July 22, 1941. Authority over the town was transferred to the Romanian civil administration in September 1941, and its name was romanianized as Șargorod. The prefects in the Moghilev județ were Constantin Dimitriu, Constantin Năsturaș, and Constantin Loghin, all army colonels. The deputy prefect, who later became the second praetor in Șargorod, was Iosif Dindelegan. Dimitrie (or Dumitru) Rusu was the first praetor. The commandants of the Moghilev Gendarmes Legion were Aurel Dănulescu, Gheorghe Botoroagă, and Romeo Orășeanu, all army majors. Plutonier Barbu (Ilie) Ciortuz and Sergeant major Florian were the chiefs of the Șargorod gendarmes post.

Convoys of Jews deported from Bessarabia started arriving in Șargorod in early September 1941. In October 1941, additional convoys arrived from southern Bukovina (Suceava, Câmpulung, and Gura-Humorului). The convoys entered Transnistria via the Atachi crossing point to Moghilev-Podolsk. Just before crossing the Dniester River or after arriving on the other side, some Jews were robbed of their possessions. After a short stay in Moghilev-Podolsk, the convoys were sent on to Șargorod. Thanks to bribes offered to Romanian officials in Moghilev-Podolsk, the deportees were able to rent German trucks and carts to carry their smuggled luggage to Șargorod. People followed on foot, walking for three days.

The Ukrainian Jewish community from Șargorod, which numbered approximately 1,100, offered hospitality to the arriving deportees. They first took in 700 Jews from Bessarabia in August 1941, then another 1,200 from Bukovina in October 1941, and an additional 900 Jews from Dorohoi (Bukovina) in mid-November 1941. Smaller groups fleeing from other detention sites, or those unable to march farther because of inclement weather, also arrived and remained in Șargorod. At the end of December 1941, approximately 7,000 Jews lived in town, in 337 houses with a total of 842 rooms; all public buildings (synagogues, schools) that were not completely destroyed were also occupied.

An open ghetto was formed at the end of 1941 in Șargorod’s former Jewish quarters. Its limits were clearly demarcated through verbal instructions. Going beyond the stated boundaries without permission was punishable by shooting; seven Jews who were found roaming outside ghetto limits were indeed shot.¹ Wearing the yellow star was mandatory. Major epidemics erupted due to overcrowding, frigid temperatures, extreme hunger, and poor sanitation. At their peak in the winter of 1941, hundreds of people died every day of typhus, typhoid fever, and dysentery. In the beginning delousing facilities did not exist. Bodies were collected each day on a sleigh and left on the frozen ground; they were interred in the local Jewish cemetery in the spring of 1942.² Twelve Jewish doctors succumbed to typhus.³

Twenty-five leaders in the ghetto formed a council to respond to the tragedy. Another executive committee of five members, led by Dr. Meir Teich, a lawyer from Suceava, was set up as well. In the course of time, the councils expanded the canteen for the poor and established a bakery; set up general and contagious disease hospitals; established a pharmacy; and improvised a delousing station. Teams of nurses and doctors visited the sick in their homes and inspected houses daily.⁴ These measures eventually brought the epidemics under control, but not before 1,500 deportees died. Other improvements in the ghetto were the restoration of a power station, a waterworks, and a steam bath. Drinking water was secured from old wells that were freshly cleaned, fenced in, and guarded to ensure that only clean buckets were used to draw water. A system for collecting sewage in closed barrels was put into effect and public toilets were built. A soap factory was also built in 1942.

The Șargorod Jewish police force rigorously enforced discipline in the ghetto. This force was created to replace the Ukrainian police and the Romanian gendarmes who terrorized the population. Groups of laborers were recruited from the ghetto to undertake forced labor. Some worked inside the ghetto cleaning streets, offices, and public institutions; others were taken to work on nearby collective farms (kolkhozes), whereas still others performed road-building duties on sites away from the ghetto. In 1943, a few dozen workers were sent to dig peat in Tulcin and to build the bridge over the Bug River in Trihati, Oceacov județ. This work was very hard and dangerous, and a few of the forced laborers fell ill and died or were shot for allegedly trying to escape. Jewish workshops (ateliere) for tailoring, smithing, and shoemaking were set up in the ghetto.⁵ Government instructions regulating Jewish life in Transnistria (Ordinance No. 23) prescribed that workers were to be paid German-issued scrip that circulated only in Transnistria (Reichskreditkassenschein, RKKS) at the rate of 2 RKKS per day for skilled labor and 1 RKKS per day for unskilled work, but this rarely happened. In most cases, remuneration came in the form of goods or food coupons. Occasionally Romanian authorities paid Jewish councils in produce (barley or cabbage), and on rare occasions money.

Religious life in the ghetto took place in the reopened synagogue. On the eve of Yom Kippur in 1942 prayers were said for the victims of the epidemics. Life-cycle ceremonies for weddings, Bar Mitzvah, and Brit Mila (ritual circumcisions) also occurred there. A market inside the ghetto permitted villagers to bring produce and to sell or exchange their goods for articles of clothing. The Jewish community also sold ghetto-manufactured goods like soap and received aid from the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER). With the proceeds from such sales and the donations, the Jewish committee in Șargorod enlarged and modernized the orphanage that was established in 1942. The expanded orphanage housed about 200 children who received full care, medical attention, and education. Individual aid sent from Romania arrived in the ghetto from July 1942 onward.⁶ According to a census of the ghetto population, there were 3,085 Jews (not counting Ukrainian Jews who at the time numbered 1,800); in September 1943, there were 2,971 Jews deported from Romania (240 from Bessarabia, 2,731 from Bukovina).⁷

A partisan formation near Șargorod became active in the spring of 1943. In addition, a few ghetto inmates were partisans. When wounded, partisans turned to the ghetto for assistance in the form of treatment and medication. The ghetto also sent food to partisans hiding in the nearby forests. Romanian authorities suspected ghetto leaders of helping the partisans, but were unable to prove it. In December 1943, a commission from the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), led by Charles Kolb, visited the ghetto and spoke with its leaders. Repatriations of orphans and deportees originally from the Dorohoi județ took place in successive waves from December 1943 to March 1944.

The Red Army liberated Șargorod on March 20, 1944. A few days later, the Soviet authorities robbed the ghetto of medicine and money and conscripted healthy men of military age into the Red Army or forced labor units. In 1945, Praetor Dindelegan, along with other gendarmes officers, was tried and sentenced to prison.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Șargorod can be found in the following publications: “Șargorod,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 1084–1085; “Șargorod,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1168–1169; “Șargorod,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij sprabochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 346; “Șargorod,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 382–383; “Șargorod,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-’ad le-abar Sho’at Milhemet ha-’olam ha-sheniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 511–516; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 49; Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vols. 1–3 (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For an account of religious life in the Șargorod ghetto, see Iacov Geller, Rezistența Spirituală a Evreilor Români în Timpul Holocaustului (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2004), p. 356. A memorial book documenting the fate of Jews from Câmpulung in southern Bukovina deported to Șargorod is Veronica Bărlădeanu, ed., Viața și Martiriul Evreilor din Câmpulung-Bucovina, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Lucrare Colectivă, 1990). For the activity of the ICRC in Romania, see Andrei Șiperco, Crucea Roșie Internațională și România, 1939–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 1997).

Primary sources about the fate of Jews in the Șargorod ghetto are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), SRI (RG-25.004M), ANR (RG-25.002M), and AME (RG-25.006M). Ion Stănculescu’s report regarding the state of the Jews living in ghettos in Transnistria is available at USHMM, RG-25.006M

(AME), reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 147–151. Fred Șaraga's report of CER relief commission that met with Șargorod ghetto leaders in January 1943 is available in RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, pp. 106–156. CER's records are found in USHMMA, RG-25.016M (ANR, fond CER). For partisan activity around Șargorod, see USHMMA, RG-68.112M (BLH), reel 100, file 11389; the same collection, reel 182, file 5520, contains a testimony about Șargorod ghetto. VHA holds 405 video testimonies, in 12 languages, from Holocaust survivors who passed through or remained in the Șargorod ghetto. An important published testimony on the Șargorod ghetto is the memoir of the former ghetto leader, Dr. Meir Teich, "The Jewish Self-Administration in Ghetto Șargorod (Transnistria)," YVS 2 (1958): 219–254.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #49978, Sarina Feyer-Ionescu testimony, July 18, 1999. For a more detailed account, see Meir Teich's memoir partially reprinted in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 337–339.

2. VHA #50017, Siegfried Blaustein testimony, June 7, 1999; VHA #49964, Chaje-Sara Lucescu testimony, June 8, 1999.

3. Their names are listed in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 350.

4. Information note of the Moghilev județ medical service, October 17, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.

5. "Lista meseriașilor evrei întrebuințați în ateliere," USHMMA, RG-31.011 (DAVINO), reel 20, p. 48.

6. Remittances, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 5, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1504, p. 115; see reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1564, p. 111; and reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1567, p. 484.

7. For the March 1943 census, see "Tabloul numeric al Evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345; for the September 1943 count, see "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 441.

SAVRANI

Savrani (pre-1941: Savran), a township in the Savrani raion, Balta județ, in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Savran', Ukraine), is located a short distance from the Bug River. It is 41 kilometers (25 miles) northeast of Balta. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,101 Jews (representing 21.2 percent of the total township's population) in Savrani and 1,227 Jews in the Savrani raion. About half of Savrani's Jewish population retreated with the Red Army or fled deeper inside the Soviet Union at the outbreak of war in June 1941, but the rest stayed in the town. By March 1944, only three indigenous Jews lived in the Savrani raion (not including those held in the ghettos).¹

The German and Romanian armies occupied Savrani on July 30, 1941. At the beginning of September 1941, the Romanian civil administration assumed sole control over Savrani; it romanianized the raion's township's name from Savran to Savrani (or Săvrani). Colonel Vasile Nica became prefect of the Balta județ, and his deputy was Alexandru Cojocaru. Locotenent-colonel Ștefan Gavăț was commandant of the Balta Gendarmes Legion. The praetor in the Savrani raion was Dumitru Niculescu.

In October 1941, the local Ukrainian Jews of Savrani who had not already fled to Berșad were deported to Obodovca, a township 10 kilometers (6.2 miles) west of Berșad, in Balta's northern territory. A small number of mostly elderly people and children remained and were confined in a few abandoned houses on the township's outskirts. This ghetto was separated from the rest of the town by the Savranka River, a tributary of the Bug River, and was not encircled by barbed wire. The bridge over the river was guarded by Romanian gendarmes, and none could cross it without their permission. To relieve overcrowding in the Berșad ghetto and fight the typhus epidemic that erupted there in the winter months of 1941–1942, about 150 Jews were moved from there to Savrani at the end of 1942. Due to deaths in the camp, their numbers decreased to 133 in March 1943.² In May 1943, an additional 127 Jews were released and transferred from the Vapniarca high-security concentration camp to Savrani.³ Renting rooms in the houses of local Ukrainian villagers, they were grouped according to their region or town of origin in Romania. A second ghetto was thus created in Savrani. The two ghettos were separated by the river and were about a half-kilometer (547 yards) from each other. Close ties developed between the Jews from each ghetto, however.

Life in the ghettos was harsh, but particularly so in the first (the "Ukrainian") ghetto, which housed a large number of elderly, women, and children who could not or were not taken to work. Living conditions were poor and unsanitary; most people slept on the floor on a layer of straw. Overcrowding and lack of food facilitated the spread of typhus and typhoid fever, which struck Balta's villages in the winter of 1941–1942 and again in 1942–1943.⁴ Jews found temporary work on villagers' farms or as cleaners in the Romanian administration buildings; skilled internees worked in the local tradesmen's cooperative and received scrip to exchange for food from the local grocery store. Wearing the yellow star on the chest was mandatory for everyone who walked out of the ghetto area. Among the ghettos' inmates were former Romanian government functionaries, decorated war veterans, and widows of Romania's earlier wars.⁵

Thanks to their collective effort, their receipt of material and financial aid, and good relations forged with the local Romanian authorities, the Jews were permitted to open a soup kitchen for the needy among them. Jewish doctors from the second ghetto opened a small dental office and a medical consultation office in the house in which they lived. In addition, a small synagogue was set up in a room in a house in each of the two ghettos. The High Holidays were observed in the autumn of 1943. A Torah scroll and a rabbi were shared between the two ghettos. Individual and collective funds, as well as material aid (salt, coal, glass), sent from family, friends, and the Jewish communities in Romania via the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER), provided additional relief throughout 1943 and early 1944.⁶

The official leaders of the Jewish Committee of Savrani were Felix Schechter (colony chief), Mayer Iosipovici (secretary), Carol Beiniș (labor service), and Nicolae Feckette (social services), assisted by members Henric Auflegher, Iosif Epștein, Sali Zaharia, and Filip Cohn.⁷ Doctors Epstein, Auflegher, and Iosipovici, who were also the ghettos' doctors, were assigned as main doctors to villages in the Savrani raion.⁸

A network of partisans operated in the area. In the autumn of 1943, some Ukrainian-speaking Jews made contact with and assisted the partisans who attacked the local gendarmes post. The gendarmes discovered the collaboration between the partisans and the Jews in Savrani and arrested Carol Beiniș, the leader of the Jews who were involved. The other ghetto leaders secured his release from prison after presenting Locotenent Ștefănescu, the gendarmerie sector commandant, with a substantial bribe.

In November 1943, the Romanian government issued a repatriation edict for Jews deported from Transylvania and the Old Kingdom. Former state functionaries, widows and orphans of Romania's earlier wars, and orphans (under age 18) whose parents were killed in the deportations to Transnistria were also to be repatriated. From Savrani's (second) ghetto, 65 Romanian Jews who had been imprisoned in the Vapniarca camp were repatriated to Romania on December 21, 1943, and another 57 Jews, including some from the Dorohoi area, were repatriated on January 11, 1944.⁹ There remained in the ghetto a few Romanian Jews from other parts of Romania. According to the September 1943 count, there were two Jews from Bessarabia and eight from Bukovina.¹⁰ By mid-February 1944, there were 51 Jews (from Bessarabia and Bukovina), in addition to local Ukrainian Jews.¹¹ All the remaining Jews were liberated by the Red Army on March 27, 1944.

The Savrani forest was a densely wooded area south of Savrani township. It provided an excellent hiding place for partisans, and in the late autumn of 1943 a Roma (Gypsies) colony was temporarily moved to the area (closer to the village of Slyusareve) from the Golta județ to cut wood. The colony numbered 1,756 Roma and was housed in huts in the forest. After receiving axes and saws, the Roma rebelled against the gendarmes because of the miserable conditions in which they lived. They used the tools to produce wooden articles (washing basins, spoons) to sell for money or to be exchanged for food.¹² The gendarmes were eventually able to subdue the Roma. From July 1942 to March 1943, 300 Soviet POWs from the Tiraspol camp were also deployed in the Savrani forest. They were brought there as woodcutters, employed by the Golta prefecture, and guarded by 35 gendarmes and 1 officer.¹³

The Red Army recaptured Savrani at the end of March 1944. By that point, the remaining Jews from Romania were in the process of being repatriated, while the Ukrainian Jews dispersed or remained in place. The following year, in April 1945, the Bucharest's People's Court tried Balta's military and civilian leaders for mistreating the Jews deported to Savrani.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews and Roma in Savrani can be gleaned from the following sources: "Savran," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2007), 7: 406; "Savran," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 885; "Săvrani," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehilot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min hivasdam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 480–481; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 53; and Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); for a collection of documents relating to the deportation of Romanian Roma in Transnistria, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary sources about the fate of Jews, Roma, and Soviet POWs in Savrani are found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and DAMO (RG-31.008M). For a Jewish survivor's account, see Ihiel Benditer, Vapniarca: Lagărele Vapniarca și Grosulovo, închisoarea Ribnița, ghetourile Olgopol, Savrani, Tribudi, Crivoi-Ozero și Tribati (Tel Aviv: Anais, 1995).

A name list of 112 Jews imprisoned in Savrani ghetto, prepared by the Claims Conference in Tel Aviv, Israel, can be found at USHMM Resource Center, File no. RT-1124, www.ushmm.org/online/hsv/source_view.php?SourceId=29862. VHA holds 85 testimonies in four languages (English, Russian, Hebrew, and Ukrainian) from Jewish survivors of the deportations from Savrani and the subsequent ghettoization.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Census report, Savrani raion, February 28, 1944, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 675, p. 40 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/675, with page); for other census indexes, see pp. 12 and 19 in the same collection.

2. Census report, "Situația asupra numărului de populații specifică după națiuni: ucrainieni, țigani," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/17/2358/1/711, pp. 2–3. The Jews were also counted, despite the title that refers only to Ukrainians and Roma.

3. See official correspondence announcing the release of Jews from the Vapniarca camp to three destinations in Transnistria: Olgopol, Savrani, and Tridubi; reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 442–445 (Docs. 230–232).

4. See Prefect Nica's reports, "Proces Verbal," December 7, 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/695, pp.

142–143, and the following report, December 4, 1941, on p. 145 (and verso).

5. “Tabel nominal de evrei din Jud. Balta intrând în prevederile ord. Direcțiunii Muncii Nr.115647/943,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/15, pp. 2–3.

6. “Tabel de remiterile facute evreilor din tara deportati in Transnistria si aflati la Savrani (Jud. Balta),” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/2242/1/1567, p. 496.

7. “Tabel de membrii Biroului de Organiz. a Muncii Evreilor din Jud. Balta și a Comitetelor evreiești din Jud. Balta pe data de 1 Septembrie 1943,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1562, p. 72.

8. See a list of Jewish doctors and their assignments in the Balta județ, “Referat,” August 5, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/22, n.p.

9. For their names and place of origin, see “Tabel de evrei din Colonia Savrani care au fost repatriați în țară pe data de 21/XII/1943,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/674, p. 47 (and verso), and “Tabel nominal de evreii din colonia Savrani care au fost repatriați în țară pe data de 11.I.1944,” in the same collection, p. 48 (and verso).

10. For the September 1943 count, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 440.

11. Statistical figures provided by Savran praetor’s office, USHMMA, RG-68.130M (OOYV), reel 2, M-39/27 (fond 2358, opis 1, delo 110), p. 90.

12. See correspondence between Slyusarevlo Forestry Office and Golta Prefecture regarding the incident, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 369, pp. 127 (and verso), 132, and delo 224, p. 68.

13. See “Contract,” August 16, 1942, signed by Maior Grosu, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 20, pp. 5–7.

SCAZINET

Scazineț (pre-1941: Skazintsy), a village in the Moghilev raion, Moghilev județ (today: Ukraine), in the western part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is situated along the Derlo, a Dniester River tributary. It is 12 kilometers (7.4 miles) north-east of Moghilev. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 8,703 Jews in the raion of Moghilev, representing 39.7 percent of its population (census figures for Scazineț are not available).

The German and Romanian armies occupied Scazineț in July 1941. After a short period of occupation, the town came under Romanian administration, which romanianized the village’s name from Skazintsy to Scazineț (also Scazeți, Scaziți). In succession, Constantin Dimitriu, Ion C. Băleanu, Constantin Năsturaș, and Constantin Loghin, all army colonels, were Moghilev’s prefects. Successive commandants of the Moghilev Gendarmes Legion were Dănulescu, Romeo Orășeanu, and Gheorghe Botoroagă, all army majors. The praetor in the Moghilev raion was Dr. Octavian Oancea.

On August 6, 1941, convoys of Romanian Jews deported from northern Bessarabia, roughly 21,000 people in total, were stationed in Scazineț for a week, having just entered Transnistria through the Atachi-Moghilev crossing point. During that time, the very elderly and the sick among them were shot by Einsatzkommando units of Einsatzgruppe D and buried in an antitank ditch near the camp. Water was not provided to the rest of the Jews, and anyone who approached the nearby well was shot. After a week the Germans tried to force the Jews back across the Dniester River inside Bessarabia, via the southern Iampol-Cosăuți crossing point. However, Romanian soldiers prevented them from crossing the river. For 10 days, they remained in limbo between Iampol and Scazineț. The deportees were outdoors and in constant danger of being robbed, beaten, raped, and shot at by German and Romanian soldiers while preparing to cross the river or en route to a holding place. Neither authority provided food or water to those stranded, and many Jews died during that period of great travail. After 10 days the remaining 13,000 (of the original 21,000 deportees) were placed in the Vertujeni transit camp on the Romanian side of the river.

From May 29 to June 2, 1942, 3,000 Jews from the Moghilev ghetto and an additional 1,000 Jews from smaller ghettos in the Moghilev județ, such as Vendychany, Yaruha, Ozaryntsi, and Krasnoe were marched to Scazineț, where they were placed in a makeshift camp. Colonel Mihai Iliescu, chief of the Transnistria Inspectorate of the Gendarmerie, reiterated in May 1942 the deportation order to Scazineț that had been issued by Transnistria’s governor, Gheorghe Alexianu, in April 1942.¹ The Moghilev Jewish Committee was asked to prepare for the deportation of the designated ghetto inhabitants. After inspecting the Scazineț barracks in advance of deportations, the leader of the Moghilev Jewish Committee proposed that the camp be turned into an agricultural settlement for Jews and be provided with land, cattle, and medical care. The recommendations were ignored.²

The camp was set up in the dilapidated military barracks of a former Red Army school, situated in a hilly area near the village. Surrounded by barbed wire, the camp was bisected by a road running through it. Six buildings on the road’s west side were in slightly better shape than those on the other side, and most deportees were placed in them. Across the road were two heavily damaged buildings, lacking roofs, windows, and doors. The poorest and the sick were housed there. Lavatories were in an open field. Moving between the two parts of the camp was punishable by murder, and the few who attempted to cross the road were shot. Shortly after the camp’s opening, Banderovci brigades (Ukrainian nationalist collaborators associated with Stepan Bandera) took over the guard duties from Romanian gendarmes.³ A small Jewish police unit also operated within the camp.

Inside the camp, hundreds of deported Jews died of starvation, thirst, and disease (diarrhea, dysentery, scabies, and typhus). According to one account, Orășeanu liked to address convoys entering the camp with these intimidating words: “I brought you here to die. You’ll have nothing to eat but the grass on the ground, leaves on the trees, and lice on yourselves. When you finish that, you can start eating each other.”⁴ Indeed, the problem of feeding prisoners was raised by Prefect Năsturaș to Governor Alexianu soon after deportations began. The latter replied that “they will work in fields, or wherever else is needed, and the kolkhozes will feed them.”⁵ His answer meant death for those too ill to work, those not taken to work (women, elderly, children), and those not requisitioned for labor for days or weeks. The only food the authorities allowed to be delivered a few times a week was a watery pea soup, which was transported in large barrels from Moghilev. The Moghilev Jewish Committee was entrusted with feeding the camp, but its resources were stretched too thinly to provide even a minimal amount for each prisoner. The Central Bureau of Romanian Jews in Bucharest (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) contributed very small sums toward the purchase of food for the camp.⁶

A market existed near the camp where Jews bartered personal items for food once a week, but Orășeanu soon closed it down, probably for fears of contamination. Clandestine bartering continued at night, but all those involved risked their lives by doing so. Occasionally, local Ukrainians walking by the barbed-wire fence threw potato peels or fruit pits at the prisoners (a jam factory where local Ukrainians worked was not far from the camp). In the absence of any other means of procuring food, some prisoners ate grass and tree leaves. Trying to escape was extremely difficult and dangerous, yet a resourceful few managed to do so with help from local Ukrainians.⁷ The prisoners observed Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur in September 1942. The observance occasioned the visit by a Jewish woman living in the better-off side of the camp. Her report reveals the conditions in which some of the Jews lived:

I passed through a large building that was formerly used as a stockyard. A dead silence ruled this [part of the] camp, the atmosphere was heavy, the air filled with the stench of human urine and excrement. Deformed people, some of them naked, some covered in rags, some moving silently and looking like living scraps. I then entered a long and clean room in which the smell of death was also present. Stones of various sizes were placed on the room’s floor and the believers who came to lift their prayers before God’s face were sitting upon them. An improvised closet, made from four wooden planks, sat at the back of the room; a torn woman’s skirt covered the Torah scroll . . . Those praying were women, men, and older children, some of them bloated beyond recognition, almost moribund, while others were almost blue of color, their bodies covered in large skin-disease plaques. All were shaking from cold and sickness, nearly naked, with uncovered breasts, eyes popping out of sockets . . . Suddenly the shape of a tall and skinny man appeared; he was the cantor. Walking toward the improvised tabernacle, he began to pray, crying and moaning from the bottom of his heart. The public also cried with him. The odor of death and decomposing bodies filled the air. Here and there a few cried out “Shema Israel” (“Hear, O Israel”) and “L’shanah haba’ab b’ Yerushalayim” (“Next year in Jerusalem”).⁸

By July–August 1942, the number of camp inmates had decreased to 2,900 people.⁹ The dead were buried unceremoniously near the camp in common graves. Those who were able to work did road maintenance, agriculture, and lime preparation. Scazineț did not have a Jewish committee, but the Moghilev Jewish Committee coordinated certain aspects of camp life. The members of the Jewish labor office serving on the committee were Sigfried Jägendorf (president), along with Mihail Danilof, Dr. Ionas Kassler, Moses Katz, and Josef Laufer.¹⁰

In September 1942, Alexianu decided to dissolve the camp. The majority of the surviving Jews were marched on foot toward the Bug, while a small group of skilled workers returned to Moghilev. Only a few—the very sick or dying—remained in Scazineț for a few more days until they died. The 1,500 who left the camp were placed in three villages near the Bug: Voroshylivca, Tivriv, and Krasnoe. From there, the surviving Jews from the Old Kingdom were repatriated to Romania in December 1943; the others were liberated by the Red Army in March 1944.

The Bucharest’s Peoples’ Tribunal tried and sentenced Orășeanu and Danilof each to 15 years’ hard labor in prison for war crimes against the Jews.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Scazineț can be gleaned from the following publications: “Skazintsy,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 20; “Skazintsy,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 904; “Scazineț,” in Jean Ancel et al., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min hivasadam ve-’ad le-abar Sho’at Milbemet ha-’olam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 485–486; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), pp. 23, 48; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 2, part 2 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, published in association with USHMM, 2000). A memorial book mentioning the camp is Bălți Basarabia: A Memorial of the Jewish Community (Balti: Jewish Union, 1993).

Primary sources documenting the Scazineț camp are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), MAE (RG-25.006M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). VHA holds 68 testimonies in seven languages on the Scazineț camp. A published testimony mentioning the Scazineț camp is Siegfried Jägerdorf, The Jägerdorf Foundry: A Memoir of the Romanian Holocaust, 1941–1944 (New York: Harper-Collins Publisher, 1991).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See Iliescu's letter informing the government of Transnistria that measures were taken to deport 4,000 Jews from Moghilev to the Scazineț barracks, and see Governor Alexianu's instructions following his visit to Moghilev in April 1942 (summarized by Prefect Năsturaș), USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 3, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1488, pp. 57, 60–61 (USHMM, RG-31.004M/3/2242/1/1488).

2. See Jägerdorf's report to the commandant of the Moghilev Gendarmes Legion, March 26, 1942, reprinted in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 347–349.

3. VHA #45947, Iosif Adler testimony, September 1, 1998.

4. VHA #45650, Gisela Tamler testimony, September 10, 1998.

5. Năsturaș's confidential letter to Alexianu, June 4, 1942, USHMM, RG-31.004M/3/2242/1/1488, p. 92 (and verso).

6. Jägerdorf's memorandum addressed to the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews, September 15, 1942, USHMM, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, file 2699, vol. 22, pp. 257–289.

7. VHA #45947, Iosif Adler testimony, September 1, 1998; VHA #50186, Rebeka Bajora testimony, August 17, 1999; VHA #39389, Felix Garfunkel testimony, February 17, 1989; VHA #17412, Arieh Erez testimony, July 12, 1996; see also the memoir by the former head of Moghilev ghetto, M. Katz, reprinted in part in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 357–358.

8. Bălți Basarabia, pp. 609–610 (in Hebrew); for a Romanian translation, see Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României, vol. 2, part 2, 77.

9. "Situația numerică pe commune din jud. Moghilau a evreilor evacuați aflați în comunele mai jos notate," USHMM, RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.

10. Government appointment letter, "Decizia Nr. 385," January 25, 1943, USHMM, RG-31.004M/18/2361/1/26, p. 62.

SECURENI

Secureni, a town in the Hotin județ, in Bukovina province, in the northeastern part of Romania (today: Sokyryany, Ukraine), is located 7 kilometers (5 miles) from the Dniester River. It is 111 kilometers (69 miles) east-northeast of Cernăuți. In 1930 there were 4,200 Jews in Secureni, representing 73 percent of the town's total population. By June 1941, the number of Jews had decreased, after some of the wealthiest and Zionist Jews were deported by the Soviet authorities to Siberia. The commandant of the Hotin Gendarmes Legion was Maior Traian Drăgulescu. The prefect of the Hotin județ was Joe Gherman, who was succeeded by Colonel Virgil Popovici.

The Romanian Army occupied Secureni on July 10, 1941. The first army units that entered the town denigrated the Jews and incited the local population to mistreat them. The locals abused the Jews for a few days, ransacking their homes, injuring some, and killing 87 who were thought to be pro-Soviet. Torah scrolls were desacralized and torn into pieces by vandals. Jewish leaders and rabbis buried the broken scrolls in the Jewish cemetery, as was the custom. Shortly after the occupation, the entire Jewish population was ordered to assemble in a place near the Jewish cemetery. Thinking they would be shot, the Jews discovered that the locals instead demanded their belongings. The Jews were not shot at that time, but were told to support Romania's war efforts against the Red Army. All returned to their homes, some of which had been looted.¹ A week after, in late July or early August 1941, the Jews were ordered to gather again, this time with the expressed purpose of deportation. The convoy was marched to Briceni, a town 26 kilometers (16 miles) southwest of Secureni.

From Briceni the convoy returned to Secureni, and its members were crowded into Jewish homes along a few designated streets. Twenty or more people occupied a single room. The Romanian authorities did not provide food or water, leaving everyone to survive through barter. As soon as the convoy left Secureni for Transnistria, via the Atachi-Moghilev-Podolsk crossing point, other convoys from Bukovina (from Briceni and Herța) were directed to Secureni.²

In early August 1941, the Germans refused to accept more Jews in Transnistria (which they controlled at that time) and returned some across the Dniester into Bessarabia and Bukovina. The German decision set off a domino effect, resulting in massive crowds of Jews remaining stranded for days near the crossing points along the western shore of the Dniester River, where food, shelter, and water could be found only with great difficulty. On August 8, 1941, some 27,849 Jews were held in an open field between Secureni and Atachi. They came from villages and small towns in the Cernăuți județ, Storojineț județ, Rădăuți județ, and Briceni județ. On August 11, 1941, a camp was set up in Secureni, in the town's former Jewish district, to which 20,852 Jews were sent. By August 15, a second camp opened at Edineți, also in the Hotin județ, to alleviate the overcrowding in the Secureni camp.³

The Secureni camp became a hellish site in a matter of weeks. The Jews lived in misery and agony, needing written authorization to leave the camp in search of food and medicine. Having bartered their clothes for food along the way, a good number ended up poorly dressed (some almost naked), starving, thirsty, and dirty. The camp was not surrounded by barbed wire, but was guarded by gendarmes from the 60th Police Company. The commandant of the 60th Police Company and of the Secureni camp was Locotenent Augustin

Roșca.⁴ Because the military and civil administrative authorities in the Hotin județ had a great deal of difficulty coping with the large number of deportees, the prisoners suffered accordingly. In addition, Einsatzcommando 10B made repeated requests for Jews from the camp, on the pretext of needing them for labor.⁵

The camp exhibited some level of self-organization. It had a leadership committee and an internal Jewish police force, and the population was organized into groups led by representatives. Jewish doctors set up a primitive infirmary, but lacking medicine, its utility was dramatically reduced. A large, bare room became the “home for the elderly.” A delousing oven and a public bath were soon installed as well. On a few occasions, 650 prisoners were taken to repair roads, clean streets, and harvest the fields. On one occasion the Hotin prefecture allocated the camp some 1,400 kilograms (3,100 pounds) of sugar, 450 liters (475 quarts) of oil, 80 kilograms (180 pounds) of salt, and 200 loaves of bread; some county funds were allocated for the camp as well.⁶

After inspecting the camp in early September 1941, Colonel I. Măneucă, the Bukovina gendarmes inspector, reported on the dire situation inside the camp. Măneucă advised that there were 10,201 Jews (8,302, according to a different count), including many women, children, and elderly, in the camp. Although some had a few possessions, most were penniless, lacked cooking implements and medicine, were almost naked, and (probably because of the combined effect of these deprivations) were unable to work in exchange for food.⁷ The camp also held 1,698 Jews from Lipcani (Hotin județ) who had been deported by the Soviet authorities to Iampol (south of Moghilev-Podolsk) prior to the outbreak of hostilities against the Soviet Union. The German Army pushed them back across the Dniester River into Bessarabia. They were interned on August 24, 1941. Colonel Măneucă described their state as “deplorable,” being “without food for four days, broken, and full of lice.”⁸

On August 19, 1941, the president of the Federation of Jewish Communities from Romania, Dr. W. Filderman, wrote to the Romanian Internal Affairs Ministry, asking that the Jewish authorities be allowed to send help: “At Secureni (Bessarabia) there have been gathered 25,000–30,000 Jews evacuated from localities including Storojineț, Seletin, Putila, Plosca, Vășcăuți, Vijița, Lujeni, Lipcani, etc. They lack shelter, food, clothes, and medical attention. Nobody is allowed to send them aid. The filth that reigns among them destines them all to death, but it can also become a dangerous threat to the public.”⁹ Indeed, some Jews perished in the camp due to disease, their bodies buried unceremoniously in unmarked graves. In September 1941, the Jews observed the High Holidays in the camp.¹⁰

Deportations from the Secureni camp started in the middle of October 1941, and the camp was closed in November 1941. The operation lasted about two weeks, during which time groups of 1,500 Jews left the camp almost every other day. The deportees marched to Atachi. On the way there, those who could not walk anymore because of age or illness were shot, their bodies buried in holes dug in advance or simply abandoned on the side of the road. Further robbing and despoiling at the hands of the escorting gendarmes took place on the way to Atachi. Those who crossed over into Transnistria at Moghilev-Podolsk continued marching deeper into Transnistria amid freezing temperatures. Illness and crippling hunger prevailed.

A Romanian military court began investigating Praetor Margoș in the summer of 1942, after repeated denunciations accused him of robbing the Jews at the Secureni camp of their valuables in exchange for unfulfilled promises of privileges. At his orders, the Jews who complained about being robbed were shot.¹¹ In 1945, the People’s Court in Bucharest tried and convicted former military leaders responsible for deporting Bukovina’s Jews, including Roșca, the commandant of the Secureni camp.¹²

SOURCES Further information regarding the fate of Jews imprisoned in the Secureni camp can be found in the following publications: “Secureni,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 1155; “Sekuriani,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 896–897; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3a: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască: 1933–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Moses Rosen, ed., Martiriul evreilor din România, 1940–1941: Documente și mărturii (Bucharest: Hasefer, 1991); and Michael Stivelman and Raquel Stivelman, A Marca dos Genocídios (Rio de Janeiro: Imago, 2001).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in Secureni camp are available at USHMM, in collections DACkO (RG-31.006M), SRI (RG-25.004M), and AJDC (RG-68.066M). Trial records pertaining to the Secureni camp can be found at USHMM, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 15, file 9614, vol. 1; and reel 123, file 21227, vol. 2. VHA holds 136 testimonies, in eight languages, from Jewish survivors who were held in the Secureni camp or passed through the town on the way to other camps.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #49113, Ben Tsion Flom testimony, August 14, 1998.

2. VHA #29959, Esther Grauer testimony, June 8, 1997; VHA #47770, Liviu Beris testimony, November 29, 1998.

3. Reports “Nr. 528,” “Nr. 862,” “Nr. 619,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 36, 40, 46, respectively.

4. Report on the situation of camps and ghettos in Bessarabia and Bukovina prepared for General de divizie Ioan Topor, the Great Praetor of Romania, September 4, 1941, “Situția de numărul lagărelor de evrei aflate în Bessarabia și Bucovina,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 74.

5. See correspondence reproduced in ibid., 5: 44.

6. Măneucă's report to the Office of the Great Praetor, based on earlier reports from the Hotin Gendarmes Legion, August 28, 1941, reproduced in ibid., 5: 71–72. Also, see schedule of fund allocations and other assistance from the prefect's office, USHMMA, RG-25.004 (SRI), reel 15, file 9614, vol. 1, pp. 182–197.

7. Report “No. 7438,” September 11, 1941, reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 82–83.

8. Măneucă's report to the Office of the Great Praetor, reproduced in ibid., 5: 71–72.

9. Filderman letter, August 19, 1941, reprinted in Moses Rosen, Martiriul evreilor din România, p. 154.

10. VHA #29959, Esther Grauer testimony, June 8, 1997.

11. See investigation reports, USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 15, fond 30, opis 4, delo 230, pp. 1–12 (and verso).

12. See court depositions and declarations, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 15, file 9614, vol. 1, pp. 1–8; for Gherman's file, see pp. 139–167 in the same file and volume.

SEREBRIA

Serebriya, a village in the Iarișev raion in the Moghilev județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Serebriya, Ukraine), is situated along the Serebriya River, a tributary of the Dniester. It is located 5 kilometers (3 miles) west of Moghilev-Podolsk.

The German and Romanian armies overran the village and its surroundings at the beginning of July 1941. After a short German military occupation, the area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Serebriya to Serebria. The praetor in the Iarișev raion was Gheorghe Oșeanu.

In the summer of 1942, a second wave of Jews was deported to Transnistria from a number of cities, especially Cernăuți and Dorohoi, in the Bukovina province. Many of these Jews found out shortly before being deported that their previously obtained permits to remain in Romania had been revoked by a reevaluation commission operating with the support of the province's governor, General de Divizie Corneliu Calotescu. In addition to those whose permits to stay were revoked, there were others whom the Romanian authorities had deemed “dangerous” and “undesirable.” Some 4,290 Jews were deported in June 1942 in transports on June 8, 11, 15, and 29.¹

The transports of Jews from Bukovina converged in Cernăuți. From there convoys of deportees were loaded onto trains. Crowded into freight cars, the Jews traveled from Cernăuți to Atachi on the Dniester River. Robbed of possessions along the way, these Jews finally crossed the Dniester River and arrived at Moghilev-Podolsk; from there they walked in columns to Serebria, where a selection camp had been set up for them.²

The Serebria camp was controlled by the Transnistria Inspectorate of Gendarmes, created especially to conduct a selection of the Jews arriving from Bukovina. The Moghilev Gendarmes Legion closely guarded the camp. Whatever its administrative purposes, the camp was clearly a facility for robbing the Jews. Central to the activity of the camp's civilian and military personnel was to “search” the Jews before deciding where to send them and how. The Jews were marched to the train station in Serebria, from where they and other deportees from the Moghilev ghetto were transported deeper inside Transnistria.³ The camp was in operation from June 9 to July 1, 1942.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews held in the Serebria camp can be found in the following publications: Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, “The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive,” HM 2:8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews taken to the Serebria camp can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). VHA holds three survivor testimonies in two languages (Russian and Hebrew) from Jews held in Serebria or passing through the camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See the secret correspondence reporting on the deportation program from the Bukovina governor's office to the Presidency of the Council of Ministers in Bucharest, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 196–215.

2. USHMMA, RG-50.572*0029, Maria Bulgara testimony, February 29, 2008.

3. For more information on Serebria camp, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 8, fond 2255, opis 1s, delo 254, p. 3 (and verso).

ȘIRIA/102 BRIGADE FOR JEWS

Established by the Army General Staff (Marele Stat Major, MSM) in August 1941, the 102 Brigade for Jews (Detășamentul de Evrei 102, DE 102) consisted of approximately 1,000 Jewish men aged 18 to 50. They were drafted for forced labor by army recruitment centers in southwestern Romania (Timiș, Severin, Arad, Caraș, Hunedoara, and Mehedinți) that were part of the VII Army Corps. A series of high-ranking officers commanded DE 102, the most notorious being Locotenent-colonel Nicolae Vitcu (June 1943 to April 1944). The DE was headquartered in Șiria in the Arad județ, 405 kilometers (251 miles) northwest of Bucharest, and was part of the 7th Pioneer Regiment, 3rd Pioneer Brigade.

As an exterior forced labor unit, DE 102 was divided into two companies (companii), with approximately 450 to 500 Jews per company, guarded by 60 soldiers (30 per company). Each company consisted of four platoons, and each platoon was subdivided into four sections of approximately 30 to 35 laborers.¹ Locotenent (reserve) Dumitru Popescu commanded the 1st Company; Locotenent (reserve) Mihai Botilă commanded the 2nd Company. One company's main office was at Pâncota and the other at Ghioroc (both in the Arad județ), but their platoons periodically moved to new locations as dictated by labor needs.² DE 102 was tasked with digging a system of water canals, 8 to 9 meters (26 to 29 feet) deep and extending more than 30 kilometers (over 18 miles) in length. The canals were created to connect the Mureș and Crișul Alb Rivers and to help prevent flooding.

The Jews' overall experience in the DE's camps and sub-camps was more tolerable in 1942, but became dreadful under Vitcu's command. Accommodations for the entire DE were at times extremely inadequate. MSM's policy was to avoid housing the Jews in non-Jewish villages. Instead, authorities were encouraged to place Jews in empty barns, warehouses, barracks, or abandoned houses, regardless of their condition, on village outskirts near work sites. Sleeping in rough, crowded, and dirty conditions was typical. In winter, heating was non-existent for the most part.

A daily digging quota was set at 2 to 3 cubic meters (71 to 106 cubic feet), depending on the season. The authorities obsessed about extracting this work quota at any cost. For a few weeks in May and June 1943, a new practice, well received by the forced laborers, was introduced that granted weekend leave to those workers who fulfilled their quota. The authorities were also pleased because the Jews worked eagerly to meet the forecasted work program, while the measure saved them money on salaries and board. Vitcu's arrival as commandant changed the working conditions as he introduced a regime of terror (the higher authorities worried that his harshness would adversely affect productivity).³ Digging was done using pickaxes and shovels.

Dressed in their own clothes and wearing an armband (brasardă) as a distinctive sign, the Jews marched under escort to and from the canals with their tools. They typically worked 9 to 10 hours per day (fewer in the winter months), six or seven days a week. Food was generally poor, consisting of a bowl of bean soup and bread. (Monthly field reports recognized this deficiency, but generally blamed inadequate rations on the high cost of food, which was set at 60 lei per day.)⁴ Drinking water was not readily available. Many who did not have the means or occasion to purchase additional food worked in a prolonged state of hunger. After 180 days of labor, the Jews who still had an unfulfilled labor requirement could be granted a maximum two-week break, depending on the discretion of the commandant.⁵ Payment was a meager soldier's pay, 2 lei per day, in addition to meals and board.⁶

A Jewish shop existed at the main company base. Food and tobacco could be purchased from the shop by those with means. A small number of skilled Jews were retained as typists or clerks in the DE administration. Jewish doctors were requisitioned from the VII Army Corps area and assigned for 90-day cycles to staff the DE's infirmaries. Regional Jewish offices strived to supply medicine for the infirmaries.⁷

The physically demanding work soon took its toll. Illnesses spread, from blisters, sores, colds, and flu to widespread furunculosis, rheumatism, and ulcers.⁸ Existing illnesses (such as diabetes) were exacerbated by the harsh labor. Those needing urgent care were treated at the Jewish hospital in Arad, but the Romanian state refused to absorb the cost of the Jews' rehabilitation. A bath and delousing train periodically arrived at Șiria, providing probably the only times when Jews (and troops) could wash completely. Clothes gradually wore out. On hot summer days, laborers undressed and worked in undergarments, in part probably to preserve their clothes for the cold season.

When he took over the brigade, Commandant Vitcu made life considerably harder for the Jews in DE 102. He not only instituted severe beatings (25 or more lashes on the back) for the smallest violations of his imaginary code of behavior (not to mention tardiness or work negligence) but he also kept the workers in camps during the winter rather than sending them home. He only reluctantly agreed to the scheduled leave of 15 days for those who qualified for it. In addition, he insisted on having Jews return from the infirmaries as soon as possible or replacing those who were incapacitated with new conscripts. To his credit, he allowed Jews to observe the High Holidays in the fall of 1943 after they completed their work. Intellectuals (doctors, lawyers, even rabbis) were not exempt from manual labor, although the law protected them from hard physical labor. He increased the work schedule to 14 to 16 hours a day, regardless of the weather. At the same time, food rations were decreased, resulting in substantial savings to the DE's operational budget. A military jail existed at Șiria where Jews working in the camp administration (the so-called titrați) and troops sometimes spent days for various offenses.⁹ Vitcu's periodic inspections in the field were brutal. On February 11, 1944, before the 7 A.M. roll call, Vitcu made a surprise inspection of Jews in the Pauliș commune. He found some 40 Jews still getting dressed. According to his postwar indictment, he ordered them to be lined up naked in the street, made them lie flat in the snow, and administered 25 lashes to each, to the utter dismay of the local population. Some soldiers applied gentler lashes, which attracted the commandant's wrath; they too were given 25 lashes in front of everyone gathered there.¹⁰

After Vitcu's departure, in July 1944, DE 102 was moved near the Eastern Front, in Bătinești, Putna județ (today: Vrancea județ), to build fortifications.¹¹ The Jews were removed from the DE at the end of August 1944, after the coup d'état against Marshal Antonescu on August 23, 1944; their place was taken by Hungarian minorities. In May 1946, the Cluj People's Court tried and convicted Vitcu to 15 years of hard labor for the inhumane treatment of Jews while commandant of DE 102.¹²

SOURCES A number of published sources attest to the mistreatment of Jews in DE 102. Describing the experience of one Jewish survivor is Vali Corduneanu, "Fotoreporterul Emeric Robicsek—victimă și martor al istoriei," www.banaterrea.eu/romana/print/194. A book written by the Banat region pro-communist faction, Patriotic Defense (Apărarea Patriotică) also describes DE 102: Comitetul regional din Banat al Aparării Patriotice, ed., Apărarea Patriotică contra teroarei fasciste (Timișoara, 1945), esp. pp. 88–89 (on p. 89 there is a picture of the canal and its Jewish diggers). For a collection of documents regarding legislation surrounding forced labor for Jews, as well as documents about individual labor groups, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews enlisted in DE 102 are available at USHMMA, in collection RG-25.003M (AMAN), reels 98, 99, 105, 106, 107, and 345; other documents are available at RG-25.011M (AMAN), fiche *17*01 and *17*02. Graphic representation of the national system of forced labor for Jews is available as RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 17, file 86. VHA contains a few testimonies from Jewish survivors of the DE 102 sites (Pâncota, Păuliș, Ghioroc).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For the names of Jews working in DE 102 on August 15, 1943, see USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 98, file 4155, pp. 131–173.

2. Graphic representations of the Jewish forced labor groups within the VII Army Corps, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 345, file 36, pp. 3–7. For their general organization, see reports sent by the Jewish Office of the VII Army Corps, RG-25.003M, reel 105, file 4193, pp. 118–120, 141–142.

3. Report by Commandant of 3rd Pioneer Brigade, General Virgil Stănescu, to the National Defense Ministry, Corps Command, July 6, 1943, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 105, file 4193, p. 246 (but see pp. 232, 245, 247 on how authorities commented on the new measure).

4. USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 107, file 4196, pp. 84, 86.

5. USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 99, file 4177, pp. 401–414.

6. Payment lists covering the period October to December 1943, for example, USHMMA, RG-25.011M*17*01, pp. 3–21 (and verso).

7. For a list of the Jewish doctors, see USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 98, file 4155, p. 101; for those working in the administration, see p. 109 in the same collection.

8. Charts reviewing medical situation of Jewish forced laborers, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 106, file 4194, p. 398; and reel 107, file 4196, p. 124.

9. Centralized reports on the disciplinary situation in the camps, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 107, file 4196, pp. 50, 62, 107, 143, 155.

10. Closing statement, Cluj Tribunal, September 5, 1949, USHMMA, RG-24.004M (SRI), reel 77, file 40028, vol. 24, pp. 105–109 and verso (esp. p. 107 verso); see also corroborating survivor testimony in the same collection, reel 86, file 40028, vol. 2, pp. 23, 32, 34, 40.

11. National Defense Ministry, Direction Fortifications, Communication No. 166.346, July 18, 1944, USHMMA, RG-25.011M*17*02, p. 197 (but see earlier communications, pp. 184–196).

12. Vitcu's appeal, USHMMA, RG-25.004M, reel 77, file 40028, vol. 24, pp. 1–2.

SLIVINA

Slivina is a village in the Varvarovca raion, Oceacov județ (today: Slyvyne, Ukraine), in the southeastern corner of Romanian-controlled Transnistria. Located on the west bank of the Bug River, Slivina is 49 kilometers (31 miles) northwest of Oceacov. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 275 Jews in the entire Varvarovca raion (census figures for Slivina are not available).

The German and Romanian armies occupied Slivina in the second half of August 1941. Operations aimed at eliminating "undesirable" groups of people from behind the front line occurred immediately after the occupation, but it is unknown whether any Jews fell victim to such treatment in Slivina. Authority over Slivina was transferred to the Romanian civil administration starting in September 1941. The prefect in the Oceacov județ was Locotenent-colonel Vasile Gorsky, who was succeeded by Colonel I. D. Constantinescu. The commandant of the Oceacov Gendarmes Legion was Căpitan Ion Florian. The deputy legion commandant was Locotenent Ion Domășneanu, and the chief of the Police and Security Bureau was Sublocotenent Adrian Suci. The praetor in the Varvarovca raion was Dan Grigore Anton.

In the fall of 1941, the Romanian administration established a penal camp in Slivina. It was the third prison center in the second internment region of Transnistria (Regiunea II Internare, Centrul Nr. 3 Lagărul Slivina), after the Vapniarca and Tiraspol detention camps. Consisting of a repurposed, dilapidated collective farm (kolkhoz), the camp had two large stables and a few smaller structures; it was encircled by three rows of barbed wire. Romanian gendarmes guarded the camp, occupying two houses outside the camp. Non-Jewish prisoners condemned for common law offenses were held in one stable, and the Jews were interned in the second stable. Occasionally, conflicts erupted between the two groups, which was incited (or at least permitted) by camp authorities. The first commandant was Locotenent Lucian Popescu, who was followed by Locotenent Gheorghe Giugiuc, a lawyer, in the summer of 1942. Giugiuc instituted a very harsh regime in the camp, punishing any insubordination with 20 to 50 lashes; he even punished the gendarmes guarding the camp for making any kind gesture.

There were four categories of Jewish prisoners interned in the Slivina penal camp: Jews from Bessarabia and Bukovina who fled along with the retreating Red Army in June 1941, Jews from Transnistria, Jews from Romania who committed “crimes” and were punished with deportation, and Jews who had been extradited by the police in Bucharest to the gendarmes headquarters in Odessa.¹ Groups of 40 or more of such “offenders” were periodically gathered from Romania and Transnistria and transported to Slivina (often by train in freight cars) throughout the spring and summer of 1942. A prisoner’s family was sometimes deported with him or her to make the punishment more severe. The camp population was thus mixed, containing men, women, and children of various ages. The camp facilities were primitive at best or nearly uninhabitable at worst.

On arrival, the detainees were stripped naked, had their possessions meticulously checked, and were then examined by a medical team. Such medical teams included Jewish military doctors who were either mobilized as army officers or were performing forced labor duties. Food in the camp was very poor. A small loaf of bread of 200 to 300 grams (7 to 10.6 ounces) mixed with straw, supplemented by a potato or a small fish, was the daily ration. Those few who brought in or received foodstuffs from home were able to supplement their daily intake for a while, but most detainees relied entirely on what the camp provided. After months of incarceration, detainees were near starvation, and some 96 died of hunger.² Over the course of a few days, July 19–27, 1942, a total of 1,260 Jews in the Slivina camp were deloused.³

The Jews in the camp came from all social strata and professions. Some were doctors; others were builders and painters. Some had their tools with them and were ready to work in the field in which they were trained or in a similar field; others had none and needed to be provided with tools.⁴

It is unclear what activities prisoners undertook inside or outside the camp during their internment. A formal Jewish committee does not appear to have existed. In December 1942, a group of 650 Jews (other reports give a figure of only 187) were marched under escort to Domanovca (Golta județ) in frigid temperatures.⁵ Some died along the way, unable to keep up and stay warm. In the late spring of 1943, the German authorities established a labor camp for Jews on the grounds of the Slivina penal camp, so it is possible that the remaining non-Jewish detainees were also moved to other detention centers in Transnistria, such as the one in Tiraspol, for example.

After the war, in 1945, the Bucharest Peoples’ Tribunal tried Popescu and Giugiuc for the inhumane treatment of prisoners in the Slivina camp while they were in command.⁶

Giugiuc committed suicide in a police prison while awaiting trial.

SOURCES Additional information about the Slivina camp can be found in the following publications: “Slivino,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kbolokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 909; “Slivino,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 289; “Slivina,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-ad le-ahar Sho’at Milbemet ha-’olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 483–484. Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 55; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). A song commemorating the experience of the Jews in the Slivina camp was produced by a Jewish survivor (available in “Slivina,” Pinkas ha-kehillot, cited earlier). For more, see a collection of similar songs from other camps and ghettos in Transnistria in David Rubin, Cântecul Popular Evreesc (Bucharest: Editura Bucurim, 1946).

Primary sources regarding the fate of Jews in the Slivina penal camp are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAMO (RG-31.008), and SRI (RG-25.004M). VHA holds 24 video testimonies in six languages from Holocaust survivors who passed through or remained in the Slivina camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Report Nr. 238 of Odessa Gendarmes Inspectorate to AMI, Office of State-Undersecretary, August 19, 1943, reprinted in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 433.

2. VHA #49829, testimony of Froica Wainstein, April 26, 1999.

3. See the name list of inoculated and deloused from the Slivina camp, “Tabel al tuturor lucrătorilor evrei care au fost inoculați antiholerici și antitifoși. Toți aceștia au fost tunși și deparazitați prin etuvare, fierbere, și petrolizare,” USHMM, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 1591, opis 4, delo 202, pp. 1–6.

4. For name lists of Slivina camp inmates and their professions, see “Tabel nominal de indivizi evrei deținuți în lagărul Slivina repartizați pe profesii, preum și materialele și uneltele necesare lor,” USHMMA, RG-31.008M, microfiche, fond 1028, opis 1, delo 86, p. 69; see also “Tabel Nominal Model Nr. 1 de utilizarea evreilor din Transnistria lagărul Slivina,” USHMMA, RG-31.008, microfiche, fond 1028, opis 1, delo 98, pp. 57–59.

5. Report of security service agent, December 5, 1942, reprinted in Achim, ed., Documente privind deportarea țiganilor în Transnistria, 2: 24–29 (esp. p. 26). See also December 1942 remittances sent from Romania to Jews in the Slivina camp and redirected to Golta where the Jews were transferred. USHMMA, RG-031.004M (DAOO), reel 5, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1509, pp. 187–191.

6. See indictment letter “Jurnal Nr. 426,” March 19, 1945, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 41, file 108233, vol. 31, p. 287.

SLOBOZIA/LPRS NO. 1

Slobozia is in the Ialomița județ, 101 kilometers (63 miles) east of Bucharest, in southeastern Romania. After the attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the Romanian Army created Slobozia POW Camp No. 1 (Lagărul de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici Nr. 1 Slobozia), LPRS No. 1, on September 1, 1941. The camp was under the administration of the II Territorial Command, Army Staff, Bureau 2 (Comandamentul II Teritorial, Stat Major, Biroul 2). Located in an open field two kilometers away from the town of Slobozia, it consisted primarily of two large buildings—a former cavalry school barrack (Cazarma Negru Vodă) and a former mansion called “Fuerea House” (Casa Fuerea). There were also abandoned houses and barns. The compound was encircled by barbed wire and guarded by gendarmes (santinele). Between 3,500 and 4,000 POWs were imprisoned in this camp and in its subcamps in the Ilfov and Constanța județe. There was also a special disciplinary camp (lagăr disciplinar) in Slobozia for recalcitrant prisoners.

The first camp commander was Locotenent-colonel Aristide Ursu (September 1941 to January 1942), seconded by Căpitan Mihai Rădulescu. Following Ursu’s dismissal, Maior Chiricuță took over in February 1942, but due to illness was replaced by Maior Aurel Mucenica in March 1942. Maior Gheorghe Chiribașa commanded the camp from 1943 to 1944. The supply officers were Căpitan Victor Tomulescu, I. Mustăciosu, and Locotenent Nicolae Cernăianu; Sublocotenent Vasile Nițescu was the quartermaster, and Colonel Sandu Manolescu was camp inspector.

The living conditions in the Slobozia camp in the autumn and winter of 1941–1942 were harsh, particularly after the dismantling of other labor subcamps when ill prisoners returned to the main camp. The rooms were completely unfurnished, and most doors and windows were broken. Prisoners slept on the floor on a thin layer of straw. Thirty-five to 40 POWs were crammed into a room, and 500 to 600 lived in each of the two large buildings. Shoeless prisoners strapped straw and wood onto their feet to walk. The camp did not have a dining hall or laundry. Due to a lack of organization, food supplies quickly ran out, so porridge made out of frozen potatoes, with an occasional bean or potato soup or uncooked corn grits, became the daily food. Lavatories were uncovered ditches in the ground. In contrast to the guard’s equipped infirmary, the POWs’ infirmary was an abandoned house, with only one bed and two rooms that were completely unfurnished.

During the typhus epidemic that erupted from late December 1941 to April 1942, the infirmary housed 80 sick prisoners. About 300 POWs, 10 to 12 guards, and 2 Romanian officers died in the epidemic.¹ As a result, a team of 16 to 20 conscripted Jewish doctors was brought to the camp on January 22, 1942, after the previous 6 Jewish doctors had completed their duty or had succumbed to typhus (Drs. Mochi Făgădău and Ferdinand Gothly were two of those six doctors). Having insufficient medicine and only scarce and primitive delousing equipment, the new doctors contracted typhus as well, and a few died. Heavy snowfall delayed the arrival of bathing trains, so the prisoners remained lice infested for weeks on end. Colonel Dr. Zambra, who tormented the camp’s Jewish doctors, worsened the situation by introducing a “moral cure”—forcing ill POWs to line up in the morning in the bitter cold and to recite the Lord’s Prayer and the Ten Commandments 10 times.²

During the winters of 1941–1942 and 1942–1943, 415 Soviet POWs (393 soldiers, 22 officers) died from cold, hunger, and illness (including malaria, dysentery, enteritis, and typhus). The deceased prisoners were buried in the Slobozia Veche township cemetery, as well as in other cemeteries in the immediate vicinity of the work sites.³

Except for the prisoners deemed too weak to work and a few others who formed the Slobozia contingent—about 800 Soviet POWs in all—the rest of the prisoners were deployed to work in four places. A detachment of 1,500, commanded by Căpitan Dionisie Herlea, was placed in Giurgeni. Prisoners repaired train lines and took part in the building of a bridge over the Danube River at Hârșova. A second detachment of about 600, under Locotenent-colonel Ștefan Vasiliu, was deployed along the 120-kilometer-long (nearly 75-mile-long) Giurgeni-Urziceni highway. Small road-building detachments were at Piuia Pietrii, Țândăreni, and Urziceni, where they were housed in abandoned barns, barracks, schools, private homes, or lived outdoors. A third group of prisoners, formed exclusively of Soviet officers, was created at Fierbinți (Ialomița județ). The Fierbinți subcamp had 300 officers and 4 Serbian pilots and was located in the technical school, but due to overcrowding, it was moved in November 1941 to Barbu Catargiu castle in Maia (Ilfov județ). Căpitan Ilie Constantinescu commanded this camp. The POWs worked on a farm in Maia.⁴ A fourth group of about 1,000 POWs was allocated to landowners and small entrepreneurs (like Duru Tache, Georgescu Zamfir, N. Săceleanu) throughout the Ialomița, Ilfov, and Constanța județe.

Slobozia gendarme units guarded the POWs, while employers were responsible for providing suitable living conditions, medicine, and meals. Money paid for prisoner labor went to the II Territorial Command for covering the camp’s administrative and maintenance costs. Small amounts of 100 to 250 lei should have been paid directly to the working POWs at the end of each month, in addition to daily allocations of soap and tobacco, but often this was not the case. Living or working conditions in the subcamps did not improve for many months. This injustice, in addition to constant hunger and illness, reduced the POWs' effectiveness and motivation to work.⁵

The end of 1942, however, saw a slow but constant improvement in the general treatment of Soviet POWs at Slobozia, a trend that continued well into 1943. The new camp commanders—Mucenica and Chiribaşa—significantly improved the prisoners' accommodations, food, medicine, and hygiene. Although discipline was strictly enforced in the camp, some employers gave their laborers freedom to move about in the villages where they lived and worked.⁶

Prisoners refusing to work or those caught trying to escape were placed in the Slobozia disciplinary camp. Mostly Soviet but also U.S. and British POWs of various ranks were imprisoned in this camp. The regime in the disciplinary camp was strict: there were half-rations, daily recreation was limited to two hours, and only Russian-language newspapers or magazines, especially for reeducation, were allowed.⁷

Physical abuses against Soviet POWs were common until 1943, when the authorities abolished the practice. Military personnel and employers were ordered to refrain from hitting or beating the prisoners without formally recording the incident. The new orders, which applied also to the treatment of Romanian soldiers, provided for a verbal warning for first offenders, five blows for a second offense, and imprisonment in the disciplinary camp for a third offense.⁸

On August 29 to 30, 1944, the Romanian 10th Infantry Division and Soviet troops fought against retreating German units around Slobozia. Some 340 Germans were taken captive. The Slobozia camp prisoners eagerly participated in the fight, partly to improve their standing before the Soviet authorities. A few Soviet POWs were armed and fought alongside regular armies, but most were handed over to the Soviet authorities on September 2, 1944.

Ursu and Rădulescu were court-martialed on September 19, 1943, for the typhus outbreak in the Slobozia camp. The court acquitted Ursu, but condemned Rădulescu to six months in prison.⁹ In April 1946, Bucharest's People's Tribunal sentenced Ursu to five years' imprisonment for war crimes and inhumane treatment of Soviet POWs and Romanian personnel under his command. Ursu's sentence was revised and lengthened to 10 years in prison in May 1955.¹⁰

SOURCES For more information about the fate of Soviet POWs imprisoned in Slobozia, see Vitalie Buzu, "Lagărul de prizonieri sovietici de la Slobozia," <http://ionelperlea.wordpress.com/2009/11/07/lagarul-de-prizonieri-sovietici-de-la-slobozia/>; Andrei Şiperco, Crucea Roşie Internațională și România, 1939–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 1997); and Andrei Şiperco, Comitetul Internațional al Crucii Roșii și România, 1944–1947: Prizonierii de Război și Internați Civili Germani, Unguri și Austrieci; American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee și Ajuutorarea Evreilor (Bucharest: Editura Oscar Print, 2009).

Primary sources are available at USHMMA, in collection SRI (RG-25.005M), and in Moscow, at TsAMO and TsAFSB. For a list of deceased Soviet POWs in the Slobozia camp, see "Lagarul de Prizonieri 1 Slobozia, Judetul Ialomita," TsAMO, fond 58, opis 18003, delo 1607, pp. 3–45. Published primary sources on the Slobozia camp can be found at "Cum erau asasinati sistematic prizonierii sovietici din România: Lagărul de prizonieri No.1 Slobozia," parts 1 and 2, Scântea, 10–11 (October 1944); and a short memoir by a former Soviet POW held in the Slobozia "Fuerea" House, A. Podvinskii, "V bede," VIA 7 (2009): 144–159.

Ovidiu Creangă and Oleksandr Marinchenko

NOTES

1. Supply officer Victor Tomulescu's court deposition, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 126, file 24361, vol. 5, pp. 170–171 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, pp. 170–171); see also camp inspector Colonel Sandu Moldoveanu's court deposition, in the same collection and volume, pp. 172–174 (and verso).

2. On conscripted Jewish doctors, see Dr. Alfred Brüll's court deposition, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, p. 169 (and verso), and in the same collection and volume, see Dr. Aurel Steinberg's court deposition, p. 199 (and verso), Sergeant major Ion Duță's, p. 200 (and verso), and Dr. Maximilian Lesner's, pp. 295–296 (and verso).

3. "Lagarul de Prizonieri 1 Slobozia, Judetul Ialomita," TsAMO, fond 58, opis 18003, delo 1607, pp. 3–45.

4. Aristide Ursu's court deposition, June 1, 1945, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, pp. 157–159 (and verso).

5. Ibid.; see also in the same collection and volume, General Vasile Popovici's court deposition, pp. 175–178; for an example of a labor contract, see "Proces Verbal," December 8, 1941, in the same collection and volume, p. 238 (and verso); for a general overview of labor practices and support at the Slobozia camp, see also chief officer camp 7 Bucharest, Vasile Butmy's "Memoriu," in the same collection and volume, pp. 27–28; for guidance on POW payments and other support, see also Vintilă Davidescu, Defense Ministry General Secretary, "Deciziune Nr. 2132," November 26, 1942, in the same collection and volume, pp. 50–51.

6. Camp commander Chiribaşa's report, "Nr. 61 din 3 Noembrie 1943," USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, p. 11.

7. Camp commander Chiribaşa's "Buletin informativ și contrainformativ pe timpul dela 25 Martie la 25 Aprilie 1944" and "Buletin informativ și contrainformativ pe timpul dela 25 Aprilie la 25 Maiu 1944," USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, pp. 9–10; in the same collection and volume, see also Nocolaie Cernăianu's court deposition, June 2, 1945, pp. 162–164; Vasile Nițescu's court deposition, pp. 300–301 (and verso); and General de armată Constantin Pantazi's interrogation by Soviet authorities, TsAFSB, storage unit 18, 767.T.1.L. 108, pp. 119–121.

8. Camp commander Chiribaşa's report, "10 Iunie 1943," USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, p. 12.

9. Ursu's court deposition, June 1, 1945, pp. 157–159 (and verso) and his "Memoriu," in the same collection and volume, pp. 310–311 (and verso).

10. See prosecution's request for Ursu's arrest, on August 20, 1945, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/5, p. 77 (also p. 79); the indictment document, "Actul de acuzare," USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/7, pp. 123, 134–138; see transcript of court session, May 16, 1955, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/126/24361/1, pp. 113–114 (and verso), and the court's concluding remarks, "Note de concluziuni," in the same collection and volume, pp. 115–121.

ȘMERINCA

Șmerinca (pre-1941: Zhmerinka; today: Zhmerynka, Ukraine), a town in the Moghilev județ, in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is less than 20 kilometers (12.4 miles) west of the Bug River. Șmerinca is 70 kilometers (43 miles) north-northeast of Moghilev-Podolsk. According to the 1939 Soviet census, 4,630 Jews lived in Șmerinca, representing 17.8 percent of its population. Approximately 1,200 Jews remained in the town at the outbreak of war in June 1941, after the rest of the Jewish population relocated deeper inside the Soviet Union and Jewish men of military age were drafted into the Red Army.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Șmerinca on July 10, 1941. After the signing of the Tighina Agreement for the administration of Transnistria on August 30, 1941, Șmerinca fell under Romanian administration. The German authorities, however, controlled the Șmerinca rail station junction, which linked the northern part of Transnistria to Odessa in the south and Kiev in the northeast. The Romanian civil administration romanianized the town's name as Șmerinca (or Jmerinka) and appointed Colonel Constantin Dimitriu (1941 to 1942) and later Constantin Loghin, the former prefect of Berezovca județ (1943 to 1944) as Moghilev's prefects. It also allocated a Gendarmes Legion (Legiunea Jandarmi Moghilev), with four gendarmes platoons, and an entire Gendarmes Battalion (Batalionul Jandarmi 11) for the județ, from which the security of Șmerinca was maintained. The praetor in Șmerinca was Dr. Aurel Groza, and the chief of the praetor's office was Gheorghe Grosu.

At the end of August 1941, a Jewish ghetto was established in Șmerinca around the town's Jewish neighborhood, near the downtown market. Initially unfenced, it was eventually encircled by barbed wire. Jews were prohibited from leaving the ghetto without permission from the Jewish Council and local authorities. Convoys of Jews deported from Romania first arrived in Șmerinca in October 1941, occupying Jewish homes abandoned by their former inhabitants. The Șmerinca-Odessa rail line divided Transnistria longitudinally, and Marshal Antonescu's plan was to deport all Jews to the east of this line by the end of 1941, with the goal of transferring them across the Bug River in the following year. Although the plan was not fully executed by the time set, of the 70,000 Jews (deported and local) who lived in Moghilev at the end of 1941, 17,500 (25 percent) had already been deported east of the Șmerinca-Odessa rail line by December 1941.¹

The wearing of a yellow star sewn on the front of clothing and of an armband with a blue star was required of every Jew age 11 and older. Living conditions in the ghetto worsened during the winter months of 1941–1942, but the ghetto escaped the typhus epidemic that killed thousands of Jews throughout Transnistria. Food and wood for heating homes were in short supply.

The ghetto supplied forced labor to German construction companies that were rebuilding bridges, power stations, railroads, railcars, and warehouses in the area. The laborers worked under a regime of terror, receiving beatings for not working fast enough, while at the same time being poorly fed. Workers labored 24 hours a day, in shifts, and were usually paid 1 or 2 RKKS (Reichskreditkassenschein) per day (a loaf of bread cost on average 1.5 RKKS), in accordance with the Transnistria government's Ordinance No. 23, Article 6.²

The ghetto was led by a Jewish Council, headed by Iosif Jukelis and Adolph Herschmann. The Council oversaw the creation of ghetto departments, such as the departments of labor, food supplies, social care, and children's education. Under its administration and with support from the Relief Commission, Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Comisia de Ajutorare, Centrala Evreilor din Romania, CER) in Bucharest, the ghetto was able to set up a soup kitchen for the needy, a dining hall, a hospital (with 12 beds), an ambulatory clinic (with 3 doctors), an infirmary for contagious diseases, a laundry with delousing facility, a hospice for the elderly, a school with nine grades (for 250 pupils studying in Russian, Romanian, German, and Yiddish), and a kindergarten (for 60 children aged 6 years old or younger). Ezra Krakopolskiy was a rabbi in the ghetto's prayer house. The ghetto also had a Jewish police unit and a jail, in addition to various types of workshops (shoemaking, carpentry, and tailoring) and small factories (soap, nails, brushes, rope, liquor, and carbonated water). A Jewish theater was established in 1943. Among the ghetto's skilled specialists recognized for their advanced training were doctors Leib Drobner, Efsel Lapsker, Marc Lunchin, Ifim Lucianschi, Larissa Burstein, and Ana Neiner. There were also carpenters Avram Hochstädt and Elias Stolerman.³

Jews fleeing killing actions in the neighboring Reichskommissariat Ukraine, as well as the Jewish Soviet POWs who escaped from the Șmerinca POW subcamp, found refuge in the Șmerinca ghetto. There they received shelter, food, clothes, and medical attention. Almost 300 Jews from Brailov, for instance, were discovered hiding in the Șmerinca ghetto in the summer of 1942. The German authorities had these Jews sent back to Brailov, where they were shot on arrival, in December 1942. Although living conditions in the Șmerinca ghetto were better compared to other camps or ghettos, many basic needs went unfulfilled. Six to 15 people still lived in one room, and there were also 200 orphans in the ghetto's care. In December 1943, the Romanian gendarmes arrested hundreds of Jews from Moghilev and sent them to Șmerinca for hard labor. CER assisted the ghetto materially and financially, as did individual family members who sent money to their loved ones imprisoned in the ghetto.⁴ Partisan supporters (if not formations) were active in the ghetto, particularly toward the end of the war. The ghetto's leaders protected the partisan movement and offered them assistance (medicine, foodstuffs).

A member of the Relief Commission of CER, Fred Șaraga, visited the Șmerinca ghetto on January 5, 1943. He found 3,274 Jews (1,200 local Ukrainian Jews and 2,074 Romanian Jews) in the ghetto and left lists of material aid to be shipped to the ghetto. The aid included clothing, medicine, and windows to help the inmates fight off the cold and related illnesses.⁵ Other reports put the total number of Jews in the ghetto at 2,187 Jews (Stănculescu's January 1943 report), but this figure probably did not include local Jews.⁶ A later count, in September 1943, found 271 Jews from Romania in the ghetto, without counting local Ukrainian Jews. In June 1944, three months after the ghetto's liberation, there were still more than 1,000 Ukrainian Jews living in the former ghetto.⁷

Despite playing a critical role in ensuring the ghetto's survival until its March 1944 liberation, a Soviet military tribunal sentenced Șmerinca ghetto leader Herschmann to death on December 18, 1944, for collaborating with the occupation authorities.⁸

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of the Jews deported to Șmerinca can be found in the following publications: Vadim Altskan, "On the Other Side of the River: Dr. Adolph Herschmann and the Zhmerinka Ghetto, 1941–1944," HGS 26:1 (Spring 2012): 2–28; Albert Kaganovich and Martin Dean, "Brailov," in Martin Dean, ed., Ghettos in German-Occupied Eastern Europe, vol. 2 of The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum Encyclopedia of Camps and Ghettos, 1933–1945, ed. Geoffrey P. Megargee (Bloomington: Indiana University Press in association with USHMM, 2012), pp. 1520–1521; "Zhmerinka," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1507; "Zhmerinka," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2000), 4: 450; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); and Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 23.

Primary sources regarding the fate of the Jews and Soviet POWs deported and incarcerated in Șmerinca are available at USHMMA, in collections ANR (RG-25.002M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), DASBU (RG-31.018M), PCMCM (RG-25.002M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). For names and dates of military officers in charge of gendarmes services at the platoon and batalion levels, see USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 24, file 59, pp. 36, 46; for Herschmann's Soviet trial record, see RG-31.018M, reel 8, case no. 10875; for Fred Șaraga's report following his visit to Transnistria and to the Șmerinca ghetto, see RG-25.004M, reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, pp. 112–114; for the names of a fraction of Jewish specialists incarcerated in the Șmerinca ghetto, see RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, p. 227, and in the same collection, reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 23, n.p.; for individual money transfer receipts, see RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 5, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1504, p. 136, and in the same reel, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1506, p. 225.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Raport SSI "Nota," January 4, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.002 (PCMCM), reel 18, file 86/1941, pp. 325–327.
2. "Ordonanța Nr. 23," November 11, 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 20, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 1, p. 268 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/20/2361/1/1, p. 268); for salary rates according to various trades and professions, see "Tabel de Salarizare," RG-31.004M/1/2242/1/1, pp. 252–257.
3. Gendarmes Legion Moghilev, "Tabel nominal de evreii specialiști disponibili din raza județului Moghilev," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/23, n.p.; "Tabel nominal de medicii evreii aflați în ghetoul Moghilev și în Județ," signed by Moghilev's prefect, Colonel C. Loghin, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1562, p. 227.
4. See financial records, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/5/2242/1/1504, p. 136; and USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1506, p. 225.
5. See "Raportul oficial al comisiunii evreiești care a fost în Transnistria," January 31, 1943, signed Fred Șaraga, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, pp. 112–114.
6. "Raport în legătură cu situația evreilor aflați în ghetourile din Transnistria," USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 594–598.
7. "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 441.
8. For Herschmann's interrogation file, see USHMMA, RG-31.018M (DASBU), reel 8, case no. 10875, pp. 19–56.

SOROCA

Soroca, the seat of the Soroca județ and raion in Bessarabia in eastern Romania (today: Soroca raion, Moldova), is located on the Dniester River. It is 138 kilometers (86 miles) northwest of Chișinău and 176 kilometers (109 miles) east of Cernăuți. The number of Jews in the town of Soroca reached 5,452 in 1930, representing 36 percent of the total population, whereas the number of Jews in the Soroca județ in 1939 was 29,191. The Soviet authorities deported a few hundred Jews from Soroca to Siberia in 1940 because of their wealth and political views. Jews of military age were drafted into the Red Army in June 1941, and other Jews retreated with the Soviet administration deeper inside the Soviet Union at the outbreak of war, together about 1,135 people.¹ The remaining Jews, numbering about 4,000, remained in town.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Soroca at the end of June or the beginning of July 1941. An intensive campaign of “territorial cleansing” ensued, with a primary focus on Jews and communists. The Jewish population was rounded up and held in a few places within the Jewish area (the synagogue and Jewish hospital) in extremely crowded conditions and without food. Jewish businesses and cultural places were vandalized and Jewish books burned. The Einsatzgruppe D commando units 12 and 10a passed through the Soroca județ and town, killing Jews indiscriminately. Some 200 Jews were shot at that time in Soroca. Acting under German tutelage, but also independently, Romanian soldiers participated fully in the murder of Jews, especially in the villages surrounding Soroca.

The Romanian administration established itself in Soroca by early July 1941. The commandant of the Soroca Gendarmes Legion was Maior C. Cetățianu until August 1941; he was succeeded by Maior Dumitru Iliescu. The chief of the Soroca police was Aurelian Isar. The prefect in the Soroca județ was P. Popovici.

Wearing the yellow star and a host of other restrictions on businesses and mobility were introduced immediately. The Jews were released from the temporary camps inside the town where they had been held and confined to a small area inside the town’s Jewish district. An open ghetto comprised a few streets, guarded by police and gendarmes. Meanwhile, Jews from villages in the Soroca județ were gathered in the town’s great synagogue.² It is unclear whether all the Jews who were in the town at that time (residents as well as those from the surrounding area) were then marched to the Cosăuți Forest camp or only the rural Jews held in the Soroca synagogue were sent there. On July 24, 1941, the Soroca chief of police reported that “the city’s Jews have been interned in camps,”³ presumably in the town, whereas a report on August 11, 1941, states that the Soroca județ’s Jews were “moved to a different camp,” namely the camp in Târgu Vertujeni, without any mention of the Soroca town’s Jews. As of September 1, 1941, the Jews in the Soroca județ were detained in the following places: 1,277 Jews in the Soroca town (ghetto), 10,737 Jews in the Mărculești camp, and 24,000 Jews in the Vertujeni camp, among them the rural Jews of the Soroca județ formerly held in the Cosăuți Forest camp.⁴

The Cosăuți Forest camp was on the Dniester River, a short distance away from the Cosăuți-Iampol crossing point over the river. It was also only 5 kilometers (3 miles) north of the town of Soroca. The Jews brought to Cosăuți remained there for up to six weeks, awaiting deportation to Transnistria. The camp, which was in the forest, was unfenced but closely guarded and had absolutely no amenities. The authorities did not provide food or water, and in addition, the guards (to the lowest of ranks) embarked on a campaign of rape and despoliation using force, influence, and arms to obtain Jewish valuables and women. Hundreds of the Jews of the Soroca județ perished in the camp at that time from hunger, disease, exposure to the elements, suicide, or simply being shot for refusing to hand over personal items. Bodies were barely buried, if at all. Finally, by mid-August, the Jews were marched inland to the Vertujeni camp, due to the temporary suspension of deportations to Transnistria.⁵

After weeks of incarceration in the Vertujeni camp, enduring great deprivations that led to many deaths, the Jews of Soroca and the Soroca județ, along with a thousand others, were deported to Transnistria along two routes: a northern route passing through the town of Soroca and onto the Cosăuți bridge and another route that led southward to the Rezina-Râbnîța crossing point. Deportations began on September 16 and concluded on October 8, 1941. Convoys of 1,200 or more left the Vertujeni camp every other day for Cosăuți, stopping for one night in Soroca, most likely in the dilapidated great synagogue.

A change of guard took place at Soroca. Căpitan Victor Ramadan, an officer from the Soroca Gendarmes Legion attached to the Vertujeni camp, escorted the convoys to Soroca. He returned to Vertujeni the following day and escorted another convoy the next day. The Soroca gendarmes took over the convoys in Soroca and marched them to the Cosăuți Bridge. Marches from Vertujeni to Cosăuți were brisk, lasting three days. A few wagons accompanied each convoy to carry luggage and the elderly, disabled, or small children. Those who could not keep up were routinely shot. All of this was in keeping with the orders of Bessarabia’s chief gendarmes inspector, Colonel T. Meculescu, who provided strict deportation instructions, containing clear directions and a map, as well as a schedule.⁶

Searches and robberies took place again at the Cosăuți customs point, where the Romanian administration installed a border checkpoint before reaching the bridge. Border guards carried out body searches and removed identity papers; the office of the Romanian National Bank exchanged foreign currency for a German-issued scrip that circulated only in Transnistria (Reichskreditkassenschein, RKKS) and purchased jewelry for derisory prices.

A contingent of an exterior brigade of Jews from the Regat undertook forced labor in Soroca at some point in 1943. A part of the 8th Roads Battalion was quartered in Florești, in the Soroca județ, where the Jews repaired roads in the area, working and living in harsh conditions.⁷ Members of religious minorities in the Soroca județ were persecuted, among them Inochentists and Old Calendar Believers (Stiliști). They were tried in military courts in Iași and Chișinău. The Inochentists (112 in the Soroca județ) were deported to Transnistria in August 1942.⁸

While in Transnistria, Soroca’s Jews were scattered in camps in the Moghilev, Ananiev, Balta, and Berezovca județe. The survivors returned to Romania in March 1944. The Red Army recaptured Soroca in April 1944. The People’s Court in Bucharest tried and sentenced Iliescu and Ramadan to many years in prison for mistreating the Jews of Soroca.

SOURCES Further information regarding the fate of Soroca's Jews can be found in the following publications: "Soroca," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1218–1220; "Soroka," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 2: 372–382; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Wolf Moskovich, "Soroca," in The YIVO Encyclopedia of Jews in Eastern Europe, available at www.yivoencyclopedia.org/article.aspx/Soroca; Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 5 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Basarabia și Alte Câteva Întâmplări: Contribuții la Istoria Încercării de Exeterminare a Evreilor (Bucharest: Glob, 1947); Arkadii Mazur, Stranitsy istorii sorokskikh evreev: Vtoraiâ polovina XIX veka i XX vek (Chișinău: Editura Ruxanda, 1999); and Victor Eskenasy, "Despre 'pustiul' și Holocaustul sau Soroca anulului 1942," available at www.revista22.ro/despre-pustiul-si-holocaust-sau-soroca-anului-1942-673.html. For forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2103). Information about the persecution of Christian religious minorities under the Antonescu regime can be found in Viorel Achim, ed., Political Regimului Antonescu Față de Culetele Neoprotestante: Documente (Bucharest: Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews in Soroca are available at USHMMA, in collections ANRM (RG-54.001M and RG-54.004M), SRI (RG-25.004M), AMAN (RG-25.003M), IGJ (RG-25.010M), and DAOO (RG-31.004M). Under RG-50, USHMMA also holds a few oral history interviews by victims and witnesses of the persecution of Jews in Soroca. VHA holds 122 testimonies in six languages from survivors of the Soroca camp and ghetto.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. On the deportation of Jews from Soroca by the Soviet authorities, see the Soroca Gendarmes Legion synthesis report, June 1940, USHMMA, RG-25.010M (IGJ), reel 11, file 139, pp. 2–4. For name lists of Soviet deportees and those leaving with the Soviet administration, see also USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 129, files 313 and 314.

2. For their names, see "Tabloul sorocenilor din lagarul Soroca," USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 5, fond 696.1, file 32; see also the name list in file 31. For a testimony, see USHMMA, RG-50.233*0101, Eva Peker testimony, March 1992.

3. USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 5, fond 696.1, file 31, p. 16.

4. Statistical figures for Bessarabia, Bukovina, and Doro-hoi județ, reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 45–46.

5. USHMMA, RG-50.233*0042, Matvey Gredinger testimony, April 24, 1992.

6. Reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 84–87.

7. For details, see USHMMA, RG-54.004M (ANRM), reel 10, fond 706, inventory 1, file 522, p. 2; for treatment of Jews, see USHMMA, RG-54.001M, reel 19, file 4641; RG-25.003M, reel 41, file 7250.

8. See monthly reports August–December 1941 of the Soroca Gendarmes Legion, USHMMA, RG-25.010M, reel 11, file 139; statistical evidence for Bessarabia, 1941–1942, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 131, file 32; deportation order: RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 35, file 40010, vol. 89, pp. 23–25.

SPICOV

Spicov (pre-1941: Shpikov), a village in the Spicov raion, Tulcin județ (today: Shpykiv, Ukraine), in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located near the Bug River. It is 24 kilometers (15 miles) northwest of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 895 Jews in Spicov (representing 17.7 percent of the entire village population) and 1,291 Jews in the raion (amounting to 3.6 percent). Some of the Jewish men of military age from Spicov were mobilized by the Red Army while others retreated during the June 1941 invasion, but most stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Spicov on July 22, 1941. Spicov came under Romanian control in the fall of 1941, and its name and that of the raion were romanianized from Shpikov to Spicov. In succession, Colonels Ion Lazăr, Constantin Loghin, and Constantin Năsturaș were Tulcin's prefects. The Tulcin Gendarmes Legion commander was Căpitan Ion Fetacău. The praetor in the Spicov raion was Mihail Rusu. The mayor of Spicov was Odijenschi Ivan Emilian. He was later removed from office for assisting a Jew and allegedly possessing communist and Ukrainian nationalist literature.

In addition to Jewish community leaders, some of those killed immediately after the occupation by Einsatzgruppe D were local leaders and former and active Communist Party members. The remaining Jews were moved to one street, which became the ghetto after September 22, 1941, when Prefect Lazar issued Ordinance No. 3 for the internment of Jews of Spicov in a ghetto within three days (the fourth point in the ordinance). Jews from the surrounding area (e.g., Pecioara) were gathered there too, and it appears that a small contingent of Jews from Bukovina was also deported there.¹ The ordinance required that a Jewish police force be formed. In cases of Jewish disobedience, rebellion, or terrorism, the culprit and 100 other Jews along with him or her were to be shot. Further restrictions, particularly regarding travel, were issued by the same prefect on November 17, 1941: Ordinance No. 6 severely sanctioned Jews who traveled without authorization and threatened with a court-martial all Romanian or Ukrainian authorities who permitted Jews to depart without papers.²

In the overcrowded ghetto, the Jews lodged everywhere they could (in homes, barns, and attics), with 15 to 20 people in a single room. Life in the Spicov ghetto was punctuated by a few regular occurrences. Every morning a number of Jewish men and women aged 14 to 60 were selected for forced labor. Men were taken to clean the village's streets, and women and schoolchildren cleaned offices and other administrative buildings. Their work was never compensated in money or food.³ At night, police forces (Romanian and Ukrainian policemen and guards) raided Jewish homes and harassed and raped young women.

After almost three months, the ghetto was dissolved. In early to mid-December 1941, almost all of the Jews in the Spicov ghetto, some 850 in total (with the exception of 27, who were later expelled to the same place), were marched to Rogozna (today: Rohizna, 12 kilometers [7 miles] north of Spicov) near the Bug River, where they were held in the local ghetto.⁴ The deportation was intended to minimize the potential for a large-scale typhus epidemic in strategic locations inside the Tulcin județ. In August–September 1942, however, the Rogozna ghetto internees were deported to the Pecioara death camp, where approximately 300 of Spicov's survivors of the most cruel and torturous regime in Transnistria were liberated by the Red Army in March 1944.

SOURCES Additional information about the Spicov ghetto can be found in the following sources: “Shpykov,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 1094–1095; “Shpykov,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 398; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evrejstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij sprabocchnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 349; “Shpikov,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., The Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1172; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 48; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival and vol. 8: The Regat and Southern Transylvania, January–August 1944, Anti Jewish Legislation, Addenda (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews in Spicov are available at USHMMA, in collection DAOO (RG-31.004M). Also at USHMMA is collection RG-22.002M (Selected Records of the Extraordinary State Commission to Investigate German-Fascist Crimes Committed on Soviet Territory, 1941–1945; GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1258, which contains various declarations about the murder and ghettoization of Jews in the Spicov raion. VHA holds some 70 oral testimonies about the Spicov ghetto in four languages (English, German, Russian, and Yiddish), which are available at USHMMA as well.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Meier Teich's memoirs, fragments of which are reprinted in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 309–314.
2. Colonel Ion Lazar, Tulcin județ prefect, “Ordonanța Nr. 3,” September 22, 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 1, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 546, p. 65. For Ordonanța Nr. 6, see in the same collection, reel 7, fond 2242, opis 2, delo 76, n.p.
3. VHA #50110, Sonya Perl testimony, August 19, 1999.
4. Tulcin Gendarmes Legion's report for December 1941, “Situția evreilor din județul Tulcin la sfârșitul lunii Decembrie 1941,” reprinted as Doc. No. 127 in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 214.

STANISLAVCIC

The seat of the Stanislavcic raion, Stanislavcic is a small town in the Moghilev județ, in the northern part of Romanian-occupied Transnistria (today: Stanislavchik, Ukraine). Located near the Murafa River, it is 62 kilometers (38 miles) northeast of Moghilev-Podolsk. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 301 Jews in the Stanislavcic raion, all living in the town.¹ During the 1941 invasion of the Soviet Union, some Jews retreated with the Soviet authorities, and fewer still were drafted into the Red Army, but most stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Stanislavcic on July 17, 1941. After a short German military occupation, during which time some of the town's Jews were maltreated and their houses robbed by the Nazi SS and Ukrainian collaborators, the Romanian civil administration took control of the region in September 1941 and established a ghetto. The name of the town and raion was romanianized from Stanislavchyc to Stanislavcic (occasionally spelled Stanislavcia). The praetor in the raion was Gheorghe Iosa.²

Jews deported from the provinces of Bukovina and northern Bessarabia in Romania arrived in Stanislavcic probably in late October 1941, typically after a period of forced marches. The majority of them entered Transnistria via the Atachi crossing point over the Dniester River and made a short stop in Moghilev-Podolsk, before being sent on foot farther east or northeast toward the Bug River. The convoys of deportees were robbed of many possessions at the entry point into Transnistria, as well as en route, adding substantially to their misery.

The Jews deported to Stanislavcic were crowded for a few months inside the homes of local Ukrainian Jews. At the beginning of 1942, however, a ghetto was created on the grounds of the town's former cultural center. The perimeter was surrounded by barbed wire, and Romanian gendarmes from the Stanislavcic gendarmes post acted as guards. The chief of the ghetto was Dr. Arthur Kula, assisted by Dr. Koch. Both were Jews from Cernăuți. The chief of the Jewish police was named Badia. Wearing the yellow star was mandatory for all Jews older than age 11. The artisans and skilled Jews, as well as those fit for work, were retained in the ghetto to meet local needs; the rest—the unskilled, elderly, women, and children—were relocated to a dilapidated cattle farm in Noschiveț (today: Noskivtsi). Located 10 kilometers (6 miles) west of Stanislavcic, Noschiveț was previously called Zatiș'e, and it is by this name (spelled Zatiș'cea or Zatiș'a in Romanian) that it appears in many Romanian-language documents from the Holocaust period. This Zatiș'e should not be confused with other locations in Transnistria by the same or similar name (for example, Zatyshne, Vinnitsa oblast', or Zatiș'shya, Odessa oblast').

The camp was situated just outside the Noschiveț/Zatiș'cea village, on the grounds of a former manor house with elegant buildings and hunting grounds that had been turned into a farm after the Soviet Revolution. Having then moved to another nearby location, Alexandrovca (Oleksiiivka, 2 kilometers [1.2 miles] southwest of Stanislavcic), the farm in Noschiveț/Zatiș'cea was abandoned and soon became a ruin. When the Jews were brought there from Stanislavcic in the spring of 1942, the buildings that they occupied lacked doors, glass in the windows, beds, stoves, and running water. The entire farm looked significantly shabbier than the ghetto. The deportees improvised with what they could find to meet their basic needs. Led by Loew Shtivelman, the Jews in this camp were essentially left to die; they survived on charity, barter, seasonal fruit and vegetables left unharvested by the locals, and the rare arrival of a money order deposited on their behalf by a relative from Romania who had not been deported.³ Many perished from hunger, cold, and disease in the following winters. A mass graveyard was created outside the camp for disposing of the many corpses.

Back in the Stanislavcic ghetto, those fit for work were enlisted for forced labor beginning in the summer of 1942. Some were taken to work for the German authorities in nearby Șmerinca (sorting captured goods in military warehouses or repairing railways); others removed snow or repurposed building materials from abandoned or badly damaged houses. The pay was the food that the workers received. As unnutritious as it was, it still helped in their survival.

The Relief Commission from the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews in Bucharest (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) visited Transnistria at the beginning of 1943, stopping on January 4 in Șmerinca, some 9 kilometers (5 miles) north of Stanislavcic. The commission, led by Fred Șaraga, learned from the Jewish leaders of the Șmerinca ghetto that 200 Jews were amassed in Stanislavcic and 1,500 were in Zatiș'cea. It does not appear the commission left any aid for them at that time, but future shipments of goods most likely included both ghettos.⁴ By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Stanislavcic was 84, and there were 357 in Zatiș'cea (perhaps not counting the Ukrainian Jews in either place); on September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 81 Jews in Stanislavcic (all from Bukovina) and 331 in Zatiș'cea (206 from Bessarabia, 125 from Bukovina).⁵ In February 1944, a total of 970 Jews deported from Romania were living in the entire Stanislavcic raion, some of whom (probably around 80 or more) were in the Stanislavcic ghetto and an additional several hundred were in the Zatiș'cea camp (the rest were from the Cațmazov ghetto).⁶

At the request of the liaison staff of the German Army for Transnistria (Verbindungsstab der Deutschen Wehrmacht für Transnistrien), the Romanian Labor Office in Odessa requested in April 1943 that the Moghilev Jewish Labor Committee produce a list of building specialists from the district, including from Stanislavcic. These Jews were to be sent to Trihati, a bridge-building site in the southeastern part of Transnistria. There the selected Jews were to undertake forced labor in building a railway bridge over the Bug, a project coordinated by the Reich's Traffic Directorate in Kiev (Reichsverkehrsdirektion Kiev). The Jews were transported by train, under guard, and had to bring their personal items (blanket, bowl, and spoon).⁷ The work was demanding, and the living conditions were primitive. Sleeping in crowded barracks, the Jews were held in a fenced-in camp under strict supervision. Their promised pay consisted only of the food that they received. Many were barely dressed and in poor health soon after their arrival in Trihati, so when the cool temperatures arrived in October 1943, many suffered even more. The survivors were returned to the Moghilev District in December 1943 or January 1944.

The repatriation of the Jews originally from Dorohoi and the Regat began at the end of 1943, with only a few Jews from Stanislavcic and Zatiș'cea qualifying for it; the remaining Jews were permitted to return to Romania at the beginning of March 1944, on the eve of Red Army's recapture of Stanislavcic on March 17, 1944. Those still in the ghetto were liberated at that time.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Stanislavcic and/or Zatiș'cea can be found in the following publications: "Stanislavchik," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 2: 1233; "Stanislavcic" and "Zatiș'cea," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 482, 439; I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009); A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001); Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2004); and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vols. 1–3 (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive," HolMod 2/8 (2010): 18–26. The International Association of Jewish Genealogical Societies, International Jewish Cemetery Project, provides a description of the Stanislavcic ghetto and the Noschiveț/Zatișcea camp, along with a description of the related Jewish cemeteries: see "Stanislavchik, Vinnytsya oblast," available at www.iajgsjewishcemeteryproject.org/ukraine/stanislavchik.html.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Stanislavcic can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). VHA holds forty-two survivor testimonies in four languages (English, Russian, Hebrew, German) from Jews held in the ghetto. A list of Jews from Stanislavcic who perished during the Holocaust is available at USHMMA, ReferenceCollection\EE3507\EE3507.PDF. The names of the Holocaust victims are extracted from Yizkor books for Galicia.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR, p. 49.

2. For the praetors in the Moghilev județ, see USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reel 13, fond 2383, delo 44, pp. 9–10.

3. See an example of one such money order for pharmacist Moishe Weinstein, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 10, fond 2255, opis 1, delo 1181, p. 115.

4. For a visitor's report, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, p. 115.

5. For the March 1943 census, see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346, and for the September 1943 census, see "Suație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 458.

6. See population figures according to nationalities in the raions of the Moghilev județ, USHMMA, RG-31.011M, reel 13, fond 2383, delo 44, p. 5.

7. For correspondence between the German and Romanian authorities regarding the Trihati bridge, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 23, p. 37 and the following unnumbered pages; for the list of specialists from the Stanislavcic ghetto in June 1943, see the same collection, reel, and fond.

STEPANCHI

Stepanchi, a village in the Copaiagorod raion in the Moghilev județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Stepanky, Ukraine), is situated along the Nemiya River. It is located 37 kilometers (23 miles) north of Moghilev-Podolsk. This village should not be confused with Stepanky in the Balchi raion, Moghilev județ. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,903 Jews in the Copaiagorod raion, most of whom were living in the town of Copaiagorod; it is unknown whether any lived in Stepanchi (census data for the village of Stepanchi are not available).

The German and Romanian armies overran Stepanchi and its surroundings during the middle part of July 1941. After a short period of German military occupation, the area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Stepanski to Stepanchi (occasionally spelled Stepanca). The praetor in the Copaiagorod raion was Ion Vodă.

According to the statistical records of the Health Service of the Moghilev Prefecture, there were 371 Jews deported from Romania living in Stepanchi in October 1942.¹ An estimate by Siegfried Jägendorf, president of the Jewish Council of Moghilev (Consiliul Evreiesc Moghilev, CEM), says that 50 percent of the deported Jews in the Moghilev județ perished during the winter of 1941 from cold, hunger, and typhus, chief among other fatal diseases.² In 1945, the Soviet Extraordinary State Commission (Chrezvychainaia Gosudarstvennaia Komissia, ChGK) found that of the Jews deported to Stepanchi some 180 perished there during 1941 and 1942.³

Those deported to Stepanchi were placed in a camp, which was repurposed from the village's collective farm (kolkhoz). By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Stepanchi was 221; it is not clear whether the Ukrainian Jews were included in this figure. On September 1, 1943, without counting the Ukrainian Jews, there were 178 Jews in the camp (10 from Bessarabia, 168 from Bukovina).⁴ In February 1944, 2,339 Jews deported from Romania were living in the entire Copaiagorod raion; some were held in the Stepanchi camp.⁵

The repatriation of the Jews from the Dorohoi județ and the Regat took place in December 1943, and the orphaned Jewish children in Transnistria were returned. Only a few Jews in Stepanchi qualified for repatriation. The Red Army recaptured the village at the end of March 1944, liberating the camp. Some of the Jews were immediately drafted into the Red Army, but most made their way back to Romania amid great challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Stepanchi can be found in the following publications: “Stepanki,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 946; “Stepanki,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiï spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), pp. 301–302; “Stepanki,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 117; and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, “The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive,” HM 2:8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Stepanchi can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and GARF (RG-22.002M). VHA holds eight survivor testimonies in two languages (Russian and Hebrew) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.

2. Jägendorf memorandum, September 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, file 2699, vol. 22, pp. 257–289 (esp. p. 265).

3. USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1239, p. 17.

4. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345, and for the September 1943 census, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația

la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 457.

5. See population figures according to nationalities in the raions of the Moghilev județ, USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reel 13, fond 2383, delo 44, p. 5 (see also p. 6 for population figures according to professions).

STOROJINEȚ

The seat of the Storojineț județ in the Bukovina province, in the northeastern part of Romania (today: Storozhynets’, Ukraine), Storojineț is located near the Siret River. It is 22 kilometers (13 miles) southwest of Cernăuți and 180 kilometers (112 miles) northwest of Iași. According to Romanian censuses, in 1930 there were 2,480 Jews in the city and 15,397 in the județ; in 1939 there were 14,832 Jews in the Storojineț județ; and in September 1941, there were 4,311 Jews in the județ.¹

The Soviet authorities controlled the town from June 1940 to June 1941, closing Jewish private businesses, nationalizing Jewish estates, and shutting down religious services. On June 13, 1941, some 256 Jewish business owners and intellectuals from Storojineț were deported to Siberia.² Before the German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, military-aged Jewish men from Storojineț were drafted into the Red Army. Although some Jews retreated with the Soviet authorities, most stayed in place. The commandant of the Storojineț Gendarmes Legion was Maior Gheorghe Berzescu. The commandant of the Storojineț Army Territorial Center was Căpitan C. Cojan. The regional police inspector was M. Păun.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Storojineț on July 4, 1941. The Jews were immediately apprehended. Some were shot when rounded up, and others were beaten when in custody. Jewish homes were looted and vandalized by soldiers and their neighbors. On July 5, after gathering the Jews in the central park, Romanian authorities divided them: women and children were locked in the building of the town’s primary school, situated on Panca Street, whereas the men were housed in the high school boys’ dormitory. Prisoners in both sites did not receive food or medical attention during their internment and were guarded continuously. They stayed there for 8 to 10 days. A few Jews obtained small favors from the authorities (Mayor Petru Bruja, for example), allowing them to leave the camp to search for food, but most survived only with what they had with them. Refusing to place the Jews in a ghetto, Bruja resigned from office and was replaced by an antisemitic mayor, Dimitrie Rusu.

On July 20, 1941, the Jews locked in the two schools were gathered in a ghetto in town. The ghetto, formed in the southern part of the city, consisted of a few streets in the Jewish quarter (Gudiniți, Ieronim, Malcinschi, Lumea Nouă, and the former Nicolae Filievici Streets). Vacated earlier, the houses had been robbed by the local population and were empty. Although the ghetto was not fenced in, strict measures were introduced. The Jews were forced to wear the yellow star, a curfew was set for 7 P.M., and leaving the ghetto usually required a special written permit signed by city or military authorities. Colonel Alexandrescu, commandant of the Storoiineț Army Recruitment Center, had authority over the ghetto as well. Peasants came into the ghetto to sell produce. Searching the ghetto for “communist Jews,” the authorities placed certain Jews who had held positions during the Soviet administration in jail; they were returned to the ghetto two weeks later to be deported along with everyone else. A primitive infirmary existed in the ghetto.

The Jews stayed in the ghetto until late September 1941, after the High Holidays. The news of imminent deportation produced a great panic; a few people committed suicide.³ Deportations started in early October and ended on October 13.⁴ Approximately 1,300 Jews were assembled at the train station in town and forced into freight trains, 90 people per railcar. Escorted by Romanian gendarmes, the trains took the Jews to Mărculești in the Soroca județ. From the train station everyone walked to the Mărculești ghetto, bringing only what they could carry. After a few days’ stay in the ghetto, dwelling in and among small, filthy houses, with dead bodies buried at the entrance, the Jews walked to Soroca (while the sick were taken in wagons), before crossing into Transnistria at Iampol. On the way to Soroca, they slept in forests, eating what they could forage in the fields or obtain from bartering. It was the second half of October 1941, already cold and snowy, by the time they entered Transnistria.⁵ A subsequent transport from Storoiineț went to Edineți, in the Hotin județ. Before entering the Edineți camp, which was fenced with barbed wire, the Jews came before representatives of the Romanian National Bank. They were searched, their personal documents were confiscated, and their money and jewelry were exchanged for worthless German-issued scrip (Reichskreditkassenschein, RKKS), the currency of Transnistria. A day later, they too were taken to Transnistria and scattered among camps and ghettos in the Moghilev and Tulcin județe.

The authorities in Storoiineț retained a small number of Jews because their expertise was needed for running the city. Among them were a pharmacist, a dentist, blacksmiths, and electricians. They worked as forced laborers for the town’s city hall, hospital, and other agencies.⁶ On December 2, 1941, there were 34 Jews in the Storoiineț județ, of whom 31 lived in the city.⁷ Preparations for a second wave of deportations of Jews from Bukovina began in the spring of 1942. On April 1942, after the authorities investigated the status of the 65 Jews in the Storoiineț județ, they decided that only 26 were to be retained; the remaining 39 Jews were deemed “deportable.” On June 5, 1942, the Romanian authorities deported seven Jews from Storoiineț who in one way or another broke some laws or whose activities during the Soviet occupation had aroused official suspicion. They were transported to the Sădăgura camp, near Cernăuți; from there they embarked on a train and were transported, along with Cernăuți’s Jews, to Atachi. From Atachi they were sent to Transnistria via Moghilev-Podolsk.⁸

A handful of Jews from Storoiineț survived the camps and ghettos of Transnistria and returned in March and April 1944, when the general repatriation of Jews deported from Romania occurred. The Red Army entered Storoiineț in late April 1944. The Bucharest’s People’s Tribunal convicted Bukovina’s military and civilian leaders to many years of hard labor and confiscation of property for crimes committed against the Jews of Storoiineț.

SOURCES Further information regarding the fate of Storoiineț’s Jews can be found in the following publications: “Storoiineti,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1248–1249; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evrejtva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiy spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 303; “Storoiinets,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 950; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contributii la Istoria Romaniei: Problema Evreiasca: 1933–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Bucovina și Doroboi (Bucharest: Glob, 1945); Moses Rosen, ed., Martiriul evreilor din România, 1940–1941: Documente și mărturii (Bucharest: Hasefer, 1991); and Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Storoiineț’s Jews are available at USHMM, in collections DACkO (RG-31.006M), SRI (RG-25.004M), IGJ (RG-25.010M), AME (RG-25.006M), and AMAN (RG-25.003M). For internment in the Sădăgura camp, see also FUCER (RG-25.021M, reel 100, file III-1075). Relevant information in Soviet sources can be found in ChGK (RG-22.002, reel 15, fond 7021, opis 79, delo 69 and delo 79). The ITS contains resettlement applications of Holocaust survivors from Storoiineț; this documentation is available in digital form at USHMM. VHA holds 90 testimonies, in seven languages, about the fate of Jews from Storoiineț județ and town.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. CER census figures, 1930–1942, USHMM, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, fond 2694, vol. 17.
2. VHA #02654, Arnold Buxbaum testimony, May 18, 1995.

3. VHA #14356, Hilda Frenkel-Lockspeiser testimony, April 17, 1996.

4. Monthly information report for November 13, 1941, indicates that “all Jews had been removed from the district județ.” USHMMA, RG-25.010M (IGJ), reel 3, file 27, p. 143.

5. VHA #02654, Arnold Buxbaum testimony, May 18, 1995.

6. See the table listing their names, professions, and institutions employing them, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 89, file 182, pp. 769–770; for further information regarding forced labor for Storojineț’s Jews, see reports generated by the MSM: RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 149, file 2950, pp. 73–75; and in the same collection, reel 25, file 6531, pp. 521 (and verso), 522.

7. “Situția evreilor rămași în Provincie, pe județe,” USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 5, fond 307, opis 3, delo 10, p. 232.

8. Statistical figures and records of deportation prepared by the Bukovina Military Cabinet for the Presidency of the Council of Ministers of Romania, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 130–131, 196–197, 205, 217. For internment of Storojineț Jews in the Sădăgura camp for various periods from October 1941 to June 1942, see RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 2, fond 307, pp. 369–377.

SUHA BALCA

Suha Balca (pre-1941: Suha Balka; today: Sukha Balka), a village in the Vaselinovo raion, Berezovca județ in the southeastern part of Romania-controlled Transnistria, is located about 34 kilometers (21 miles) north-northeast of Berezovca. German and Romanian forces occupied the village in mid-August 1941, and shortly afterward, by early September 1941, authority over the village and its surroundings was transferred to the Romanian civil administration. Under this new administration, the village’s name was romanianized as Suha Balca (Suhaia Balca in some documents).

High-ranking representatives of the Romanian authorities in the Berezovca județ were Colonel Leonida Popp, who was appointed prefect in Berezovca, and his deputy, Sublocotenent Alexandru Smochină. The first commandant of the Berezovca Gendarmes Legion was Maior Ion Popescu, who was replaced by Octavian Ursuleanu. The head of medical services for the Berezovca județ was Dr. Aurel Juga. The praetor in the Vaselinovo raion, which included the village of Suha Balca, was Zacheu Buligă.

In late October and early November 1941, the Romanian authorities in Berezovca revamped a dilapidated Soviet state farm (sovkhobz) in Suha Balca and turned it into a government farm, known as Ferma de Stat Suha Balca. The farm served as a Jewish and Roma labor camp. Prisoners were placed in the several large buildings where animals and grain were once housed. The facility was enclosed and guarded by Romanian gendarmes led by a Romanian sergeant.

Initially, some 500 Jews deported from Romania were held on the farm, in addition to local Ukrainian Jews who were also brought there for forced labor. Work in the fields and inside the farm buildings (feeding animals, cleaning stables, refurbishing the farm) usually lasted for 12 hours a day, under strict discipline and surveillance. Jews imprisoned in this camp lived in filthy stables, crammed into small spaces with small windows and barred doors. A layer of straw served as beds. When their daily work was done, the laborers were forced back to the stables and kept there behind locked doors. The food that the administration distributed was a watery soup and cornmeal mush. Clothes and other personal belongings were bartered in exchange for food to the point when many Jews were covered in rags. Due to these precarious work and living conditions, a large number of those imprisoned in the camp fell ill. Some died as a result of the cold during the extremely frigid winter of 1941. Typhus alone claimed dozens of lives and infected more than 100 prisoners. Alarmed at the danger that the epidemic in the camp posed to the local population and military personnel passing through or stationed in the area, the prefect of Berezovca, who was informed about the epidemic by a camp escapee, required that the camp be inspected immediately by a medic. A doctor then visited the camp, but his treatment was limited to isolating the ill and the dying in a cellar.

Local ethnic Germans (Volksdeutsche) periodically demanded Jews from Suha Balca for forced labor in agriculture. Those unable to work or those ill were shot. At other times, Jews were murdered simply to relieve the population strain in the area in advance of the arrival of other convoys from Odessa and Romania. Thus, on September 23, 1942, 413 Jews from the Suha Balca camp were marched to Rastadt (8 kilometers [4.9 miles] west of Mostovoi), where they were murdered and their bodies incinerated by the ethnic German police (Selbstschutz).

In January 1943, workshops (ateliere) were set up in the camp, which were supplied exclusively with Jewish trained personnel (specialiști). There existed tailoring, hairdressing, electrical, accounting, and lathe workshops.¹ They were designed to be for-profit enterprises. The money from selling goods or services was intended to cover the administration’s cost of keeping the Jews in Suha Balca and to improve living conditions (which never happened, with all improvements being funded by contributions from Jewish individuals and organizations). A committee for coordinating all Jewish labor in Berezovca was also formed in January 1943, with Dr. Bruno Gross as president. He was assisted by Efraim Fleișman, Rudolf Hirchem, and Marcu Kirenman (treasurer).² Iancu Lazarovici was president of the Jewish Committee in Berezovca. Dr. Gross visited Suha Balca in February 1943, probably to gain information firsthand about the workshops that were created there.³ In August 1943, at the request of the central labor office of the Transnistrian government, Jews from the Berezovca camps were sent to repair the Tulcin-Juralevca train track. The Suha Balca camp contributed 27 Jews to that effort.⁴ The Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) assisted the Jewish laborers of Suha Balca by sending shovels and spades in November 1942 (they were received in January 1943).⁵

In the summer of 1942, Roma (Gypsies) from Romania were deported to the southern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria. In July 1943, some 100 Roma families were transported from the Landau raion to Suha Balca to work in agriculture. Their number (about 1,200 individuals in total) far exceeded the farm's housing capacity, so most lived near the farm complex in primitive huts or lived outside exposed to the elements, without basic cleaning facilities and lacking food allocations for weeks.⁶ Harvesters received (or helped themselves to) a small amount of food from the fields in which they worked, but those who did not or could not work (children, the elderly, or the sick) did not receive food. The fall of 1943 caught the Roma in Suha Balca unprepared for winter (as was the case in the winter of 1942, when many died of cold and hunger). Ion Stan, the Roma's representative, appealed to the governor of Transnistria for help. In a letter dated September 16, 1943, Stan revealed the desperate state in which his fellows lived:

Given that the weather has changed and winter is approaching, we come before you to kindly ask that you consider our situation and take necessary measures. We are naked, all the clothes that we had have become rags, since from our arrival in Transnistria we work as honest people to support our families . . . We kindly ask you, Mr. Governor, to order that a means be found to clothe us, however little, and to house us in more humane conditions during the winter, since it is now impossible to live in huts. I would like to mention that almost all the men among us have fulfilled military service, fought in war, and currently have children at the front.⁷

Weeks later, Stan's plea reached the governor who, in disbelief, ordered that the statement be verified first before sending an insignificant amount of aid (420 pairs of shoes) for the 2,620 Roma who were living in the Berezovca județ at that time. In their desperation, the Roma organized in January 1944 a workshop for manufacturing hair combs from cow horns. The aid that was acquired with the money made from selling the combs was insufficient and too late for dozens of Roma, who died in Suha Balca as a result of cold, hunger, and illness, weeks before their liberation in March 1944.⁸

According to various censuses, there were 97 Jews (Ukrainian and Romanian) in Suha Balca in January 1943 and 99 in March 1943. About the same number (105) was recorded in August 1943. In September 1943 there were 29 Romanian Jews (27 from Bessarabia, 2 from Bukovina). According to a letter from the Suha Balca farm administrator, Teodor Apolzan, there were 58 Jews and 804 Roma there on November 23, 1943.⁹ The Red Army recaptured Suha Balca in the spring of 1944 and freed those who were still in the camp at that time.

SOURCES For more information about the fate of Jews and Roma deported to Suha Balca, see "Suha Balca," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 958; "Suha Balca," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 481–482; "Suhaia Balka," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 148; Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); and Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); for a collection of documents concerning the deportation of Romanian Roma in Transnistria, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004).

Primary sources describing the treatment of Jews and Roma in Suha Balca are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and DAMO (RG-31.008M).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See letter "Nr. 11883," December 31, 1942, signed by the chief of Berezovka administrative services, George Todiraș, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 18, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 24, p. 78 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/18/2361/1/24).

2. See "Decizia Nr. 385," January 25, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/18/2361/1/26, p. 62.

3. See the official letter informing of his permission to travel and visit Suha Balca, in the permanent company of a gendarme, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/18/2361/1/26, p. 34.

4. See the list of proposed Jewish workers: "Tabel nominal de evreei propuși pentru detașamentul de lucru," and the accompanying letter requesting them, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/590, pp. 81 (and verso), 83.

5. See official correspondence between local authorities and CER, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/18/2361/1/26, pp. 6–10.

6. See letter No. 2492, July 24, 1943, signed by Landau raion's praetor, Nicolae Albu, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAOO), microfiche, fond 1594, opis 3, delo 10, pp. 30–31.

7. See Stan's full letter, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/591, p. 107.

8. See Leonida Popp's letter to Transnistria's government, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/591, p. 54; on cow horns, in the same collection and fond, delo 592, p. 136; see letter "Nr. 3203," January 20, 1944, on sweaters and shoes, p. 72, in the same collection, fond, and delo.

9. See table titled "Suha Balca," listing 97 names, probable date January 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/delo 590, p. 12 (and verso); for the March 1943 count, see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 347; "Tabel nominal Nr. 1 de întrebuințarea a evreilor din județul Berezovca Ferma Suha-Balca," dated August 2, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1, delo 590, p. 65 (and verso); for the September 1943 count, see "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 439; see Teodor Apolzan’s letter “Nr. 408,” November 23, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004/19/2361/1/592, p. 15 (and verso).

SUHA VERBA

Suha Verba, a small village in the Mostovoi raion, in the Berezovca județ (today: Mostove, Ukraine), is situated in the southeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria. The village’s exact location is unknown, but based on archival documentation, it is near Mostovoi,¹ which is 107 kilometers (66 miles) northeast of Odessa and 163 kilometers (101 miles) northeast of Chișinău.

The German and Romanian armies occupied the surrounding area on August 10, 1941, and romanianized the raion’s name as Mostovoi. The Romanian civil administration took over control in September 1941, and romanianized the name of the collective farm (kolkhoz) from Sukha Verba to Suha Verba (or Suhaia Verba). The prefect in the Berezovca județ was Colonel Leonida Popp. The deputy prefect was Sublocotenent Alexandru Smochină. The commandant of the Berezovca Gendarmes Legion was Maior Ion Popescu. The praetor in the Mostovoi raion was Dr. Victor Petrenciuc. The commandant of the Mostovoi gendarmes post was Locotenent Dumitru Pandrea.

Ethnic Germans (Volksdeutsche) populated the Mostovoi area. They underwent an intensive Nazification process concomitant with the deportation of Jews and Roma (Gypsies) in southern Transnistria. A branch of the SS Office for Ethnic German Affairs (Volksdeutsche Mittelstelle, VoMi), the organization representing the economic and cultural interests of the Volksdeutsche in southern Transnistria, was based in Landau (in the Berezovca județ), not far from Mostovoi. The head of VoMi in Landau was Obersturmbannführer Müller. In the fall of 1941, VoMi set up a Volksdeutsche extermination force, Sonderkommando Russland (SkR). A section of SkR, Bereichkommando 20 (BK 20), was stationed in Lichtenfeld, a village 15 kilometers (9.3 miles) southwest of Mostovoi (today: probably Yasnopillya, Ukraine). Its commandant was SS-Hauptsturmführer Franz Liebl (or Leibl, in some documents).²

In mid-April 1942, a remnant of the Odessa Jewish community, who had escaped the mass deportations from Odessa in January and February 1942, was deported to Mostovoi via Berezovca. Many of these Jews were picked up from Odessa’s streets as they emerged from hiding or were discovered with false documents. They were initially held for questioning in Odessa’s central prison. Those aged 16 to 48 years old, mostly men, were deported to the Vapniarca camp (in the Jugustru județ), whereas the other Jews were sent to Berezovca and then Mostovoi. Furthermore, if this deportation coincided with the deportation on April 11, 1942, of 548 Jews hospitalized in the Slobodca ghetto (just outside Odessa) and of Jewish orphaned children older than 10 around the same time, then these vulnerable categories of people were among the deportees.³ The claimed number of deportees reaching Mostovoi was 1,200, suggesting they came in one or two transports. These Jews were sent by train, crammed into cargo cars, and despoiled before embarkation.

After two days of travel, they reached the transit camp in Mostovoi where they were held in an imposing building (the former residence of a noble family) that was called “the castle” or “palace” by the deportees. The camp was not surrounded by barbed wire, but was guarded by a small group of Ukrainian auxiliaries together with Romanian gendarmes. The rooms had unglazed windows; plumbing was nonexistent. Food was not given. For weeks, the Jews lived from begging and bartering small items that they had managed to retain after repeated searches; their own clothes soon followed in the exchange, exposing the deportees to the elements.⁴ Weakened by hunger, cold, and diseases (a massive typhus epidemic had occurred months before they arrived and was still uncontained), the elderly and the young soon started to succumb. Because work opportunities and food were not forthcoming in Mostovoi, and anticipating the serious health implications for the residents of Mostovoi—civilian but especially military—resulting from another wave of epidemics, the Romanian authorities relocated all of these Jews to the Suha Verba kolkhoz at the end of May 1942.

The kolkhoz was a small farm located near several ethnic German villages. The area’s Volksdeutsche were generally inhospitable to the deportees, so barter was no longer a means of survival. The newly arrived Jews—many too young or too old or too sick to work productively—were perceived as a threat to the villagers’ livelihood. Consequently, BK 20 came to the camp several times in June 1942, murdering everyone they encountered, young or old.⁵ It is unlikely that BK killed them on the grounds of the farm; most likely, the Jews were marched to a nearby lime quarry dotted by ravines. As was customary with other SS organized murders, the Jews were ordered to undress and deposit their clothes and belongings in a designated place before being shot. These possessions were claimed by the killers and the Lichtenfeld (and/or Suha Verba) residents to whom these items were subsequently transported.

The murder of the Jews in Suha Verba was reported by the Romanian gendarmes in a monthly report to the Government of Transnistria. Thus, Colonel Mihai Iliescu, chief gendarmes inspector in Transnistria at that time, informed his superiors in the General Inspectorate of Gendarmes on June 16, 1942, as follows: “On May 27–30, this year, some 1,200 Jews were transferred in the Huliaevovka [today: Hulyaivka] gendarmes sector to be placed in Mostovoi castle Because in the castle they had no work and were exposed to hunger, they were placed in Suha Verba kolkhoz in order to be used in the fields. All of these Jews were picked up by the SS Police from the German colony of Lichtenfeld and executed by shooting.”⁶ It is possible, based on this report, to approximate a date for the shooting as the middle of June 1942. A subsequent note, sent by the same Colonel Iliescu, reported the same incident, concluding that the Jews shot by the Lichtenfeld village SS Police in Suha “have disappeared.”⁷ Although this expression was often used euphemistically in reports to suggest killing, in this particular case it may actually state a fact, namely the cremation of the bodies in Suha Verba’s limekiln. One of the few existing limekilns in the Berezovca județ that appears to have been used in the cremation of bodies was in Suha Verba (along with the one in Mostovoi).⁸ This is the only known extermination episode to have occurred at Suha Verba. The camp ceased to exist after June 1942.

The Red Army recaptured the area in April 1944. The People’s Tribunal in Bucharest tried and condemned to prison years many of Berezovca’s leaders, including Popp, Popescu, and Iliescu, for handing over or sending Jewish convoys in the direction of ethnic German villages, knowing that the Jews would be exterminated by the SS police units.⁹

SOURCES More information regarding the fate of Jews in Suha Verba can be found in the following publications: I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009); Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 5 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For studies treating Transnistria’s ethnic Germans’ participation in the Holocaust, see Eric C. Steinhart, “Creating Killers: The Nazification of the Black Sea Germans and the Holocaust in Southern Ukraine, 1941–1944” (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, University of North Carolina–Chapel Hill, 2010), available at <https://cdr.lib.unc.edu/indexablecontent/uuid:cbc90aec-ecd8-497a-b823-c7778ef9401b>; Eric C. Steinhart, “Creating Killers: The Nazification of the Black Sea Germans and the Holocaust in Southern Ukraine, 1941–1944,” BGHI, 50 (2012): 57–74; and Andrej Angrick, “Rolul Unităților ‘Sonderkommando R’ și ‘Volksdeutschen Selbstschutz’ în exterminarea evreilor în Transnistria,” in Wolfgang Benz and Brigitte Mihok, eds., Holocaustul la periferie: Persecutarea și nimicirea evreilor în România și Transnistria în 1940–1944, trans. Cristina Grossu-Chiriac (Chișinău: Cartier, 2010), pp. 119–130.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews in Suha Verba are available at USHMMA, in collections SRI (RG-25.004M) and DAOO (RG-31.004M). German prosecution records from the BA-L, Collection B 162, concerning the activities of the German leaders of BK 20 Lichtenfeld in Transnistria are available in copies at USHMMA, RG-14.101M (BA-L, Collection 162), 4731. VHA holds two testimonies (in Russian and Ukrainian) from Jewish Holocaust survivors who attest to the destruction of the Jews in Suha Verba. A filmed testimony of a witness to the mass shooting of the Jews in Suha Verba is also available in the archives of Yahad-in-Unum, in Paris: witness no. 1567UK, date of recording August 12, 2012, place of recording Kudryavka, Ukraine.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See the list of localities in Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 7, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 37, p. 7 (under Mostovoi raion).

2. See the outline of VoMi’s EG and SK units for Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 311, file 801, p. 321.

3. See correspondence and statistical figures from the Odessa Evacuation Office, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 3, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1487, pp. 100, 103; about the orphaned children’s deportation to Mostovoi, see in the same collection, reel, and fond, pp. 42, 126, 127, 129, 222.

4. See the April 1942 report of the Siguranța and Information Bureau, Berezovca Gendarmes Legion, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 83, file 23004, vol. 13, p. 145.

5. See diary entry, June 1942, in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 211.

6. See Information Note No. 189, June 16, 1942, reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 274.

7. See Information Bulletin for Transnistria covering the period June 15–July 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 83, file 23004, vol. 13, p. 147.

8. See attesting documentation in Steinhart, “Creating Killers,” p. 353, n. 1033.

9. See court depositions against Leonida Popp, USHMMA, RG-25.004M, reel 26, file 39181, pp. 248, 252–253; and in the same collection, reel 83, file 23004, vol. 13, for Popescu and Iliescu.

ȘUMILOVCA

Șumilovca, a village in the Berșad raion in the Balta județ, in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Shumyliv, Ukraine), is situated on the Bug River. It is located 61 kilometers (38 miles) north of Balta.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Șumilovca at the end of July 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the area beginning in September 1941. The village’s name was romanianized from Shumilovka to Șumilovca (or as in some documents, Șumilova or Șumilovo). The praetor in the Berșad raion was Constantin Alexandrescu.

A camp, often termed a colony (colonie), for Jews deported from Bessarabia and Bukovina in Romania was set up in Șumilovca in the fall of 1941. Having entered Transnistria via the bridge at Iampol, most of the deportees had then marched for several weeks to Șumilovca, resting in open fields in wintry conditions; some perished along the way of cold and hunger or were shot for their inability to keep up.¹

The Șumilovca camp was on the grounds of the local collective farm (kolkhoz). Its buildings (barns and cowsheds) had been badly damaged by war. A handful of Romanian gendarmes aided by local Ukrainian auxiliaries guarded the camp; German soldiers from across the Bug visited the camp on occasion. The soldiers treated the deportees brutally, confiscated their belongings at will, and sexually assaulted the young women.² There was a ban on movement outside of the camp; violators were severely punished. Epidemics (especially typhus), hunger, cold, and exhaustion led to many deaths, especially during the first two years of internment (1941–1942); many Jews continued to die thereafter, but at a slower pace.³ It is claimed that 450 people perished under these conditions.⁴ Barter, begging by the most destitute, and the generosity of local non-Jews helping those who sought aid were the key means of survival for many. Tolca Friedman was the camp's head.⁵

Able-bodied men and women undertook forced labor in various forms, including in agriculture and on military fortifications. If at all, workers were recompensed with a handful of produce.

It is claimed that the total number of Jews in Șumilovca was at some point 750.⁶ The census of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) in March 1943 listed Șumilovca as having 160 Jews; in April, the number was 153. On September 1, 1943, the camp was not listed among locations where deported Jews were sheltered.⁷ In October of the same year, however, the Balta gendarmerie recorded that there were 174 deported Jews in Șumilovca—59 men, 76 women, and 39 children—and described the site as a ghetto.⁸ The Red Army recaptured the village at the beginning of March 1944, immediately liberating the camp. Some Jews were conscripted into the army, while the rest of the survivors made their way home amid many challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Șumilovca can be found in the following publications: “Shumilov,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 1097; “Shumilov,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evrejstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiy spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 350; “Shumilov,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 400; and M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tiurmi ta getto na okupovanii teritorii Ukraini (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000), pp. 30–31. For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). See also A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in the Șumilovca camp can be found at USHMMA, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), and AME (RG-25.006M). VHA holds six survivor testimonies in four languages (English, Hebrew, Russian, and Ukrainian) from Jews held in the camp for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #24894, Hānah Meler testimony December 15, 1996.
2. The sexual assault on Jewish women in Șumilovca is mentioned in VHA #15010, Sarah Garden testimony, May 10, 1996; and VHA #26677, Miryam Klayn, February 4, 1997.
3. VHA #46155, Dora Gertsenshtein testimony, August 3, 1998.
4. “Shumilov,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia, 7: 400. The source evidence for the claim is ChGK’s report, April 1945, available in USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1242, p. 86.
5. List of ghetto and camp leaders in the Balta județ, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562. Another list of ghetto leaders in the Balta județ can be found at USHMMA, RG-68.130M (DAOO-YV), reel 2, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 666 (M-39/32), p. 142.
6. ChGK’s report, April 1945, available in USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1242, p. 86.
7. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346; for the April 1943 census, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 17, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 711, p. 11; for the absence of Șumilovca from the September 1943 census, see “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 456.
8. Statistical figures of Jews in the Balta județ ghettos, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 11, vol. 21 (Problem 33), p. 588.

SUMOVCA

Sumovca, a village in the Berșad raion in the Balta județ, in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Sumivka, Ukraine), is situated on the Bug River. It is located 62 kilometers (38 miles) north-northwest of Balta.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Sumovca at the end of July 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the area beginning in September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Sumovka to Sumovca (Șumovca or Sumofca in some documents). The praetor in the Berșad raion was Constantin Alexandrescu.

A camp, or colony (colonie), for Jews deported from Bessarabia and Bukovina in Romania was set up in Sumovca in the fall of 1941 on the grounds of the local collective farm (kolkhoz). Before arriving in Sumovca, most of the deportees had marched to Sumovca for weeks, resting along the way in open fields in wintry conditions. The buildings (barns and cowsheds) on the farm had been badly damaged by war, yet the deportees occupied them for lack of other quarters. A handful of Romanian gendarmes aided by local Ukrainian auxiliaries guarded the camp. The soldiers grabbed whatever they wished from the deportees, treating them brutally. There was a ban on movement outside of the camp; violators were severely punished. Epidemics (especially typhus), hunger, cold, and exhaustion led to many deaths, especially during the first two years of internment (1941–1942); many Jews died thereafter, but at a slower pace.¹ It is claimed that 250 people in the Sumovca camp perished in these conditions.² Wearing the yellow star was obligatory. Aron Silman was the camp's head.³

Barter, begging by the most destitute, and the generosity of local non-Jews helping those who sought aid were the key means of survival for many.⁴ However, two Jews who left the camp to beg in the village were shot by Romanian gendarmes who met them on the road; the victims' bodies were summarily thrown into the Bug River.⁵ Humanitarian aid sent by the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) in Bucharest may have reached this camp in 1943. Able-bodied men and women undertook forced labor in various forms, some in agriculture and still others inside the camp. If at all, workers were recompensed with some produce.⁶ Some form of communal religious life existed in the camp; marriages also occurred.⁷

At a point in early 1942, the number of Jews in the camp was 163 (37 men, 42 women, and 84 children). CER's census in March 1943 included Sumovca as having 140 Jews. On September 1, 1943, the camp was not listed among locations where deported Jews lived; this fact, however, does not mean that the deportees had left or that only Ukrainian Jews remained there.⁸

Roma (Gypsies) deported from Romania in the summer of 1942 were scattered within the territory of the Berșad raion, coming to live in primitive huts by the winter of that year. Some were placed in Sumovca. Evidence suggests they lived inside the camp, alongside Jews, and worked on the kolkhoz in Sumovca and nearby Voitovca. At the end of 1943 many fled the camp for fear of encountering German soldiers retreating from the other side of the Bug.⁹

The Red Army, aided by a partisan group active in the area, recaptured the village at the beginning of March 1944, immediately liberating the camp. Some Jews were conscripted into the army, while the rest of the survivors made their way home amid many challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Sumovca can be found in the following publications: "Sumovka," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 956; "Sumovka," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Evrejtva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 306; "Sumovka," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 142; and M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tiurni ta getto na okupovanii teritorii Ukraini (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). See also A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For a collection of documents on the persecution of the Roma deported from Romania, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in the Sumovca camp can be found at USHMM, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), and DAOO (RG-31.004M). VHA holds 11 survivor testimonies in three languages (English, Hebrew, and Russian) from Jews and Roma held in the camp for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #44243, Fridah Bricher testimony, August 2, 1998; VHA #13617, Sara Eidelman testimony, March 25, 1996; and VHA #21911, Golda Shtrakhman testimony, September 18, 1996.

2. "Sumovka," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia, 7: 142. The source evidence for the claim is ChGK's report, April 1945, available in USHMM, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1242, p. 113.

3. List of ghetto and camp leaders in the Balta județ, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562.

4. VHA #31759, Rakhil' Iudkovskaia testimony, May 20, 1997.

5. August 25, 1943, entry in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 12.

6. VHA #30960, Anna Dekhter testimony, May 20, 1997.

7. VHA #20494, Khana Toibman testimony, October 2, 1996.

8. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346; for the absence of Sumovca from the September 1943 census, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 456.

9. VHA #33904, Vasilii Radu testimony, September 10, 1997. See also Achim, Documente privind deportarea țiganilor, 2: 402–403 (Doc. 560).

TÂRGU JIU

Târgu Jiu, the administrative seat of the Gorj județ in the southwestern part of Romania, is situated along the Jiu River, about 408 kilometers (253 miles) southwest of Iași and 233 kilometers (145 miles) northwest of Bucharest.

In 1939, a camp was set up in Târgu Jiu for a group of Polish refugees (army personnel and civilians) who fled before the Soviet invasion of their country. Starting in the summer of 1940, however, the camp was repurposed as a detention site for political prisoners from Romania. It came under the direct control of the Romanian Interior Ministry (unlike labor camps, for example, which were under the control of the Romanian Army General Staff [Marele Stat Major, MSM]). The Interior Ministry oversaw the camp's finances and administration. The commandant of the camp was Colonel Gheorghe Zlătescu, who was succeeded by Colonel Leoveanu. Soldiers from an infantry company in Târgu Jiu guarded the camp. A number of army barracks, dark and drafty, comprised the camp, which was surrounded by barbed wire.

Jews suspected of communist activity were sent to the Târgu Jiu camp throughout 1940 and early 1941. In addition to Jews, the camp held Legionnaires, Jiu Valley miners (strike organizers), and other people deemed “suspect” in the eyes of the governing authorities. (The Legionnaires were members of the fascist movement, Legion of the Archangel Michael, [Legiunea Arhanghelului Mihail], founded in 1927 by Corneliu Zelea Codreanu. From its inception, the movement was extremely antisemitic, xenophobic, and anticommunist.) After a period of detention, the Jewish prisoners were transferred to a labor camp in (or near) Bumbești 19 kilometers (12 miles) northeast of Târgu Jiu. While there, they worked as forced laborers in a stone quarry (breaking stones with sledgehammers) for a railway segment between Bumbești and Livezeni. They slept in primitive huts and were fed each day a few slices of bread and a watery soup produced from boiled horse heads and hooves. The non-Jewish detainees held in the barracks of the Târgu Jiu camp demanded that they too be brought out to work or that the Jews be brought back to that camp, because they believed that outdoor work provided better chances of surviving the detention. In the end, the non-Jewish detainees were brought to the Bumbești camp and lived and worked in the same conditions as the Jews.¹ The number of Jews and non-Jews incarcerated in the Târgu Jiu camp in early 1941 were as follows: communists (691, of whom 48 were women), suspects (587, of whom 71 were women), striking miners (47), and Legionnaires (181, of whom 6 were women), totaling 1,506 people.

Just before the German-Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the Jews living in cities or towns close to the front line in the eastern part of Romania (in Moldavia) were deported to a number of camps inside Romania, including Târgu Jiu. With the relocation of its former detainees to Bumbești, the camp was empty so there was space available. A number of community presidents and rabbis were among the deportees. The deportations were hasty, with the Jews given little time to gather essential possessions in the one rucksack or hand luggage they were permitted to carry. Mostly Jewish men of various ages (some 16 or younger) were sent to the Târgu Jiu camp at that time, and transports took place over a period of a few weeks in mid-June and early July 1941. People were transported in train freight cars, doors and windows locked, under military guard. In addition to this humiliation, the cars were overcrowded and had no toilet facilities. Water and food were not provided, and the deportees had to obtain food from their own resources. The following groups of Jews from Moldavia were deported to Târgu Jiu camp: 266 from Dorohoi, 112 from Lespezi, 229 from Botoșani, 91 from Vaslui, 362 from Fălciu, and 431 from other Moldavian districts (județe). On August 7, 1941, a total of 1,501 Jews were incarcerated in the camp.²

Samuel Kruk with another inmate in a leather workshop in the Târgu Jiu labor camp, which housed Jews and communists, 1942–1943. USHMM WS #00029, COURTESY OF MUZEUL NATIONAL DE ISTORIE AL ROMÂNIEI.

The Jewish deportees undertook forced labor while in the camp, being assigned to various local institutions and enterprises in and around Târgu Jiu. With the weather turning cold in October 1941 and the labor camps unprepared for winter habitation, not to mention that the Jews lacked winter clothes (they had been deported in their summer clothes), the authorities reduced the number of Jews in the labor brigades by sending many back home. Still, in November 1941, 710 Jews (648 men, 59 women, and 3 youths) with various skills were still in the Târgu Jiu camp. Plans were made to keep most of them over the winter (and into 1942) as workers in the camp's workshops. Of these, 152 were deemed "unable" (untrained or too old) to work, and another 127 paid a fee and could avoid working in exchange for their meals.³

News about the the poor administration of the camp and the beating and starving of its prisoners reached the office of the State Undersecretary of the Interior Ministry, General de Corp de Armată Constantin (Piki) Z. Vasiliu, prompting him to inspect the camp in April 1942. After his inspection, he recommended that the camp commandant be replaced and meals improved.⁴

In September 1942, 400 Jews remaining in the Târgu Jiu camp were transferred to the newly opened camp for political detainees in Vapniarca (Jugastru județ). Another 700 Jews suspected of communist activity (among them former detainees who had been released earlier) were gathered from all over the country (many were on forced labor duties at that time) and sent by train to the Vapniarca camp in Transnistria together with the detainees from the Târgu Jiu camp.

Among the political prisoners interned in the Târgu Jiu camp were a number of Baptists from the Bălți județ in Bessarabia. They were interned for refusing to abandon their faith and for allegedly serving the communist authorities while Bessarabia was under Soviet control (between June 1940 and June 1941).⁵ They, too, were deported to the Vapniarca camp.

In March 1944, the Jews sent to Transnistria as political detainees were repatriated to Romania. Seven hundred Jews from that group were transported back to the Târgu Jiu camp. Although most had served their sentences, there were among them some 80 Jews who had not served their time; these prisoners were housed separately from the rest, but none were released from the Târgu Jiu camp on their return to Romania. Their release came in early September 1944 after Romania changed sides in the war on August 23, 1944. Used to keep German and Hungarian POWs, the camp was shut down in 1948.

The People's Court in Bucharest tried and sentenced to prison many officers responsible for the mistreatment of prisoners in the Târgu Jiu camp. Among those punished by the court was Vasiliu, who received a death sentence and was executed in 1946.⁶

SOURCES More information about the fate of Jewish and non-Jewish political detainees interned in the Târgu Jiu camp can be found in the following publications: Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Ottmar Trașcă, "Chestiunea Evreiască" in Documentele Militare Române, 1941–1944 (Bucharest: Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2010). For a collection of documents regarding the forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013). On the persecution of Christian religious minorities under the Antonescu regime, see Viorel Achim, ed., Political Regimului Antonescu Față de Culte Neoprotestante: Documente (Bucharest: Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jewish and non-Jewish political prisoners incarcerated in the Târgu Jiu camp are available at USHMM, in collections ANR (RG-25.002M), AMAN (RG-25.003M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). A portfolio of eight lithographs depicting the Târgu Jiu camp is available as part of USHMM's Permanent Exhibit (Douglas Smith Collection, Acc. No. 2013.395.2.1). VHA holds 32 recorded testimonies, in seven languages, from survivors of the Târgu Jiu camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #02775, Vasile Bordeianu testimony, May 23, 1995.
2. See figures for the Târgu Jiu camp in a confidential report on camps in Romania, "Situția Lagărelor," USHMM, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 17, file 86, pp. 18–19.
3. "Situție de evrei internați în lagărul Târgu Jiu, la data de 1 Noiembrie 1941," USHMM, RG-25.002M, reel 17, file 86, p. 257 (see also p. 259).
4. General de Corp de Armată Constantin Z. Vasiliu's court declaration, USHMM, RG-24.004M (SRI), reel 34, file 40010, vol. 59, pp. 1–2.
5. Information note No. 1546, Chișinău Gendarmes Inspectorate, March 3, 1942, USHMM, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 128, file 120, p. 47.
6. For court depositions and decisions regarding a number of officers indicted because of crimes against political detainees in the Târgu Jiu camp, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M, reel 20, file 40011, vol. 8; for the court investigation and condemnation of Zlătescu, see in the same collection, reel 22, file 40011, vols. 26 and 28; and reel 150, file 40011, vol. 45; for investigations into camp guards, see reel 22, file 40011, vol. 41 in the same collection.

TÂRGUL VERTUJENI

Târgul Vertujeni, a village in the Soroca raion, Soroca județ (today: Târgul Vertujeni, Florești raion, Moldova), in north-eastern Bessarabia, is located along the western bank of the Dniester River. It is 117 kilometers (73 miles) northwest of Chișinău, 71 kilometers (44 miles) southeast of Moghilev-Podolsk, and 22 kilometers (14 miles) southeast of the town of Soroca. According to the 1930 Romanian census, there were 1,843 Jews in Târgul Vertujeni, representing 91 percent of the village's population. At the outbreak of war against the Soviet Union in June 1941, many Jews from Târgul Vertujeni fled across the Dniester and retreated with the Red Army, but some remained in place. Romanian and German authorities set up a transit camp for Jews and a camp for prisoners of war (POWs) in Târgul Vertujeni.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Târgul Vertujeni in early July 1941. Immediately after the occupation, some of the remaining local Jews were rounded up and killed as part of an ethnic and political cleansing operation behind the front line undertaken throughout the Soroca județ by Romanian troops and Einsatzgruppe D. Târgul Vertujeni was 1 kilometer (0.6 miles) north of the smaller village of Vertujeni. Very often, the two locations are confused in written sources, but usually Târgul Vertujeni (also spelled Vârtejeni or Vertujeni) is intended.

A transit camp was created in Târgul Vertujeni for Jews deported from Bukovina and northern Bessarabia to Transnistria. In August 1941, the German authorities unexpectedly returned a few columns of deported Jews from Transnistria. After weeks of marching without food, water, and shelter, some 13,500 Jews, who spent several more weeks in and around Moghilev-Podolsk, reentered Bessarabia via the Iampol-Cosăuți crossing point, on the night of August 17, 1941. Once in Romanian hands, they were marched to the Târgul Vertujeni camp. Soon Jews concentrated in other camps in Bessarabia were also directed there. Thus, on August 19, 1941, a convoy of approximately 1,600 Jews from the Alexandru cel Bun transit camp in Reditu (today: Rediul Mare, Dondușeni raion, Moldova) was sent to the Târgul Vertujeni camp.¹ On August 20, another convoy of about 3,500 Jews from the Rublenița transit camp (today: Rubelnița, Soroca raion, Moldova) was also directed there. All of these Jews, some 23,000 in total, were concentrated in Târgul Vertujeni for later deportation to Transnistria.

The commandant of the camp was Locotenent-colonel Alexandru Constantinescu. A platoon of gendarmes guarded the camp, which was surrounded by barbed wire. The camp included part of the Jewish neighborhood of the village, but also extended into an open field. The Jews were crowded into the ransacked houses of local Jews. Because there were insufficient houses for the large number of deportees, many Jews slept outside. Although some bread was distributed, food was scarce, and most prisoners starved. To survive, the few Jews who still had something valuable to exchange for food bartered their possessions with locals. Guards prevented the local population from approaching the fence, so food like onions and cold pieces of cornmeal were tossed over the fence, usually by groups of youth. On a few occasions, able-bodied Jews were taken out of the camp and forced to work. Some carried stones from the bank of the Dniester up the hill where the village was, and others then paved a road with those stones.² Those who died in the camp of illness and starvation were buried in the local Jewish cemetery in communal graves. Villagers who owned horse-drawn wagons were asked to carry the corpses to the cemetery.

The deportation of the Târgul Vertujeni camp inmates to Transnistria started on the morning of September 12, 1941. Two routes were to be followed, as instructed by Bessarabia's chief gendarmes inspector, Colonel Teodor Meculescu; his orders originated from General de divizie Ioan Topor, the Romanian Army's Great Praetor. One route went north toward Cosăuți, whereas the second route went south toward Rezina, both crossing points into Transnistria. Convoys of 1,600 Jews were to be marched under escort to the two destinations, leaving the camp every other day. A few wagons were provided to carry luggage and those who could not walk (the elderly, sick, and infirm). Escorting gendarmes were instructed to shoot stragglers or anyone trying to escape. The dead bodies were summarily covered with dirt or simply abandoned as the column marched on.

A second camp at Târgul Vertujeni, the POW Camp No. 5 (Lașărul de Prizonieri Nr. 5), operated from September 1941 to February 1944, when its inmates were transported to Tiraspol. Information about the precise location of this prisoner camp has not yet emerged. It was probably based within or very near the gendarmes barracks and functioned as a small detention center until early 1944. Most likely, Jews, POWs, and others convicted of "subversive activity" were held there. The commandants of this camp were Locotenent-colonel Vasile Agafie (1941–1942) and Locotenent-colonel Mihail Cireș (1943).³

In late 1943, members of Christian religious minorities (mainly Baptists, along with other groups) unrecognized by the Romanian regime who originated from Bessarabia were interned in Camp No. 5. They were imprisoned because they refused to abandon their religious faith and convert to the Christian Orthodox faith (or to other state-recognized sects). Just as Jews were the subject of false accusations, they too were routinely accused of harboring anti-Romanian sentiments and acting against the national interest of the Romanian state. A chain of command reaching the office of Bessarabia's governor, General de divizie Olimpiu Stavrat, and involving the police and the gendarmes, was required for the arrest, trial, and internment of the Baptists. The period of internment in the camp was usually open-ended or until the authorities obtained the prisoner's signed declaration renouncing the unrecognized faith.⁴

The Red Army liberated Târgul Vertujeni in April 1944.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Târgul Vertujeni can be found in "Vertujeni," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 2: 351–352; "Vertujeni," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1389; Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Bucovina și Doroboi (Bucharest: Glob, 1945); Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986). For the fate of Christian religious minorities in Romania, see Viorel Achim, ed., Politica Regimului Antonescu Față de Culele Neoprotestante. Documente (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013), which is a compilation of more than 500 documents pertaining to the persecution of neo-Protestants; Ovidiu Creangă, "Religious Minorities during the Holocaust in Romania: Baptists and Molokans in Cetatea Albă," paper presented at the 43rd Annual Convention of the Association for Slavic, East European, and Eurasian Studies, Washington, DC, November 2011; and Dorin Dobrinu, "Religie și putere în România. Politica statului față de confesiunile (neo)protestante: 1919–1944," RPSR 7: 3 (2007): 583–602.

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews and religious minorities imprisoned in Târgul Vertujeni are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and ANR (RG-25.002M). VHA holds more than 100 video testimonies in five languages from Jewish survivors who passed through the Târgul Vertujeni camp. Testimonies from witnesses of the Târgul Vertujeni camp are available at Y-IM: T34M, testimony of Fiodor Ivanovitch Scoarta, May 29, 2012; T35M, testimony of Maria Ivanovna Istratuc, May 29, 2012; T36M, testimony of Gheorghe Ion Cherchez, May 29, 2012; T37M, testimony of Dumitru Alexandru Pascaru, May 29, 2012; T100M, testimony of Dimitri Kolesnik, May 18, 2013; and T101M, testimony of Sergei Lujantski, May 18, 2013.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Report "Nr. 120966," August 21, 1941, from the office of the Praetor of the 3rd Romanian Army to the office of the Great Praetor of the Romanian Armies, document reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 56.

2. VHA #49113, Ben Tsion Flom testimony, August 14, 1998.

3. For a complete list of camp personnel, see "Lagărul Prizonieri Nr. 5 Vârtejeni-Soroca," USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 24, file 59, pp. 31–32.

4. See tables with those arrested, home searches reports, trial files, and sentences in USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 24, fond 7687, opis 1s, delo 810, pp. 1–11; and in the same collection, delo 811, pp. 1–5 (and verso), delo 812, pp. 1–6, delo 813, pp. 1–12, delo 814, pp. 1–5, delo 815, pp. 1–7, delo 816, pp. 1–5, delo 817, pp. 1–7, delo 818, pp. 1–5, delo 819, pp. 1–6, delo 820, pp. 1–14, delo 821, pp. 1–5, delo 822, pp. 1–6, delo 823, pp. 1–7, delo 824, pp. 1–5; and trial files and accompanying documentation in the same collection, delo 679, pp. 7–19 (and verso for each page).

TARUTINO

The seat of the Tarutino raion, the town of Tarutino is in the Chilia județ, in southern Bessarabia, in the southeastern part of Romania (today: Tarutyne, Ukraine). It is 92 kilometers (57 miles) south-southeast of Chișinău and 125 kilometers (78 miles) west-southwest of Odessa. In 1930, there were 1,546 Jews in Tarutino, representing nearly 27 percent of the town's total population. A decade later, the total number of Jews was believed to have remained approximately the same. The Soviet authorities deported some of Tarutino's Jews to Siberia because of their allegedly "capitalist" and/or Zionist dispositions. Other Jews from the town retreated with the Soviet authorities, and still others were drafted into the Red Army in June 1941. How many of Tarutino's Jews remained in place is unclear, with some evidence suggesting a mass exodus before the arrival of the Romanian and German armies.¹

The German and Romanian armies occupied Tarutino at the beginning of July 1941. The local population began ransacking Jewish properties even before the Romanian soldiers entered Tarutino. The looting continued after the town's occupation: soldiers as well as civilians broke into the Jews' homes and confiscated money and valuables. Men and women of all ages were also attacked and beaten. After these events, some historians believe the Jews were rounded up and gathered in a field on the town's outskirts and held there for a short while. While in this "transit camp," some men were recruited for forced labor and sent to work. Under the pretext of being photographed for identity cards, the rest of the people were then seated on benches before a "camera" covered with a large black cloth. They were mercilessly gunned down, their bodies transported to an unmarked mass grave and buried by the few men spared for forced labor.²

On August 7, 1941, about 1,200 Jews, most likely from rural areas in southern Bessarabia—Cahul, Ismail, and Chilia Nouă—were brought to Tarutino.³ Because of the temporary cessation of deportations to Transnistria in August 1941, these Jews were crammed into large buildings in the town's Jewish area. The ghetto thus created was guarded by gendarmes from the Cetatea Albă and Chilia legions.

According to a count of the Jews on August 30, 1941, there were still close to 1,000 Jews held in southern Bessarabia's ghettos, as follows: 316 in the Chilia Nouă ghetto, 96 in the Ismail ghetto, 524 in the Cahul ghetto, and smaller numbers in the Bolgrad and Vâlcov ghettos.⁴

Orders for the deportation of all Jews from southern Bessarabia were issued in early October 1941 by the Gendarmes Inspectorate for Bessarabia, based in Chișinău. According to this deportation plan, convoys of Jews leaving the five ghettos from southern Bessarabia on October 15 were to begin a four-day march to Tarutino where, after consolidating into larger convoys, the Jews were to march for another four days along a route leading to Tighina on the Dniester River.⁵ The plan's initial phase—the southern convoys' march to the Tarutino ghetto—was followed. On October 23, 1941, the chief gendarmes inspector for Bessarabia, Colonel T. Meculescu, issued a new set of instructions for the deportation of the Jews in the Tarutino ghetto, which was set to begin on October 25. At that point, the ghetto had 2,270 Jews (most likely the 1,200 brought there at the beginning of August plus the 1,000 or so who arrived from the southern ghettos). The inspector ordered that two large convoys leave Tarutino on October 25 and October 27 and begin a three-day march to the more southern crossing point at Purcari-Iasca (and not at Tighina, as previously planned), some 70 kilometers (43 miles) northeast of Tarutino. Meculescu ordered the gendarmerie authorities in the Cetatea Albă and Chilia legions to cleanse southern Bessarabia of Jews and bury those shot for not keeping up, warning of severe penalties if he found “a single Jew in the rural or urban territory after the closing of the operations.”⁶ The Tarutino ghetto closed down at the beginning of November 1941. After crossing the Dniester River, the convoys were marched in the direction of the Bogdanovca death camp, in the Golta județ.

In May 1942, a forced labor detachment was created with Jews from the Regat. The detachment was incorporated into the 4th Roads Battalion, which was headquartered in Tarutino. The Jews repaired roads in the area, working and living in difficult circumstances until the fall of 1943, when the forced labor detachment moved westward, across the Prut River, into the Regat.⁷

In April 1944, the Red Army recaptured Tarutino, at which time the few Jewish survivors returned from Transnistria to Tarutino.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Tarutino's Jews can be found in the following publications: “Tarutino,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust, vol. 3 (New York: New York University Press, 2001); “Tarutino,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyah: Entsiklopedyah shel hayishuvim ba-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'alam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 2: 357–359; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 1 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Basarabia și Alte Câteva Întâmplări: Contribuții la Istoria Încercării de Exterminare a Evreilor (Bucharest: Glob, 1947). For the forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of Tarutino's Jews are available at USHMMA, in collections RG-54.001M (ANRM), SRI (RG-25.004M), PCMC (RG-25.013M), and AMAN (RG-25.003M). For a memorial book recounting the fate of Tarutino's Jews, see Nisan Amitai Stambul et al., eds., Akkerman ve-ayarot ha-meboz; sefer edut ve-zikaron (Tel Aviv: Society of Emigrants from Akkerman and Vicinity, 1983), especially pp. 289–291. The book is available at <http://yizkor.nypl.org/index.php?id=1180>; a part of the book translated into English is available at www.jewishgen.org/yizkor/akkerman/Akkerman.html#TOC190.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Yehuda Bronfman, “Tarutino during the Shoah,” in Akkerman ve-ayarot ha-meboz, pp. 289–290.
2. Jean Ancel, “Tarutino,” in Pinkas ha-kehillot, 2: 358–359. This information has yet to be corroborated by other sources.
3. USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 24, fond 20725, vol. 4.
4. USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 657, vol. 32.
5. Deportation instructions for the Jews of southern Bessarabia, USHMMA, RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 1, fond 706, opis 1, delo 22, pp. 53–60 (esp. pp. 55–60). Each convoy's itinerary and schedule were carefully indicated and clearly marked on the map of the area accompanying the instructions (pp. 61–63).
6. See Meculescu's instructions for the deportation of the Tarutino ghetto, USHMMA, RG-54.001M, reel 1, fond 706, opis 1, delo 22, pp. 64–66; for accompanying departure/arrival schedules and map, see pp. 67–68.
7. See the MSM's dispositions, May 2, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.013M (PCMC), reel 22, file 1, pp. 396–398.

TĂTĂREȘTI

Tătărești, seat of the Tătărești raion, Chilia județ, in southern Bessarabia, in the southeastern part of Romania (today: Tatarbunary, Ukraine), is 141 kilometers (88 miles) south-southeast of Chișinău and 114 kilometers (71 miles) southwest of Odessa. In Romanian Holocaust-era sources, the town is sometimes spelled Tătărași, probably reflecting an earlier variance, and it is occasionally assigned to the Cetatea Albă județ, which reflected the pre-fall 1941 territorial organization of Bessarabia. The Chilia județ was created in the fall of 1941 from territories belonging to the Cetatea Albă and Ismail județe. It is sometimes erroneously called the Chilia-Nouă județ, after the name of the eponymous raion that was found in Ismail județ until 1939. Finally, Tătărești town in the Chilia județ should not be confused with the present town of Tătărești that is north of Cahul, in Moldova.

The Romanian and German armies occupied Tătărești in the first part of July 1941. Immediately after its capture, the town's Jewish population, as well as the handful of Jews from nearby villages, was rounded up and concentrated in a camp, probably on the town's outskirts but within its limits. Their numbers reached close to 500 people and included people of all ages. A coordinated operation of "territorial cleansing" (curățarea terenului) of political enemies behind the front line began in Bessarabia and Bukovina by early July. During that campaign, some Jewish and non-Jewish civilians in the Chilia județ (or more accurately, Cetatea Albă județ, as it was at that time) were shot by Romanian and German soldiers as alleged communists or Soviet collaborators.

Although the existence of the Tătărești camp is documented in Romanian sources, little information has survived about its physical description or location. The camp was sometimes referred to as "Tătărași-Chilia camp" and was guarded by gendarmes from the Chilia Gendarmes Legion, which was commanded in 1941 by Maior Mihalache. The position was also held at one time by Căpitan Ion Vetu, assisted by Căpitan Petre Gheorghe.¹ Căpitan Vetu also was the commandant of the Tătărești camp.

On August 9, 1941, SS Untersturmführer Heinrich Fröhlich, based with the German Army headquarters in Chișinău, brought to Tătărești an oral order from Marshal Ion Antonescu calling for the extermination of the Jews in the camp. According to his SS officers file, Fröhlich was born in Neu Zuczka (today: Neyzuchka, 6 kilometers [3.7 miles], northeast of Czernowitz, Ukraine). As a Volksdeutsche, he was fluent in Romanian, which made him presumably a trustworthy messenger of Antonescu's order.² After consulting briefly with superiors in the Chilia Gendarmes Legion (probably with Maior Mihalache) and obtaining their permission, Căpitan Vetu drew up a protocol, cosigned by Fröhlich, and proceeded to organize the shooting of the Jews.³

The coded language used to recount the extermination of the Jews has generated some confusion as to the number of Jews shot. The protocol, for example, implies that all 451 Jews in the camp were to be shot. The reports from the Chișinău Gendarmes Inspectorate immediately following the killing of the Jews paint a different picture, however. The chief gendarmes inspector for Bessarabia, Colonel Teodor Meculescu, transmitted by telephone this message to his superiors on August 13, 1941: the Jews of the Tătărași camp were shot because, "having been taken to work in the fields, and refusing to work, they became aggressive."⁴ A week later, on August 19, 1941,

Meculescu wrote a secret note informing the Romanian Army's Grand Praetor that the number of Jews shot from the Tătărești camp was 118 Jews; the remaining 333, having "disappeared," were being "followed."⁵

The camp was closed in August 1941. By September 1941, the praetor of the Tătărești raion declared the area under his jurisdiction to be free of Jews.⁶ The remaining Jewish houses became the property of the Romanian state.⁷ In December 1941, Căpitan Vetu became a scapegoat for the regime's rare attempts to demonstrate the implementation of law and order. He was sanctioned for robbing the dead Jews of some of their valuables (gold watches, rings, and cash).⁸

The Red Army recaptured Tătărești in May 1944.

SOURCES More information concerning the Tătărești camp for Jews can be found in the following sources: Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 1 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Basarabia și Alte Câteva Întâmplări: Contribuții la Istoria Încercării de Exterminare a Evreilor (Bucharest: Glob, 1947).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in the Tătărești camp are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), ANR (RG-25.002M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). FUCER (RG-25.021M, reel 88, file III-946) also holds information about the Tătărești camp, including documents concerning the trial of the camp commandant, Căpitan Vetu.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. List of commanding personnel in the Cernăuți, Chișinău, and Odessa Gendarmes Inspectorates, 1941–1944, USHMM, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 24, file 59, p. 30.
2. Fröhlich SSO (SS Nr. 388272).
3. Protocol description reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 75–76 (Doc. No. 29). The signed handwritten transcript is reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 39. The incident involving the two officers was relayed in December 1941 by a ministerial commission assigned by Antonescu with investigating the abuses (i.e., robbing of the Jews by unauthorized personnel) in the Chișinău ghetto and along the deportation routes; also reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 67 (Doc. No. 19).
4. Report reproduced in Ancel, ed., Documents, 5:42.
5. Ibid., 5:48.
6. USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 21, fond 7517, opis 1c, delo 2, p. 80.

7. USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 21, fond 7516, opis 1s, delo 10, p. 16 (and verso).

8. USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 24, file 20725, vol. 5; see also RG-25.021M (FUCER), reel 88, File III-946.

TATAROVCA

The village of Tatarovca (today: Berezhanka, west of Obodivka, Ukraine), located in the Obodovca raion, in the Balta județ, is approximately 40 kilometers (25 miles) southeast of Tulcin. Tatarovca's total population at the end of 1941 was 890 people, mostly Ukrainians.

The German and Romanian armies occupied the area by the end of July 1941, subsequently transferring control over it to the Romanian civil administration in September of the same year. The village's name was romanianized from Tatarovka to Tatarovca. The prefect in the Balta județ was Colonel Vasile Nica, and the praetor in the Obodovca raion was Dumitru Sofian.

The Romanian administration established a ghetto in Tatarovca in the late fall of 1941. Most of the ghetto's approximately 1,200 inmates were Jews from Bessarabia and Bukovina.¹ The ghetto was initially set up on the grounds of the local collective farm (kolkhoz), and people were housed in dilapidated barns. Gradually, a small ghetto was established in the village of Tatarovca in 1942, as the deportees searched for better housing. Aided by Ukrainian auxiliaries, Romanian soldiers guarded it. Both on the kolkhoz and in the ghetto, the Jews lived in extremely crowded conditions, with a few families sharing a single room. The chief of the Tatarovca ghetto was Hersh Hendel.²

Starved and frozen, the inmates endured catastrophic conditions. A devastating typhus epidemic that erupted in December 1941 among the deportees killed nearly one thousand people of all ages; children became orphans as their parents succumbed to the disease.³ The epidemic spread beyond the ghetto to the Obodovca raion, but was more deadly in the ghetto.⁴

Although cases of typhus occurred periodically throughout 1942 and 1943, the situation improved somewhat thanks to the measures that the deportees themselves took with the limited resources that they had at their disposal. Survival was made possible through barter, begging, and the generosity of a few locals; some men and women worked as forced laborers in agriculture, being recompensed with some produce, if at all. The Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) provided some humanitarian aid on one or two occasions in 1943. The same organization also facilitated the transfer of individual sums of money from relatives not deported to a small number of deportees in the Tatarovca ghetto.⁵

Partisan groups became increasingly active in the area in the fall of 1943. One such group made contact with some Jews in the Tatarovca ghetto.⁶

The number of deportees in the ghetto in March 1943 was 350, probably not including the Ukrainian Jews; in May, the number dropped to 105 (31 men, 42 women, 32 children). A subsequent census, on October 20, 1943, recorded that the number of Jews was still 105.⁷

Soviet forces recaptured the area and liberated the ghetto in March 1944. Some Jewish survivors from the Tatarovca ghetto were then drafted into the Red Army, while most others returned to Romania.⁸

SOURCES Additional information describing the fate of the Jews deported to Tatarovca can be found in the following publications: Yitzhak Arad, The Holocaust in the Soviet Union (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2009); A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Tatarovca can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and ANR (RG-25.002M). See also Chernivtsi Jewish Survivors Organization Affidavits gathered by the Association of Former Prisoners of the Fascist Camps and Ghettos of the Chernivtsi Region, Ukraine (USHMMA, RG-31.020, microfiche no. 2, folder 2). VHA contains five Russian and Hebrew-language survivor testimonies, including the testimonies of German Bel'zer, February 23, 1997 (#27850); Zahavah Helman, March 17, 1998 (#41950); and Iakov Koifman, June 20, 1996 (#16648). The CNI of the ITS contains inquiries about ghetto inmates likely incarcerated at Tatarovca.

Alexandra Lohse and Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Ita Czin, Doc. No. 52164066; ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Ester Blaustein, Doc. No. 52285013.

2. List of ghetto and camp Jewish leaders in the Balta județ, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562. Another list of ghetto leaders in the Balta județ can be found at USHMMA, RG-68.130M (DAOO-YV), reel 2, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 666 (M-39/32), p. 142.

3. VHA #6331, Ita Shustimova testimony, November 16, 1995.

4. The account of the typhus epidemic is well preserved in the medical reports of the Balta Health Service, December 1941–May 1942, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 17, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 711; for the prefect's report after his inspection of the Obodovca raion in December 1941, see reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 659, pp. 142–143.

5. For receipts after such remittances, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 4 and reel 12.

6. VHA #33952, Eti Talis testimony, October 6, 1997.

7. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 347; for the May 1943 census, see USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 16, file 205, p. 446; for the October census, see USHMMA, RG-26.006M (AME), reel 11, vol. 21 (Problem 33), p. 588.

8. Affidavit by Grigory Yekhilevich Kravets, born 1943 in the Tatarovca ghetto, USHMMA, RG-31.020, microfiche no. 2, folder 2; ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Stephan Eckstein, Doc. No. 50965449.

TECUCI

Tecuci, seat of the Tecuci județ, in the southeastern part of Romania, is located 67 kilometers (nearly 42 miles) northwest of Galați and 188 kilometers (almost 117 miles) northeast of Bucharest. According to various Romanian censuses, there were 2,912 Jews living in the Tecuci județ (out of a general population of 181,172 residents, or 1.6 percent) at the end of 1939; in September 1941, there were 2,476 Jews in the județ, and in May 1942, there were 2,317.¹

Immediately after the joint German-Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, some 200 Jewish men (ages 18–60) from Tecuci’s rural areas were sent to the Târgu Jiu camp for political detainees in freight cars (337 kilometers, or 210 miles, southwest of Tecuci).² The basis for the deportation of these Jews (as well as of many other Jews from Moldavia) was General Ion Antonescu’s Order No. 4147, according to which adult rural Jews living between the Siret and Prut Rivers were to be interned in camps in the southern part of the country as a security measure. The same order also stipulated that the remaining rural Jews be deported to district capitals, and accordingly, the rural Jews of the Tecuci județ were deported to the city at the end of June.³ On July 1, 1941, they and the Jewish residents of the city were interned in an open ghetto in Tecuci.

The ghettoization came in response to Ordinance No. 10399 issued by the Tecuci județ Prefect, Colonel I. Stamatiu, and countersigned by the mayor of Tecuci, Colonel N. Ionașcu, and Colonel P. Zamfirescu, commandant of Tecuci Garrison. The Jews were forced to take up residence within established boundaries between a few streets and the Bârlad River in the town’s eastern part. This area was known as the Jewish quarter (Cartierul evreiesc) and it was in effect an open ghetto. Restrictions on the movement of these residents between 8 P.M. and 7 A.M. were imposed. The same ordinance also announced that 20 Jewish leaders from the Tecuci Jewish community were to be taken as hostages (“ostateci”) and held separately for the good behavior of the entire community.⁴ Additional evidence for hostage taking comes from documents found in the International Tracing Service (ITS), according to which the city had a “hostage camp” (Geisellager).⁵ The Romanian state became the owner of whatever Jewish properties remained in the small towns or villages and the former owners were not permitted to even attempt to retrieve property from them; some urban Jews, too, were expropriated of houses and businesses.⁶ Jews had to be registered in the Jewish quarter before they could travel outside of the city. All Jews were told that if they engaged in acts of “sabotage, terrorism, or aggression,” they would be shot.⁷ Leaving the city without a permit signed by the prefect was prohibited, and the wearing of the yellow star was instituted for a period of time in the fall of 1941.

From August 1941 to August 1944, Jewish men ages 18–50 years old were periodically taken from the ghetto to undertake forced labor for various state institutions and factories. The Tecuci Military Recruitment Center (Centrul de Recrutare Tecuci), whose responsibility was to enroll Jewish men for mandatory labor, enlisted 1,134 Jews for work in August 1941. Some Jewish workers ended up working for the Romanian Army, others were requisitioned in industry, while still others were allocated to road building and embankment fortifications.⁸ Ghetto conditions in Tecuci remained in effect until August 1944 when Romania switched sides in the war. After the war, Israel was a destination for some of Tecuci’s Jews.⁹

SOURCES For further information about the Tecuci ghetto and the Jewish history of Tecuci, see “Tecuci,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., The Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1300; and “Tecuci,” Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot. Romanyab: entsiklopedyah sbel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min hivasadam ve-ad le-ahar Sho’at Milbemet ha-’alam ha-sheniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), I: 138–139; Medy Goldenberg, Evreii din județul și orașul Tecuci (Bucharest: self-published, 2000). See also Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 4 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, 3 vols. (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 2, part 2 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); and Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in collaboration with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary source material documenting the fate of Jews in Tecuci can be found digitally at USHMMA, in collections RG-25.030M (ANR-G), RG-25.016M (CER), and RG-25.021M (FUCER). Additional primary source material can be found in USHMMA, RG-68.029M (ACMEOR) and RG-25.002M (ANR). VHA holds four testimonies from Jewish survivors of Tecuci. See also YVA, O11/308. The ITS holds CNI cards and CM/1 forms tracking the paths of persecution from Tecuci; this documentation is available in digital form at USHMMA.

Cristina Bejan and Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Cf. census figures assembled by the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews, Statistical department, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, fond 2694, vol. 18, pp. 14, 28, 41.
2. USHMMA, RG-25.030M (ANR_Galați), reel 24, file 5, pp. 28, 325 (see also pp. 4, 346).
3. For a copy of Antonescu's order, see Ancel, ed., Contribuții, vol. II, part 2, p. 276.
4. Ordinance No. 10399, July 1, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.030M (ANR_Galați), reel 23, file 4, p. 2
5. ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Jakob Feldman, Doc. No. 53517991.
6. USHMMA, RG-25.030M (ANR_Galați), reel 24, file 5, p. 22.
7. Ibid.
8. For distribution of Jewish labor in Tecuci, see USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 325, file 927, pp. 31–32.
9. For example, ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Schmucl Perl, Doc. No. 53138616; and ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Hana Michel, Doc. No. 53668083.

TEIȘ-TÂRGOVIȘTE

Teiș is a village near Târgoviște in the Dâmbovița județ in the southern part of Romania. It is 80 kilometers (50 miles) northwest of Bucharest and 295 kilometers (183 miles) southwest of Iași.

Immediately before the German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the Jews living near the military operations or in areas deemed strategic from an economic point of view were concentrated in camps deeper in the Regat. Such was the case of the Jews from northern parts of Moldavia and southern Bukovina, as well as the Jews from the petroleum-rich region around Ploiești in the Prahova județ. As a “security measure,” the Jews from both areas, along with the Jews of Târgoviște, were concentrated in the Teiș-Târgoviște camp, in the Dâmbovița județ.

A forced labor camp for Jews was established at Teiș sometime in July 1941. The camp was commonly referred to as Teiș-Târgoviște or Teiș-Dâmbovița in the documents from the era. A count of the Jews in internment camps in the Regat at the beginning of August 1941 listed the Teiș camp as holding 93 communists, 28 suspects (Legionnaires, most likely), and 1,121 “Jews evacuated from Ploiești.”¹

A few Jews from the Făgăraș județ were brought to the Teiș-Târgoviște camp in August 1941, as were a small group of Jews originally from Dorohoi and Bivolari (Iași județ). In all, the number of Jews in the camp reached close to 1,242 people, all of whom were men between the ages of 16 and 60.² The majority of the internees (the Jews of the Ploiești area) were force-marched to the camp for 50 kilometers (31 miles), guarded by armed gendarmes. Among them were professionals and skilled workers, including professors, lawyers, doctors, and factory workers. There were also a number of World War I veterans, some having distinguished themselves with medals for acts of bravery, and ranked officers, including reservists in the Romanian Army.³ The camp was controlled by the Dâmbovița Prefect's Office (Prefectura), but was ultimately under the authority of the Romanian Internal Affairs Ministry.

Surrounded by fences, the Teiș-Târgoviște camp consisted of five or six large barracks, rudimentary in construction and furnishings. Hundreds of people lived in each barrack, sleeping on multitiered beds. There existed a kitchen and a dining hall. Meals were basic—tea and a slice of bread for breakfast, a bowl of soup for lunch and dinner. Large groups were sent to work in the fields in columns, under escort, or worked in the camp under the eyes of armed gendarmes. Some supervised visitation was periodically allowed, and some newspapers were delivered to the camp from time to time. To prevent epidemics, a general cleaning day was instituted for washing, shaving, and repairing clothes. Roll calls took place in the mornings and evenings. Four people died while in the camp. Some cultural activities were permitted in the camp after working hours. Ilie Paiser, one of the internees, composed a “camp hymn” that was sung by the internees.⁴

In early September 1941, the Internal Affairs Ministry's undersecretary, General de divizie Ion Popescu, asked that rabbis and Jewish community leaders be freed from forced labor camps, including from the Teiș-Târgoviște camp, so they could raise funds and coordinate collections among the Jews for the country's military efforts.⁵ Furthermore, a National Defense Ministry order (No. 19.048) from September 24, 1941, released the Jews of Ploiești from the camp, but forbade those under the age of 50 from returning home to the petroleum region. They were forced to resettle in urban centers in other parts of the country (Galați, Brăila, Craiova, Brașov, Botoșani, Bacău, Arad, and Timișoara, among other places).⁶ Once in those places, they became available to local recruitment centers for forced labor. Indeed, many were soon drafted into new forced labor detachments that operated until August 1944, when Romania entered the war on the side of the Allied forces.

The camp population, therefore, decreased substantially in October and early November 1941, when most of the inmates were relocated. Some 424 Jews, however, were retained for forced labor at the Central Supplies Warehouse (Depozitul Central de Materiale) in Găești, a few kilometers south of Teiș. There they formed three work companies, each company with its own commandant, and worked in loading and unloading materials. With the exception of some 50 workers who were still needed in the Supplies Warehouse, most were sent away by November 1941. Like those before them, they too were not allowed to return home, but were relocated elsewhere in the country and were then absorbed into local or exterior forced labor detachments.⁷

The Teiș-Târgoviște camp was closed in December 1941.

SOURCES More information about the fate of the Jews held in the Teiș-Târgoviște camp can be gleaned from the following publications: “Ploiesti,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ba-kebilot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyab shel ba-yishuvim ba-Yehudiyim le-min hivaslam ve-ad le-abar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ba-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 218–224; Ion Șerbănescu, ed., Evreii din România între anii 1940–1944, vol. 3: 1940–1942. Perioada unei mari restriți (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 1997), 3: 300–306; Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 4 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For the forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom published in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews interned in the Teiș-Târgoviște camp are available at USHMM, in collections ANR (RG-25.002M), AMAN (RG-25.003M), and FUCER (RG-25.021M). For a survivor's account of the Teiș camp, containing the camp's hymn, see Eliahu Paizer, Cîntecul barăcii (Jerusalem: Cenaclul Literar "Menora," 1969). A contemporary newspaper report is Mihail Marcu, "Cum au fost internați în lagăr evreii ploieșteni," CuIs, January 18, 1945.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. "Situația Lagărelor," August 6, 1941, USHMM, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 17, file 86, p. 19.

2. For an October 1941 list of names containing 1,229 Jews interned in the Teiș camp, including the names of 4 Jews who died in the camp, see USHMM, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 144, file 2413, pp. 17–48.

3. USHMM, RG-25.003M, reel 140, file 2370, p. 474 (and verso); for name lists containing 986 internees arranged according to their military training and profession, see RG-25.003M, reel 144, file 2411, pp. 76–124.

4. Eliahu Paizer (Romanian spelling: Ilie Paiser)'s account of camp life, drawn in sketches, available at www.gazeta-dambovitei.ro/cultura/holocaust-dambovitean-marturie-evreiasca-din-lagarul-de-la-teis/.

5. USHMM, RG-25.002M, reel 17, file 86, p. 108.

6. See order issued by the Romanian National Defense Ministry, USHMM, RG-25.003M, reel 144, file 2411. For lists of Jews from the Teiș camp relocating elsewhere in Romania, see RG-25.003M, reel 144, file 2413.

7. USHMM, RG-25.003M, reel 144, file 2413, pp. 437–444; see also in the same collection, reel 141, file 2371.

ȚIBULOVCA

Țibulovca, a village in the Obodovca raion, Balta județ (today: Tsybulivka, Ukraine), in the northwestern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is situated on both sides of a small tributary of the Bug River. Țibulovca is 37 kilometers (23 miles) southeast of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 754 Jews in the Obodovca raion, representing 2.49 percent of the entire raion's population (census data for Țibulovca are not available).

The German and Romanian armies occupied Țibulovca in mid-July 1941. The village came under Romanian administration in September of the same year. Under this administration, the village's name was romanianized from Tzibulovka to Țibulovca and, alternatively, Țibulovca Nouă (New Tzibulovka) and Țibulovca Veche (Old Tzibulovka), because of the stream that divided the village into two parts. Each side had a Jewish camp/ghetto. The prefect in the Balta județ was Colonel Vasile Nica, and his deputy was Alexandru Cojocar. The commandant of the Balta Gendarmes Legion was Locotenent-colonel Ștefan Gavăț. The praetor in the Obodovca raion was Dumitru Sofian. The chiefs of the medical service in Balta were Maior Dr. Gheorghe Filipaș and Dr. Vera Decuseară.

Beginning in October 1941, convoys of Jews from Bukovina and northern Bessarabia (entering Transnistria via Iampol), as well as Ukrainian Jews from Transnistria—some 26,000 Jews in total—were marched to destinations in the Balta județ closer to the Bug. Of those, 10,000 Jews who had arrived in the area by mid-November 1941 remained in the Obodovca raion. After weeks of marching from one place to another in search of their assigned place of deportation, many of the Jews were starving and freezing, with little material or financial reserves left to barter for food.¹

Because of unsanitary conditions, a major typhus epidemic erupted at the end of November 1941 among the deportees and spread among the villagers. Local and district-level authorities, including the general hospital in Obodovca, were completely unprepared to handle the large-scale epidemic. The Obodovca raion had the highest rate of typhus in the Balta județ: of approximately 22,300 inhabitants in the raion, there were 1,300 cases of typhus detected by December 1941. This figure most likely does not include the Jews deported to the raion. On his visit to the Obodovca raion on December 7, 1941, the prefect, accompanied by Dr. Filipaș and Dr. Decuseară, found that the Jews had not yet been placed in camps or ghettos (presumably some of them were living in barns, stables, pigsties of collective farms, or abandoned school buildings near villages), and that measures had not been taken to delouse or isolate those infected with typhus. The lack of hospitals, doctors, medicine, and functioning communal baths meant that little could have been done even for the local population, let alone the Jews. The prefect's medical team recommended measures aimed at stopping the epidemic, but their implementation took months. Part of the solution to the problem, Dr. Decuseară maintained, was confiscating medical instruments and medicine from the deported Jewish doctors in the Obodovca raion to use in the local clinics.² The measure reflected the common belief among Romanian officials that the Jews were to be blamed for the spread of typhus. In the prefect's words, "the causes for the outbreak of typhus are: the bringing of Yids (jidani) from Bukovina, Bessarabia, and Transnistria in these counties (raioane) without being first deloused and disinfected."³

After a group of Jews were murdered in the basement of a house in Țibulovca, the gruesome memory of their deaths, combined with rumors that villagers were unfriendly to the Jews, spread fear among the Jews, who avoided going to the village.⁴ Still, a camp was gradually formed in a dilapidated chicken farm in which were crammed some 2,000 Jews from various passing convoys. The camp was fenced with barbed wire and guarded by Ukrainian policemen and Romanian gendarmes. Barns and other buildings in the farm lacked roofs, doors, and windows. There were no washing facilities, and melted snow provided drinking water. Heaps of rubble or destroyed structures became public latrines. Approximately 1,820 Jews died from November 1941 to January 1942 of hunger and disease, particularly typhus and typhoid fever (also malaria). Their frozen corpses were collected every few days and transported by sleigh to a ditch or an open valley for burial. These burials, however, did not occur until warmer days when the ground was less frozen; wild animals and birds tore apart the bodies awaiting interment. Life in the camp was insufferable. A few Jews committed suicide. Others bartered whatever they could for the poor food that villagers had (bread, sweet beets, pig lard, and potatoes).⁵

In the spring of 1942, the Government of Transnistria ordered that deported Jews organize for labor duties and set up workshops. At that time the Jews who could find work as tailors, smiths, or seasonal workers with the locals left the camp and moved in with them. They worked in exchange for housing and a little food. The remaining Jews moved into the homes of local Ukrainian Jews or other abandoned houses, with several families sharing a room; thus the Țibulovca ghettos were formed.

A Jewish committee was formed in Țibulovca. The Jewish labor committee in Țibulovca Nouă included the chief of the colony, Professor Martin Reinisch; the deputy chief, lawyer Bercu Steinfeld; treasurer Jora (or Iora) Engler; and secretary Moritz Nagler. Țibulovca Veche's chief was Herș Weinisck. These and other intellectuals in the ghetto had held positions in state institutions prior to deportation.⁶ Jews who before being deported had practiced or studied medicine were recruited to work as local doctors throughout the Balta județ. Thus, Dr. Heinrich Anderman of the Țibulovca Veche ghetto worked as the doctor in Britava, and Dr. Eti Aschenazi from the same ghetto was the doctor in Pasațeli II (both in the Balta județ).⁷ Medicine for the needs of the Jews in the Țibulovca ghettos was procured from the Obodovca ghetto, which was larger and better equipped. A Jewish police unit also was formed, its main duty being that of gathering laborers for work duties on farms or for road repairs. The Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) sent financial and material aid to Țibulovca Veche (for further distribution to both ghettos), and family members who had not been deported sent money to individuals in the ghettos.⁸

On May 5, 1942, there were 208 Jews in Țibulovca Nouă and 182 in Țibulovca Veche.⁹ At the end of 1942 and beginning of 1943, there were 270 Jews in Țibulovca Nouă: 88 men, 149 women, and 33 children. In the same period, there were 214 Jews in Țibulovca Veche: 72 men, 88 women, and 54 children. By September 1943, the combined number of Jews in Țibulovca Nouă and Țibulovca Veche was 390 (17 from Bessarabia, 373 from Bukovina), excluding Ukrainian Jews.¹⁰

In early March 1944, 51 orphans under the age of 18 were repatriated to Romania from the Țibulovca ghettos.¹¹ A few weeks later, the Red Army liberated Țibulovca. Surviving Jews returned to their homes, walking long distances or riding on military vehicles. The Red Army recruited able-bodied male Jews to work near the front line digging trenches or in coal mines inside the Soviet Union, neither of which appealed to the Jews who survived the Țibulovca ghettos.

SOURCES Additional information about the Țibulovca ghettos can be found in the following sources: “Tsiulevka,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 1046; “Tsiulevka,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 337; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), pp. 335–336; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 49; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986). For information about rescuers of Jews in Țibulovca, see Israel Gutman et al., eds., The Encyclopedia of the Righteous Among the Nations (Europe, part II) (Jerusalem: Keterpress, 2011), 5: 366–367, 395–396 (articles are also available at http://db.yadvashem.org/righteous/familyList.html?placeTemp=Tsybulevka&results_by=family&placeFam=Tsybulevka&language=en).

Primary sources documenting the fate of local and deported Jews in Țibulovca are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and ANR (RG-25.002M). At USHMMA, there are approximately 35 oral testimonies (in seven languages) of Jewish survivors, including two testimonies of Ukrainian rescuers of Jews from Țibulovca (Yevdokiya Kostyuk, and Tudosiy and Olga Litovchuk).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See correspondence from the Balta prefecture to the Government of Transnistria, Medical Service, December 4, 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 659, p. 145 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/659, p. 145).

2. "Proces Verbal," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/695, pp. 142–143 (esp. p. 143).

3. Prefect report, December 4, 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/659, p. 145 (verso).

4. VHA #49523, Bernhard Guttman testimony, March 24, 1999.

5. VHA #3364, David Finger testimony, June 20, 1995; VHA #5363, Henia Donenfeld testimony, August 10, 1995.

6. "Tabel de membrii Biroului de Organizarea a Muncii Evreilor din Jud. Balta și a Comitetelor evreiești din Jud. Balta pe data de 1 Septembrie 1943," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1562, n.p.; "Tabel nominal de evreii din raionul Obodovca care au fost funcționari de stat și familiile lor," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/15/2358/1/110, pp. 12–13 (and verso).

7. "Referat," August 5, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/22, n.p.

8. "Tablou de remiterile de ajutoare colectiv de la 18 Februarie 1942 până la 12 Decembrie 1942," reprinted in AnceI, Documents 5: 306–314 (esp. p. 311). For individual aid, see "Tabel de remiterile facute evreilor din tara deportati in Transnistria si aflati la Ţibulovca Veche (raion Obodovca, jud. Balta)," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1567, p. 494; and for Ţibulovca Nouă, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/4/2242/1/1501, p. 160.

9. "Numărul evreilor din Jud. Balta pe raioane," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/2358/1/717, p. 42 (verso). A count, "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," in AnceI, Documents, 5: 346, gives a different figure (490 Jews for both ghettos). For the May 5, 1943, census, see "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați în lagărele din Județul Balta, la 5 Mai 1943," USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 16, file 205, vol. 2, pp. 446–447.

10. "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 440.

11. Tables with names and ages of the repatriated children are available in AnceI, Documents, 5: 553–556.

TIMIȘOARA/LP NO. 17

Timișoara was the main city in the Timiș județ, in the southwestern part of Romania. An important administrative and cultural center in the (Romanian) Banat region, the city is located some 410 kilometers (255 miles) northwest of Bucharest. Colonel Alexandru Nasta was the prefect of the Timiș județ, and Eugen Pop was the mayor.

In the autumn of 1940, while Romania remained neutral, the German construction company, Organisation Todt (OT), built a large prisoner of war (POW) camp in Timișoara with local labor. The camp was located on the east side of the Timișoara-Arad Highway (today: Romanian National Road 69) on the city's northern outskirts. The camp was built on the Kopony estate, an area of 17 hectares (42 acres) belonging to the aristocratic Kopony family.

The camp was surrounded by two high barbed-wire fences, almost 9 meters (29.5 feet) apart. Watchtowers equipped with machine guns were placed in three of the camp's four corners.

Large wooden barracks were built in the camp. The exact number of barracks is unknown, but the number of 50 is often cited. Each barrack was 100 meters long and 10 meters wide (328 × 32.8 feet) and could hold 100 people in cramped conditions. The camp's normal capacity was estimated to be between 5,000 and 6,000 people. Some of the barracks were used as warehouses, and there was a cafeteria and an infirmary. The Kopony mansion, a large two-story building, housed the camp's commanding office. The nuns running the Marienheim monastery (of the Roman Catholic Order of Notre Dame) neighboring the camp also ran a small hospital for camp prisoners in an adjacent building belonging to the monastery.

Oberst Henlein (or Heublein) commanded the Wehrmacht troops stationed in Timișoara in preparation for the German attack on Yugoslavia in April 1941. After the attack, Yugoslav Army POWs were transported to Timișoara by rail. The POWs were initially placed in smaller temporary holding camps near Timișoara at Săcălaz, Remetea, Bucovăț, and Moșnița Nouă where they were separated by nationality. Serb POWs were concentrated in the main camp at Timișoara for deportation to Germany as forced laborers, whereas Yugoslav POWs of Romanian, German, Hungarian, or Croat origin stayed in those holding camps for a few more weeks before their repatriation to Yugoslavia, Hungary, or Germany. During this period of confinement, the Romanian authorities staged cultural and religious activities for ethnic Romanian prisoners and offered them educational materials in the Romanian language.¹ Serb POWs received less humane treatment. Some died from battle wounds or sickness, or in escape attempts (they were usually shot), but most suffered from starvation.²

After the joint German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the camp came completely under Romanian jurisdiction and was renamed prisoner camp (Lagărul de Prizonieri, LP) LP No. 17. The camp was administered by the VI Territorial Command under the command of Colonel Cavaropol. Beginning in September 1941, Soviet POWs captured on the Eastern front were also sent to LP No. 17. The total number of prisoners reached almost 7,000 over the three years of Romanian control. Living conditions inside the camp were poor. The POWs lacked shoes and clothing, and the rations were not nutritious. The approach of the frigid winter of 1941 wreaked havoc among the many POWs whose health had already been weakened after weeks of detention and poor treatment since their capture. That winter a typhoid fever epidemic claimed a small number of victims. The subsequent winter, 1942, however, revealed the ineffectiveness of the camp authorities' preparation; despite the preventive measures taken to combat epidemics like typhus, dozens of POWs, soldiers and officers alike, perished that winter. The total number of victims recorded by the Soviet authorities for that and the following winter (1943) was 95: 73 were regular soldiers, 21 were officers, and 1 was a noncommissioned officer. It is likely that the total number was higher.³

In accordance with the orders of Colonel I. Stănculescu, commander of all POW camps in Romania, state-owned and private entities were permitted to hire POWs as laborers. The Furnir Deta, a factory producing veneer, employed Soviet labor from LP No. 17. While working in the factory and benefiting from a greater degree of freedom, some POWs escaped and crossed the border into occupied Yugoslavia, where they eventually joined groups of Josip Broz Tito's Partisans.

The camp remained under Romanian jurisdiction for several months after August 23, 1944, when Romania joined the Allies against Nazi Germany. Surprised by the sudden decision to switch sides, the Wehrmacht garrison in Timișoara surrendered without a fight, while German and Hungarian forces tried unsuccessfully to recapture the city. In September 1944, a delegation of the regional organization, "Patriotic Defense" (Apărarea Patriotică), distributed humanitarian assistance (food, medicine, cigarettes, and money) to the POWs. The camp was formally handed over to the Soviet authorities with the arrival of the Red Army in Timișoara in October 1944. The Soviets operated the camp to confine some 30,000 to 35,000 Hungarian and German POWs before their deportation as forced laborers to the Soviet Union. In March 1945, major epidemics of typhus, typhoid, and dysentery resulted in the deaths of as many as 9,000 Axis POWs at this site. The camp formally closed in 1946.

SOURCES More information about the fate of the Soviet POWs held in LP No. 17 in Timișoara can be found in the following publications: Constantin C. Gombos and Ioan Rado, Dincolo de sârma ghimpată, Lagărul . . . Din istoria lagărului de prizonieri din Timișoara, 1941–1945 (Timișoara: Eurostampa, 2011); and Vali Corduneanu, "Lagărul de prizonieri din Timișoara—o istorie care se cere cercetată și scrisă," available at www.stindard.ro/historicum/cordun1.pdf; for a more general study of the Soviet POWs in Romania, see Vasile Popa, "Prizonierii Sovietici în România (1941–1944)," available at www.once.ro/sesiuni/sesiune_2007/9%20prizonieri_popa.pdf; for a description of the ICRC activity among the POWs in Romania, see Andrei Șiperco, Crucea Roșie Internațională și România, 1939–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 1997).

Primary sources regarding the fate of the Soviet POWs in Timișoara LP No. 17 are available at TsAMO. The Romanian press published propagandistic, but useful, articles on the camp: Timpul, RTim. Also useful is the following pro-communist publication from the Banat region: Comitetul regional din Banat al Aparării Patriotice, eds., Apărarea Patriotică contra teroarei fasciste (Timișoara, 1945), esp. 92–94. A photograph of the camp appears on p. 92. For Romanian transcripts of the Soviet interrogations of Antonescu government officials regarding camps for Soviet POWs in Romania and the treatment of Soviet POWs therein, see Radu Ioanid, ed., Lotul Antonescu în ancheta SMERȘ, Moscova, 1944–1946 (Iași: Polirom, 2006).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. "Traiul celor 4000 prizonieri Români proveniți din fosta armată Jugoslavă," Timpul, May 15, 1941, p. 3. The figure of 4,000 includes ethnic Romanian prisoners from Curcani and Vlașca. For the latter camp, see photos in Timpul, May 18, 1941, p. 1; and in the same newspaper, May 15, 1941, p. 1. There were additional camps for Yugoslav POWs of Romanian origin in Curcani (Ilfov județ), Odăile (or Odaia, Teleorman județ), and Bălănoaia (Vlașca județ, today Teleorman județ), A. Dumitrescu Jippa and Octavian Matea, "Timocenii printre noi," RTim, 1943, pp. 53–57.

2. In countering such claims, see "Hrana prizonierilor sârbi din lagărele din Timișoara," Timpul, May 18, 1941, p. 3.

3. "Dosarul cuprinzând tabelele nominale ale ostașilor din armata Rosie decedați în lagărele din România. Intocmite in conformitate cu adresa nr. A.G.M. 132 din 5 Decembrie 1944 a Comisiunii Aliată de Control din Romania," TsAMO, fond 58, opis 18003, delo 1607, p. 2; but see also in the same collection a list of deceased prisoners, "Lagarul de prizonieri 17 Timișoara," pp. 545–554.

TIMIȘUL DE JOS/LPRA NO. 18

Timișul de Jos, a village in the Brașov județ, is in the central part of Romania in a mountainous region, 9 kilometers (5.5 miles) south of Brașov and 134 kilometers (83 miles) northwest of Bucharest.

A camp for American prisoners of war (Lagărul de prizonieri de război americani, LPRA) was established in Timișul de Jos by the spring of 1943. After the bombing raid on the Ploiești oil refineries on August 1, 1943, the camp admitted its largest number of prisoners of war (POWs) in September and October 1943. In addition to U.S. prisoners, the camp also held five Yugoslav POWs (officers and noncommissioned officers, [NCOs]), two British NCOs, and two British civilians (actually Zionists from Palestine who had parachuted into Europe on an Allied mission). Before arriving at Timișul de Jos, the prisoners had been held in a transit camp in Bucharest. The German authorities in Romania asked for and were handed a small group of U.S. and British POWs to be taken to the Reich for interrogation. The POWs in question were returned unharmed to Bucharest three weeks later and transferred to Timișul de Jos.¹

The camp commandant was Căpitan Gheorghe Butoliu, who was succeeded by army majors Mihai Cavaropol and Alexandru Mateescu. Initially a subcamp of the Vlădeni camp for Soviet POWs (Lagărul de Prizonieri Sovietici, LPRS), the Timișul de Jos camp became independent and was assigned the designation LPRA No. 18 at the beginning of 1943. It was occasionally referred to as Timiș or Timiș-Brașov.

LPRA No. 18 consisted of several large structures, some residential and others auxiliary (cafeteria, laundry, and showers). The houses were formerly used as resorts for Romanian state employees. A Catholic chapel existed on the grounds. A barbed-wire fence surrounded the camp, and a few Romanian gendarmes stood guard.

The prisoners were airmen of the United States Air Army Forces (USAAF) and the Royal Air Force (RAF). After capture, they were searched, their uniforms removed, and valuables confiscated. In accordance with the 1929 Geneva Convention, they were housed according to rank. Officers were quartered in a large residential house, similar to a villa, whereas the NCOs occupied a smaller house (and later two houses). The officers' house was equipped with a large dining room, a clean kitchen, and two bathrooms with showers and flush toilets. The bedrooms were clean and comfortable. Nutritious meals were served three times a day, and supplementary food could be bought from an inn across the camp. Officers received monthly stipends allocated by the Romanian Army General Staff (Marele Stat Major, MSM) in lieu of regular salaries in conformity with the Geneva Convention of 1929. In September 1943, there were 19 officers, and by January 1944 there were 40; the latter number remained stable in June 1944 and likely beyond. The Senior Allied Officer (SAO) was Major William H. Jaeger.

The NCOs' situation was less comfortable. Lodged in crowded and less sanitary conditions, they received a stipend insufficient to supplement their inadequate meals. Such meals consisted mostly of ersatz coffee, bean soup, bread, and mashed potatoes. Poor bathing and cooking facilities added to their frustration. Two POWs were shoeless, and all of them lacked warm winter clothing. A few NCOs soon displayed signs of malnutrition and required hospitalization. The number of NCOs grew from 44 in September 1943 to 70 in January 1944. The camp spokesman was Sergeant Fred D. Randall and then later Captain Wallace C. Taylor assisted by Dutch Rear Admiral (schout-bij-nacht) L. A. C. M. Doorman (an escaped POW from the Reich). The number of NCOs rose to 120 prisoners in May 1944.²

Some cultural life existed for the NCOs. A Romanian Catholic Mass was celebrated a few times, and later English Protestant services were held as well. The POWs were free to listen to the radio in the dining room. Walking, exercise, playing cards, and other games were allowed. Interaction with Romanian civilians or the Soviet POWs who served as camp orderlies was restricted.

Representatives of the Swiss Legation in Bucharest, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), and the Romanian Red Cross (Crucea Roșie din România, CRR) visited the camp a few times between late September 1943 and June 1944. They observed the living conditions, noted complaints, and evaluated the commandants' disposition. The inspection reports were transmitted to the U.S. Legation in Bern and relayed to the U.S. State Department.³

The reports resulted in substantially improved conditions for the NCOs. Beginning in January 1944, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Affairs Minister Mihai Antonescu and other Romanian authorities responded by increasing the NCOs' stipends, improving rations, and allowing aid packages. Mail exchanges became possible as well.⁴ In March 1944, the MSM, together with Marshal Ion Antonescu, approved Romanian-language instruction for POWs and for movies to be shown.⁵ Monsignor Andrea Cassulo, the papal nuncio in Romania, donated money for the POWs' Christmas celebrations in December 1943. Marshal Antonescu and his wife, Maria, visited the camp in March 1944. He promised additional privileges for the POWs, including visits throughout the country, provided they pledged not to escape.⁶

In fact, there were a few escape attempts, none apparently successful. The first attempt in October 1943 was not punished, but subsequent attempts incurred severe penalties, including the sacking of a camp commandant and increased camp restrictions. It became common practice to beat recaptured escapees and send them for correctional punishment to the Slobozia camp for Soviet POWs (LPRS No. 1), located 102 kilometers (63 miles) east of Bucharest. On November 16, 1943, six U.S. and two British NCOs escaped from Timișul de Jos. Recaptured shortly thereafter, they were beaten and transported to Slobozia where they spent 30 days in confinement under strict discipline.⁷ Sergeant Reginald Douglas Collins and Staff Sergeant Huntley made a last attempt to escape on August 22, 1944—a day before Romania switched sides in the war and the anticipated release of all prisoners—by hiding in a disguised closet in a camp dormitory. A thorough search of the camp revealed the two concealed prisoners, who were then severely beaten by Mateescu and his staff, in violation of the Geneva Convention.

Health care was available inside the camp and at nearby hospitals. A general practitioner and a dentist periodically visited the camp. Prisoners with more serious medical needs were treated at military hospitals in Brașov, Sinaia, and Ploiești. They also received visits and support from the Protecting Power delegates.

The POWs were released from the Timișul de Jos camp shortly after August 23, 1944, when Romania switched sides in World War II. All prisoners were transferred to a camp in Bucharest and left Romania safely at the beginning of September 1944. On his repatriation to the United Kingdom, on January 5, 1945, Sergeant Collins made a formal charge against Mateescu for maltreating him following his attempted escape.⁸

SOURCES Further information regarding U.S. and other Allied Powers POWs held in the Timișul de Jos camp (LPRA No. 18) can be found in Andrei Șiperco, Crucea Roșie Internațională și România, 1939–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 1997). Șiperco's volume includes a group photo displaying American POWs at the military hospital in Sinaia. Among the photographed prisoners is the ICRC delegate, Charles Kolb, along with a few CRR representatives, who were visiting that day. Regarding the imprisonment of U.S. POWs and those of other Allied Powers in the Slobozia correctional camp, see Vitalie Buzu, "Lagărul de prizonieri sovietici de la Slobozia," at <http://ionelperlea.wordpress.com/2009/11/07/lagarul-de-prizonieri-sovietici-de-la-slobozia/>.

Primary sources documenting the experience of U.S. POWs and those of other Allied Powers in Timișul de Jos (LPRA No. 18) are available at USHMMA, in collection PCMCM (RG-25.013M). A substantial collection of camp inspection reports regarding U.S. POWs in Romania can be found at NARA, Records of the Office of Provost Marshal General (RG-389), box 2155. On the mistreatment of one of the British civilians in the camp, see "Ill-treatment of British civilian internee at prisoner of war camp, Timisul de Jos near Brasov, Romania, April 1944," dated February to November 1945, WO 311/934, TNA; and UNWCC, available at USHMMA as RG-67.041M.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. U.S. Legation, Bern, to U.S. Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, October 13, 1943, NARA, RG-389 (Provost-Marshall General's Office), box 2155, n.p. A name list of most of the U.S. POWs follows the letter.
2. Airmail letter, U.S. Legation in Bern, to U.S. State Department, Special War Problems Division, June 28, 1944, NARA, RG-389, box 2155, n.p.
3. Reports of September 28, 1943 (Camp Report No. 1), October 30, 1943 (Camp Report No. 2), and January 20, 1944 (Camp Report No. 3), NARA, RG-389, box 2155. Summary transmissions of these reports between the Swiss and the American agencies, including other reports about subsequent visits made by delegates of the CCR and ICRC, can be found in the same location.
4. Reports by ICRC delegate, Charles Kolb's camp visits, November 29, 1943, and January 5, 1944, NARA, RG-389, box 2155, n.p. Also, see the visits of CRR's staff, Mrs. Ioan, January 24, 1944, in the same location, n.p.
5. MSM Order, March 7, 1944, and Marshal Antonescu's approval, USHMMA, RG-25.013M (PCMCM), reel 6, file 175, p. 45. See also ICRC letter, November 17, 1943, NARA, RG-389, box 2155, n.p.
6. Copy of telegram, April 14, 1943, NARA, RG-389, box 2155, n.p.
7. Such incidents are noted in various camp reports: see, for instance, the reporting regarding the attempt of the eight prisoners to escape on November 16, 1943, in Camp Report No. 3, January 5, 1944; and in Kolb's report following his camp visit on November 29, 1943, NARA, RG-389, box 2155, n.p.
8. Collins affidavit, USHMMA, RG-67.041M (UN-WCC), reel 22, folders PAG-3 / 2.0: 114–117 United Kingdom vs. Romanians, Registered No. 1–2, fr. 2954–2956.

TIRASPOL

A raion and județ center, Tiraspol (today: in Moldova), in the western part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located near the Dniester River. Tiraspol is 92 kilometers (57 miles) northwest of Odessa. According to the 1939 Soviet census, Tiraspol had 11,764 Jews, about 30 percent of the city's total population. At the outbreak of war against the Soviet Union, some of the Jews retreated with the Red Army (to Odessa, for example) and some military-age men were drafted into the army, but most stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Tiraspol on August 8, 1941. Together they established Transnistria's first military and administrative capital at Tiraspol before moving it to Odessa in February 1942. Soon after the occupation, a large number of local Jews and active communist leaders were rounded up and shot by Einsatzgruppe D, assisted by Romanian Army troops. This killing operation was aimed at eliminating "undesirable" groups of people from behind the front line. The victims, who numbered approximately 10,000, were buried in unmarked mass graves. An agreement between German and Romanian officials, signed at Tighina, near Tiraspol, on August 30, 1941, gave Romania immediate control over Transnistria. Authority over Tiraspol was transferred to the Romanian administration at the beginning of September 1941. The prefect in Tiraspol was Colonel Georgescu Pompiliu, and the commandant of the gendarmes was Maior Nicolae Iacobescu. Căpitan Ion A. Ionescu, succeeded by Locotenent Ionel Popescu, was the city's police chief and the Tiraspol ghetto's military commandant.

Approximately 1,100 Jews deported from Romania crossed the Dniester River into Transnistria at the Tighina-Tiraspol crossing point during the deportations of 1941 and 1942, according to the Transnistria Gendarmes Inspectorate's report of September 9, 1942.¹ After a short stop in Tiraspol in miserable conditions, the Jews were marched to camps near the Bug in the Golta județ, where many perished due to cold, illness, and starvation, and many others were shot. A small ghetto was established in Tiraspol in early 1942 to house Jews who would serve the growing needs of the Romanian and German officers and institutions in the city. The initial ghetto population was not more than 30 people, all Jewish specialist workers brought from other ghettos, particularly the Moghilev-Podolsk ghetto.² Gradually, the ghetto grew to 100 Jews (men, women, and a few children), and by the end of 1943, there were 256 inmates. Of them, 156 were from Romania, the rest being Ukrainian Jews deported from other places in Transnistria.³ The ghetto area expanded as the number of deportees increased. At one time it included only a few houses, amounting to 18 rooms, and then it gradually extended to a few streets.⁴ A fence was eventually erected, and the ghetto was under the constant guard of three to four Romanian gendarmes.

Life inside the ghetto at first was filled with restrictions, but over time the Romanian authorities' interdictions were relaxed. Going in and out of the ghetto was not allowed without a permit, and permits were usually granted only for work purposes. Food was brought into the ghetto by two representatives who were permitted to leave under escort to buy food. Ghetto roll calls occurred regularly.⁵ A dentist by the name of Goldsman (Romanian: Goldțman) headed the ghetto, after taking over from Izrael Silberman, who proved to be a corrupt leader. A committee was formed from Goldsman's colleagues—Bandel, Evitco, Leo Drux, Iancu Braunstein, and Marcu Maier—as well as a few dedicated women, who assisted him in running the ghetto.

Local Romanian authorities came to rely on the services provided by the Jews. For that reason, the authorities, beginning with Maior Iacobescu, provided for some basic necessities and made certain the Jews were treated fairly by employers. Most of the Jews worked in the newly created ghetto workshops (atelierie), as well as in several of the city's offices, small factories (soap and canning), restaurants, and the train station. Among the workshops, the most established were the tailoring, boot-making, hairdressing, and dress and lingerie shops. A dental office and a medical office also functioned in the ghetto.⁶ The ghetto covered part of its expenses from the money obtained from selling the workshops' products and from rendering services to the government and the army. Private sums of money and packages from family members or friends who remained in Romania were also usually received, even if with delays.⁷ The Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) also provided food and clothing packages in the second part of 1943.

In 1943 a Torah scroll smuggled into the ghetto was read by a rabbi from the ghetto, assisted by a cantor (a doctor from the Regat), in religious services.⁸ Jewish High Holidays in 1943 were observed, and a number of art shows were staged to increase morale among deportees.

In addition to the ghettoized Jews, other Jews were held in 1943 in Tiraspol's forced labor centers and prisons. One hundred Jews from Transnistria were jailed in the city's prison for committing various offenses. Some 400 Jews (of whom 156 were brought from the Tulcin județ peat fields) worked as temporary forced laborers in an army uniform recycling center. Another 100 worked in a collection center where different products were gathered before being sent to Romania, and another 100 worked in a vehicle repair center. The living situation of these Jews was far worse than of those living in the ghetto. They lacked nutritious food, clothing (some were partly naked), and basic accommodations.⁹ Two large camps of Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) existed in Tiraspol and held 5,820 POWs.

Repatriations of Jews originally from the Dorohoi județ and the Regat, and of former state functionaries and war veterans, took place in December 1943 via Tiraspol, which had become a repatriation center for Jews from the central and southern regions of Transnistria.¹⁰ Orphaned children, up to 15 years of age, from the Balta ghetto orphanage and other orphans from the Tiraspol județ were also repatriated through Tiraspol in early March 1944. Before boarding trains destined for various cities in Romania, the deportees were deloused, clothed, and fed nutritious food. This was made possible due to the efforts of CER, whose representatives worked in partnership with the Tiraspol ghetto committee members and with Romanian military and civilian authorities in Tiraspol and Tighina.¹¹

At the end of 1943, several delegations visiting Transnistria came to the Tiraspol ghetto, among them representatives of CER, a group of Catholic clergy led by Andrea Cassulo (the papal nuncio in Romania), and a group from the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

The German authorities retook control of the city and its bridges at the end of March 1944. Although the ghetto had been disbanded a few months earlier, many convicted Jews remained in the city's prisons and were not released before the Germans came. The Germans shot most of them, approximately 1,000, before the Red Army liberated Tiraspol on April 12, 1944. The People's Court in Bucharest investigated Tiraspol ghetto leader Izrael Silberman and Romanian military officials in Tiraspol for the inhumane treatment of Jews.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Tiraspol can be found in the following publications: "Tiraspol," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 981; "Tiraspol," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1308; "Tiraspol," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 195; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Iacov Geller, Rezistența Spirituală a Evreilor Români în Timpul Holocaustului (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2004).

Primary sources regarding the fate of Jews in the Tiraspol ghetto are available at USHMM, in collection DAOO (RG-31.004M). For the Tighina Agreement, see RG-31.004M, reel 18, fond 2359, opis 1c, delo 1, pp. 61–62 (and verso); additional lists of Jews from the Tiraspol ghetto can be found at RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, file 2699, vol. 22; for CER's involvement in the repatriation of Romanian Jews, including the orphaned children, from Transnistria via Tiraspol, see RG-25.016 (ANR, fond CER), reel 1, file 4 and 5, as well as reel 7, file 52 in the same collection; for the repatriation of Jews from Tiraspol ghetto, see also RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 17, fond 680.1, file 4643.2; Romanian court investigations against Izrael Silberman are located at RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 39, file 40030, vol. 11 (continuing into reel 40, file 40030, vol. 11), and for court investigations into the shooting of Jews and Russian citizens in Tiraspol, see RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 41, file 108233, vol. 31; and reel 125, file 21535, Operating Archive vol. 7. The Soviet Extraordinary Commission's report on Tiraspol can be found at RG-54.001M (ANRM), reel 14, fond 1026/32. VHA holds 153 video testimonies in nine languages from Holocaust survivors who passed through the Tiraspol ghetto.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Report No. 9.318, USHMM (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 152.

2. Name lists of Jews in the Tiraspol ghetto: "Tabel de evreii din ghetoul Tiraspol," June 9, 1942, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 3, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1488, p. 122 (USHMM, RG-31.004M/3/2242/1/1488, p. 122).

3. "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 441.

4. For a list of allocated rooms in the ghetto and the families occupying them, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M/3/2242/1/1488, p. 123 (verso).

5. List of instructions governing the ghetto: "Consemn pentru garda și evreii din Ghetoul Tiraspol," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/3/2242/1/1488, p. 124.

6. VHA #40708, Chana Klinger testimony, February 9, 1998; for Jewish workers employed in various institutions, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/22, n.p.

7. "Stat nominal pentru plata evreilor meseriași de la ghetoul Tiraspol pe luna Martie 1942," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/9/2255/1/1227, p. 11 (see also p. 12 for April 1942 payments).

8. VHA #23467, Salo Sternhell testimony, December 22, 1996.

9. "Report asupra repatrierii evreilor deportați în Transnistria, prin punctul Tighina-Tiraspol," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 527–538 (esp. pp. 528–350).

10. For a name list of war veterans, disabled, widows, and state functionaries, see "Tabel nominal de evreii: văduve, invalizi, decorați de război, pensionari și fosti funcționari de Stat aflați în Ghetoul Tiraspol," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/14/2264s/1/10, p. 35.

11. "Raport asupra repatrierii copiilor orfani evrei din Transnistria prin punctul Balta-Tiraspol," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 576–586.

TIRASPOL/LPRS NO. 5 AND NO. 11

Tiraspol, a city in the Tiraspol județ in the western part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is situated on the eastern side of the Dniester River, Tiraspol is located about 92 kilometers (57 miles) northwest of Odessa.

After the German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, Tiraspol was occupied on August 7, 1941. Subsequently, the Romanian civil administration of Transnistria established its first capital at Tiraspol, before moving its capital to the larger city of Odessa in February 1942.

A Romanian camp for Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) was created in Tiraspol in the fall of 1941, followed by a second camp shortly thereafter. Following the occupation of Transnistria, the Romanian gendarmerie searched the area for Soviet soldiers. In one such instance, 300 Soviet soldiers were captured in the Odessa raion in November/December 1941. Officers were sent to the camp in Tiraspol, and the rest were sent to the Soviet POW camp in Timișoara (in western Romania).¹ Tiraspol's two camps and their respective subcamps were under the jurisdiction of the Headquarters Rear Area for the East (Comandamentul Etapelor de Est).

By the spring of 1943, there were 5,820 Soviet POWs held in Tiraspol's two camps and subcamps. The first camp in Tiraspol was known as Camp No. 5 (Lagărul de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici Nr. 5, LPRS) until late 1943, when its name was apparently changed to Camp No. 12. The camp commandants were Maior Ion Lăzăroiu (1942 and 1943), followed by Maior Nicolae Grosu (1942) and Locotenent-colonel Constantin Manoliu and Constantin Bantaș (in 1943). Camp No. 5 had 3,996 Soviet POWs in the following eight subcamps: 426 prisoners were held in the building of a Tiraspol train station; Sucleia, 1,405 prisoners; Calcatova-Balca, 736 prisoners; Pavlovca, 110 prisoners (all subcamps in the Tiraspol județ); Tașlăc, 155 prisoners (Dubăsari județ); Golta, 285 prisoners (Golta județ); Odaia, 414 prisoners (Tulcin județ); and Șmerinca, 465 prisoners (Moghilev județ).

The General Inspectorate of Gendarmes allocated 21 officers (including the commandants), 22 noncommissioned officers (NCOs), and 644 troops for the running of Camp No. 5 and its subcamps. Additional personnel (officers and soldiers) ran the Șmerinca and Tașlăc subcamps.

The second camp in Tiraspol was known as Camp No. 11 (Lagărul de Prizonieri Nr. 11). Commanded by Locotenent-colonel Victor Ioanid, it held 1,824 Soviet POWs and comprised the following subcamps distributed around Transnistria: Birzula (Râbnița județ), 250 prisoners; Odessa, 287 prisoners in six smaller camps; Vacarjani with 30 prisoners, Manarov/Mândrova with 50 prisoners, and Manheim with 50 prisoners in the Odessa județ; Elsass (Tiraspol județ), 50 prisoners; Bilaevca (Ovidiopol județ), 107 prisoners; and Tighina (Tighina județ, Bessarabia), 199 prisoners. A total of 16 officers (including the commandant), 13 noncommissioned officers (NCOs), and 340 soldiers (supplemented as needed) were allocated for the running of Camp No. 11 and its subcamps.²

Living conditions in the camps and subcamps were harsh. During the frigid winter of 1941–1942, Soviet POWs suffered extreme cold, sleeping on the floor or on self-made beds of hay and wood, in unheated rooms. They lived in overcrowded conditions, lacked winter clothes, and were fed meals that were not nutritious. These factors, combined with the camp commanders' general lack of interest in the POWs' condition, led to the widespread incidence of illnesses, such as tuberculosis and typhus. Delousing facilities did not exist until the camps became a health hazard to the gendarmes and the local population. By that time, dozens of POWs had already died. The situation improved only slightly in the spring of 1942, when Soviet POWs were outfitted with better clothes, deloused, and were assigned doctors (usually Jews undertaking forced labor) to care for them. However, medical supplies were in short supply for civilians and prisoners because Romanian soldiers received priority.

Throughout 1942, Soviet POWs from Tiraspol's camps were deployed as forced laborers throughout Transnistria. The employment of prisoners was by contract between the camp commandant and either a județ prefect (or a representative from the prefect's office) or a director of an enterprise. The contract typically stated what type of work was involved, the number of prisoners required, the number of gendarmes allocated to guard the prisoners, and the labor remuneration. The contract also stipulated each party's responsibility regarding the prisoners' food, maintenance, and transport, but these stipulations were rarely met.

At the end of 1941, 554 Soviet POWs (ages 17 to 40) were brought from Tiraspol Camp No. 5 to the Șmerinca POW camp to work for German railway construction firms. The Romanian authorities took over most of the administration of the Șmerinca camp from the Germans in January 1942 and allocated 1 officer, 2 noncommissioned officers (NCOs), 1 doctor, and a contingent of 30 gendarmes to guard the prisoners. The prisoners were crammed into three wooden barracks, each barrack having three rooms, and they slept on communal bunkbeds. The rooms were dirty and lice infested. Pea or lentil soup (distributed by the Germans) was served three times a day for working prisoners and twice a day for those stationed in the camp. Two hundred grams (7 ounces) of bread per prisoner per day were also given. Prisoners suffered from furunculosis and scabies, due to the lack of washing facilities, soap, delousing equipment, and medicine, in addition to illnesses resulting from vitamin deficiencies.³ In the summer of 1943, Moghilev județ's prefect, Colonel Modest Isopescu, requested that prisoners be transferred to farms to work in agriculture and that they be replaced by deported Jews.⁴

In the summer of 1942, Golta's prefect, Locotenent-colonel Modest Isopescu, hired 800 Soviet prisoners from Tiraspol Camp No. 5 to work as laborers in Golta's state farms (sovkhoses) and forests.⁵ Payment per day/per prisoner was established at 120 lei (or 2 Reichskreditkassenschein [RKKS]), with the rate increasing in March 1943), which covered meals, tobacco, and soap. Working hours were from 6 A.M. to 7 P.M. in the summer season (shorter in winter), with a one-hour lunch break and some additional free time on Wednesdays and Sundays for personal hygiene (washing clothes, medical checkups, etc.). Working prisoners were entitled to an additional 150 lei (or 2.25 RKKS) per month as a form of salary. In a rare gesture of kindness, the hiring authorities ordered that each prisoner be given a half roll of sponge cake (cozonac) for Easter in April 1943.⁶ On the Soviet POWs' return to the camp in Tiraspol in May 1943, the farms provided bread and sheep cheese, which were distributed in small portions to each prisoner.

As observed by one Soviet POW held in the German-run camp at Nicolaev and subsequently transferred to Tiraspol, the Soviet prisoners in Romanian hands received generally more humane treatment than those held in German camps across the Bug River.⁷ Members of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), including one of its leaders, Dr. Edouard Chapuisat, visited POW Camp No. 5 Tiraspol in May 1943. The ICRC representatives encouraged Romanian camp authorities to allow the Soviet POWs to send and receive correspondence and to introduce Russian-language newspapers in the camp, which were previously forbidden.

On April 12, 1944, the Red Army liberated Tiraspol.

SOURCES More information about the fate of the Soviet POWs held in Tiraspol Camps No. 5 and No. 11 can be found in the following publications: A. Shneer, "Sovetskie Voennoplennye V Plenu Soiznikov Natsistskoj Germanii," in Materialy Mezhdunarodnoj Nauchnoj Konferentsii "Interpretatsii Razlichnykh Aspektov Vtoroj Mirovoj i Velikoj Otechestvennoj vojny v Sovremennoj vostochno-evropejskoj istoriografii" (Kishinev: KEP YCM, 2010), pp. 57–73; P. Polian, "Sovetskie Voennoplennye-evrei—pervye zhertvy Kholokosta v SSSR," in P. Polian and A. Shneer, eds.

Obrechennye pogibnut': Sud'ba sovetskikh voennoplennykh-evreev vo Vtoroj mirovoj vojne. Vospominaniia I dokumenty (Moscow: Novoe Izdatel'stvo, 2006), pp. 9–71; and Andrei Șiperco, Crucea Roșie Internațională și România, 1939–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 1997). Șiperco's volume includes a group photo showing Soviet POWs in Tiraspol, Romanian authorities, and Edouard Chapuisat, the ICRC representative.

Primary sources regarding the fate of the Soviet POWs in Tiraspol Camps No. 5 and No. 11 are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAMO (RG-31.008M), AME (RG-25.006M), ANR (RG-25.002M), and GARF; records can also be found at YVA and TsAFSB. For General Constantin Pantazi's testimony during interrogation, see TsAFSB, storage unit 18, 767.T.1.L. 108, pp. 119–121. For labor contracts, see RG-31.008M (DAMO), fond 2178, opis 1, delo 20 (in folder 2178, opis 1, delo 374); for statistical figures for the largest Soviet POW camps in Transnistria, see RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 599; for a report stating the capture of Soviet POWs in the Odessa oblast' who were subsequently escorted to Tiraspol and other camps inside Romania, see YVA, M-33/325, p. 9. For information about the criteria for internment of Soviet POWs in NKVD review camps, see GARF, fond 9408, opis 1, delo 53, p. 29.

Ovidiu Creangă and Oleksandr Marinchenko

NOTES

1. YVA, fond M-33/325, p. 9.
2. See the summary outline of camps in Transnistria, "Nota. Lagăre existente în Transnistria," USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 33, file 79/43, pp. 408–412; and "Dare de seamă asupra lagărelor existente în Transnistria," pp. 416–419 in the same collection. See also Ion Stăculescu's brief report, 1943, "Raport în legătură cu situația prizonierilor de război aflați în Transnistria," USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 599.
3. See copy of Locotenent-colonel S. Teodorescu's report, "Dare de seamă asupra constatărilor făcute la lagărul de prizonieri de război Șmerinka, Județul Moghilev," December 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 20, file 40011, vol. 8, pp. 123–125.
4. Loghin's telegram to Transnistrian Romanian Railroad (C.F.R.T.), July 30, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 9, pp. 83 (and verso), 87.
5. See various contracts made between the two parties: "Contract," August 16, 1942, signed by Maior Grosu, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), fond 2178, opis 1, delo 20, pp. 5–7; (USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/374, pp. 5–7), "Contract," November 1, 1942, and signed by Ioan Lăzăroiu, USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/20; "Contract," March 1, 1943, signed by Constantin Manoliu, RG-31.008M/2178/1/20, p. 32 (and verso).
6. Vintilă Davidescu's Decision Nr. 2132 from 26 September 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 126, file 24361, vol. 5, pp. 50–51, and Decision No. 4.307 from February 16, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 20, n.p.
7. Testimony cited in Shneer, "Soviet Prisoners of War Captured by Nazi Germany's Allies," p. 59.

TIVRIV

Tivriv (pre-1941: Tyvrov; today: Tyvriv, Ukraine), a town in the Crasna raion, Moghilev județ, is situated on the Bug River, 46 kilometers (29 miles) northwest of Tulcin. Between 1941 and 1944 it was in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 397 Jews in Tivriv (representing 12 percent of the town's population) and 1,479 Jews in the Crasna raion (representing 3.1 percent of the raion's total population).

The German and Romanian armies occupied Tivriv on July 18, 1941. Romanian civil authorities took control of the village by late October 1941. Under this administration, the town's name was romanianized as Tivriv (also known as Tivarif or Tibriv). In succession, Constantin Dimitriu, Constantin Năsturaș, and Constantin Loghin, all army colonels, were Moghilev's prefects. Successive commandants of the Moghilev Gendarmes Legion, which oversaw Tivriv, were Dănulescu, Romeo Orășeanu, and Gheorghe Botoroagă, all army majors. A gendarmes post existed two kilometers (1.2 miles) from the town. The praetor in the Crasna raion was Nicolae Coman.

Shortly after Tivriv's occupation in July 1941, 28 Ukrainian Jews were shot. It is believed that 7 of those 28 were shot in the streets of Tivriv and the rest in a nearby forest, where they were all buried. Local Jews from neighboring areas were transported to Tivriv in the days and weeks after its occupation. On November 1, 1941, 392 local Ukrainian Jews were brought from the town to the nearby forest. They were ordered to dig a large pit and were then shot and buried in the grave. Small children who were not hit or others who were only wounded were buried alive. Einsatzkommando 5, a contingent of Einsatzgruppen C, was active in northern and central Ukraine and was likely responsible for this killing operation. Because of the many shootings that occurred in that forest, it became known among the locals as the "black forest."

The first convoy of Romanian Jews, some 450 inhabitants of Dorohoi, was sent to Tivriv in mid-December 1941. They had marched for almost three weeks from Moghilev, a distance of 105 kilometers (65.2 miles), in wintry conditions. The convoy spent nights in dilapidated collective farms (kolkhozes) along the way. One-third of that convoy perished of exhaustion, cold, and hunger during that arduous journey. In February 1942, 850 Jews, mainly from Cernăuți, were transferred from the Crasna ghetto, 15 kilometers (9.3 miles) southwest of the Tivriv ghetto. Later on, in September 1942, after the closing of the Scazineț camp (12 kilometers [7.4 miles] northeast of Moghilev), several hundred starving Jews, mostly from the Dorohoi județ and Bessarabia, were transported to the Tivriv ghetto.

A Jewish ghetto was created in the town's center, in an old school with a few classrooms, in November 1941. The ghetto was unfenced, but the Jews were forbidden to leave the area. All Jews were forced to wear the yellow star. A hospital existed in a small barn/warehouse. The hospital lacked beds and chairs, the windows were boarded with wooden planks, and it was serviced by a Ukrainian doctor who had no medical supplies. Patients were laid on the floor, atop layers of hay. Contact with the Ukrainian population was restricted to one hour on market day (later the rule was relaxed). Tivriv's outskirts were patrolled by the Romanian gendarmes from the local gendarmes post, whereas the guarding of the Jews was entrusted to local Ukrainian police. Soldiers and deportees alike (but not the Romanian authorities) referred to the ghetto as a "death camp" (lagărul morții).¹

The first wave of deportees was crammed in the ghetto, 40 to 50 people to a single classroom. Gradually, those few who still had money or jewelry hidden away rented rooms from the villagers; others exchanged the miserable living conditions in the school for just as deplorable conditions in abandoned and war-torn houses. Their place in the ghetto was taken by subsequent waves of deportees. The mortality rate among the deportees was high, due to malnutrition, cold, and illnesses, especially typhus. There were recurrent typhus epidemics in the winters of 1941 and 1942, when there were as many as 10 deaths per day.

A Jewish committee was formed in 1942, headed by a few Jews from Dorohoi. There was also a small Jewish police force, led by the brother of the committee's leader. There were mixed opinions among the deportees about the two brothers, particularly because of the tax demanded from skilled workers employed by the local Ukrainians (allegedly, the tax was used to bribe higher authorities to allow Jews to find private employment). In this way, a number of craftsmen were engaged in their profession and were thus able to earn a small living. Unskilled workers or those whose training was not in demand worked in the fields in exchange for food. Children, the elderly, or those unable to find work went begging in nearby Ukrainian villages. Jewish seamstresses walked from village to village, making dresses or altering clothing in exchange for fruit, eggs, potatoes, and bread.²

The commander of the gendarmes post, a man who showed some leniency to the deportees, came to the ghetto and took some Jews for forced labor. Young men and women cleaned and repaired roads and removed snow from the streets of the town and the surrounding roads. Other work details cut wood in the nearby forest, and some laid rail track for the major railway junction at Șmerinca. In the spring of 1943, several people were deported to the Nestervarca labor camp (Tulcin județ) to cut peat. In the fall of that year, others were sent to the German camp Kolosovca (near the Bug, 6 kilometers [3.7 miles] north of Bar, in the Reichskommissariat Ukraine). For the project of (re)building the strategic bridge over the Bug at Nicolaev in southeastern Romanian-controlled Transnistria, Organisation Todt of Einsatzgruppe Russland Süd requested 1,500 Jewish workers (carpenters, locksmiths, ironsmiths, machine operators, translators, and unskilled laborers) from Transnistria. A handful of skilled Jewish workers were selected from Tivriv in June 1943 for this project. Few returned.³

Aid in the form of medicine and clothes arrived from the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) in Bucharest, via Moghilev, which became a distribution center for the camps and ghettos in northern and central Transnistria. However, CER's distribution efforts were insufficient to significantly ameliorate the Jews' situation. The deportees received clothing once or twice, but no social welfare institution to help the needy in the ghetto was formed. Individual funds sent by the undeported family or friends of the deportees via CER reached the Tivriv ghetto in the autumn of 1943.⁴

German soldiers and Ukrainian police collaborators from across the Bug often stormed through the ghetto in search of young women and liquor. In most cases, the terrified deportees were able to run away, hiding where they could. Frustrated in their goal, the soldiers shot indiscriminately at anyone perceived as resisting or refusing to provide the goods.

The ghetto's population was in constant flux. On the one hand, Jews escaped from Tivriv to Crasna or other ghettos, farther from the area. Able-bodied Jews fled Tivriv in search of work in the Crasna ghetto and village, in part because Crasna was a larger place and in part because many deportees originated from there. The Jewish police from Crasna, including the leader of the Jewish Council, a man named Berger, usually turned the escapees away.⁵

On the other hand, Ukrainian Jews from camps and ghettos under German control fled to Tivriv from as far as Vinnytsia (today: Vinnytsia, Ukraine). By October 1942, there were 850 Jews in Tivriv; in March 1943, the number decreased to 744 (of whom 50 were orphaned children); by September 1943, the number was 458 (not counting local Ukrainian Jews).⁶ Repatriation of 200 Jews from the Dorohoi district and the Old Kingdom of Romania took place in December 1943. On March 16, 1944, the Red Army occupied the town and freed the remaining Jews.

In 2000, Yad Vashem recognized a Ukrainian from Tivriv, Alexandra Tloka, as a Righteous Among the Nations for rescuing a Jewish survivor of the mass killing.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Tivriv's Jews can be found in the following sources: "Tyvrov," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 994; "Tyvrov," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 229; "Tivriv," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas habekibilot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-ad le-ahar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam hashbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 444–445; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainского Evreystva, 1941–1944. Entsiklopedicheskiy spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 320; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 48; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); A. F. Visotsky et al., eds., Nazi Crimes in Ukraine, 1941–1944: Documents and Materials (Kiev: Naukova Dumka Publishers, 1987); Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Basarabia și alte întâmplări (Bucharest: Glob, 1947); and Felicia Carmelly, Shattered! 50 Years of Silence: History and Voices of the Tragedy in Romania and Transnistria (Ontario: Abbeyfield Publishers, 1997). On Tloka, see db.yadvashem.org/righteous/righteousName.html?language=en&itemId=4017890. A photograph of the monument commemorating the mass killing of Jews that was erected in the Soviet era can be viewed at YIU_UKR22_14082010_Tyvrviv_yahadblog.weebly.com/1/post/2010/08/tyvrviv-the-righteous-medal-and-the-black-forest-day-4.html.

Primary sources regarding the fate of Tivriv's Jews can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and MAE (RG-25.006M). Reports describing the findings of the Soviet Extraordinary State Commission in Tivriv raion can be found in GARF, RG-22.002M, fond reel 3, 7021, opis 54, delo 1252, and reel 4, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1347. VHA holds 12 testimonies by Tivriv survivors.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Ghizela Herșcovici, "Biografia mea," Foșani (Romania), November 13, 1944, reproduced in Mircu, Pogromurile din Basarabia și alte câteva întâmplări, pp. 38–50.
2. VHA #15979, Goldie Rutman testimony, June 5, 1996.
3. "Tabel nominal de evreii disponibili din raza județului Moghilev," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 23, n.p. (but see also p. 37).
4. "Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Tivriv (Raion Crasna, Jud. Moghilev)," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1567, p. 490; fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1564, p. 114; reel 4, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1501, p. 168.
5. VHA #39095, Paula Leizerovici testimony, February 27, 1998.
6. For the October 1942 figure, see "Situația numerică pe comune din jud. Moghilău a evreilor evacuați aflați în comunele mai jos notate," USHMMA, RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281; for the March 1943 count (estimates of CER), see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346; for the September 1943 count (of the Transnistria gendarmes service), see "Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 441.

TOMAȘPOL

Tomașpol, the center of the Tomașpol raion in the Juguștru județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Tomashpil, Ukraine), is situated along the Rusava, a tributary of the Dniester River. It is located 38 kilometers (24 miles) northeast of Iampol. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,863 Jews in Tomașpol. Some Jews retreated with the Soviet authorities and fewer still were drafted into the Red Army, but many stayed in place. Others who escaped eastward on their own were intercepted by the German and Romanian armies and were escorted back to Tomașpol.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Tomașpol on July 20, 1941. During the short German military occupation, the Jews were rounded up by German police forces and Romanian soldiers. By August 11, some 157 Jews had been shot. The Romanian civil administration took control of the town beginning in September 1941, romanianizing the town's and raion's name from Tomashpol to Tomașpol. The prefect in the Juguștru județ was Colonel Ștefan S. Gheorghiadu; the praetor in the Tomașpol raion was Victor Dobrescu.

A ghetto for local Jews, as well as for Jews deported from northern Bessarabia in Romania, was set up at some point in the fall of 1941.¹ Far more Jews passed through Tomașpol on their way to the Bug than those few (usually with desirable skills) who were permitted to stay. Those in the ghetto were not permitted outside, and violators were severely punished. Romanian gendarmes and local Ukrainian auxiliaries from the local gendarmes post guarded the ghetto. Because the Tomașpol gendarmes post had under its jurisdiction a larger territory than a regular post, the number of gendarmes and military personnel present was also greater than was typical for a town its size.

Behind the tall barbed-wire fence surrounding the ghetto, the detainees lived with endless privations. The ghetto incorporated only a few streets from the town's Jewish area, so the detainees were crowded into the houses of local Jews, with 10 to 12 people sharing a single room. Epidemics (especially typhus), starvation, cold, and exhaustion caused many deaths during the first two years of ghettoization (1941–1942). Wearing the yellow star was mandatory. A Jewish police force was instituted in the ghetto, under the supervision of a constituted Jewish Council. Zalman Bronfman was the ghetto leader. Barter, begging by the most destitute, and the generosity of local non-Jews helping those who sought aid were the key means of survival for many.² Some form of cultural and religious expression existed in the ghetto. For example, school-aged pupils were taught Jewish prayers and traditions in a private home. Moreover, a group of women visited each house in the ghetto soliciting donations for the sick and the needy.³

The establishment of government-controlled workshops (ateliers) where skilled Jews inside the ghetto could work in exchange for food or small sums of money also provided a means of survival for some. The creation of Jewish workshops was in accordance with Ordinance No. 23 of the Government of Transnistria, but it fell on the shoulders of the ghetto leadership to set them up. Fortunately, the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) provided some aid to that effect, but most of it came from local Jews. The Tomașpol ghetto had a number of workshops that were created most likely at the end of 1942 and beginning of 1943 and were coordinated by the ghetto's Jewish Labor Bureau. For example, there were workshops for tailors, furriers, dyers, hairdressers, ironsmiths, and bootmakers. All in all, some 54 people were employed in the workshops in October 1943.⁴ The rest of the able-bodied Jews (men and women) undertook forced labor in a quarry, extracting lime; in the sugar factory; on road and rail building; and in snow removal, chopping wood, carrying coal, and farming. Workers were recompensed each day with a watery soup and a slice (200 grams or 7 ounces) of stale bread.⁵

At some point in early 1942, the number of Jews in the ghetto was 925, probably the majority being Ukrainian Jews. CER's census in March 1943 did not include Tomașpol, perhaps because of the small number of Jews from Romania living in the ghetto. On September 1, 1943, however, the ghetto contained 33 Jews (31 from Bessarabia, 2 from Bukovina), without counting the Ukrainian Jews.⁶ It is very possible that the total number of Jews in the ghetto in 1943 reached 1,128, some 281 of whom were considered skilled in various specialties.⁷

Roma (Gypsies) deported from Romania in the summer of 1942 were scattered within the territory of the Tomașpol raion, living in abysmal conditions through the winter of that year and thereafter.⁸

By the time the Red Army recaptured the town and liberated the ghetto on March 16, 1944, the Romanian administration had left the area, returning the ghetto briefly into the hands of the German military authorities. With the ghetto freed by the Red Army soldiers, some Jews were conscripted into the army, while the rest of the survivors made their way home amid many challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Tomașpol can be found in the following publications: "Tomashpol," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1313; "Tomashpol," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 983; "Tomashpol," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Evrejstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 315; and "Tomashpol," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 202–203. See also A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); and M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tirmi ta getto na okupovanii teritorii Ukraini (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For a collection of documents covering the persecution of the Roma deported from Romania, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in the Tomașpol ghetto can be found at USHMMA, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), and AME (RG-25.006M). The last collection contains a map of the Juguastu județ showing the exact location of the Tomașpol ghetto and the number of inhabitants in 1942, in reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21. Documents relating to experiences in the Tomașpol ghetto can be found at USHMMA, Acc. No. 1995.A.0657. VHA holds 168 survivor testimonies in three languages (Russian, Ukrainian, and Hebrew) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. List of ghettos in the Juguastu județ, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 22, n.p.

2. For a non-Jewish aid giver in Tomașpol, see VHA #33901, Tat'iana Obertynskaia testimony, August 31, 1997.

3. VHA #15108, Sof'ia Budman testimony, May 12, 1996.

4. Confidential correspondence on Jewish workshops between the Juguastu Prefecture and the Labor Department, Government of Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, pp. 96–104 (esp. pp. 97–98). The existence of such workshops is attested in VHA #39894, Semen Felentein testimony, January 14, 1998.

5. VHA #42867, Semen Borokhovskiy testimony, March 18, 1998. For a list of Jews undertaking forced labor on laying railway tracks, see USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reels 32 and 33.

6. The March 1943 census does not contain Tomașpol among the Juguastu județ localities, as can be seen in “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 348; for the September 1943 census, see “Situăție numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 458.

7. This figure appears in “Tomashpol,” in Altman, Kholokost na Territorii SSSR, p. 983.

8. For a list containing their names, ages, and professions, see USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAOO), reel 32.

TRIDUBI

Tridubi, a village in the Crivoi Ozero raion, Golta județ, (today: in Ukraine) in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is situated 35 kilometers (22 miles) west of Golta. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 2,434 Jews in the Crivoi Ozero raion (census data for Tridubi are not available).

The German and Romanian armies occupied Tridubi on August 3, 1941, six weeks after the joint German-Romanian invasion of the Soviet Union on June 22. In advance of the occupation, more affluent Jews had relocated deeper inside the Soviet Union and those of military age were drafted into the Red Army, but most remained in place. After a short period of German occupation, control of the area was transferred to Romanian authorities. The administration romanianized the village's name from Triduby to Tridubi (also spelled as Triduve, Tridube, and Triduba). Colonel Modest Isopescu became Golta's prefect, and Aristide Pădure was the deputy prefect. The commandant of Golta's Gendarmes Legion was Maior Romulus Ambrus. The praetor in the Crivoi Ozero raion was Elizeu Rozorea, and the gendarmes commander was N. Constantinescu.

In May 1943, a group of approximately 120 to 140 (or 200, according to other accounts) Jews who had been selected from the Vapniarca camp were transported to Tridubi. They found only two local Ukrainian Jews in Tridubi, survivors of a larger Jewish community that had been deported to Golta in 1941. The group of Jews from the Vapniarca camp was transported by train and then on foot for the remaining 20 kilometers (12.4 miles) of the journey. The ghetto was established in the building of the local school. Near the village there existed a local collective farm (kolkhoz) with various areas in which the deportees were assigned to work and from which they received food (milk, bread, beans, and cabbage) in exchange for labor, like all other regular workers employed there. Initially, the farm's head administrator and the gendarmes showed little kindness to the Jews. Thanks to strengthened relations with the chief agronomist, Kalinicensu, who directed the economic section in Crivoi Ozero and oversaw the Tridubi farm, the situation improved over time. The Jewish inmates were able to move freely inside the farm as well as within the village, a special permit being required only for exiting the village's perimeter.

The deportees formed a Jewish committee, which played a vital role in setting up workshops (ateliere) for tailoring, shoemaking, and carpentry. In these workshops skilled Jews earned their living by working for the village, the military units stationed in the area, and for the ghetto.¹ A small canteen was established for the very needy, in addition to a tiny infirmary that housed the very sick. Dr. Iosif Nuremberg was the medical doctor, and Dr. Moise Haim was the dentist in Tridubi.² The Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din Romania, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) augmented the funds generated by the workshops and provided additional material support in the form of medication, clothing, and food. Private funds for individual assistance from the undeported family or friends of the ghetto residents were also sent via CER.³

Individual members of the ghetto befriended partisans hiding in the neighboring forest, and the ghetto leaders established ties to underground Jewish organizations in Romania in order to obtain additional help.

In early September 1943, Romanian authorities enlisted 70 Jews from the ghetto to work in a labor camp at Trihati (Varvarovca raion, Ochacov județ) run by the Germans, where they repaired the bridge over the Bug River. They stayed there until December 1943, when they returned to Romania, along with other Jews from Transylvania and the Old Kingdom.

In June 1942, thousands of Romanian Roma (Gypsies) were deported to Tridubi.⁴ Among them, a few were former army soldiers and World War I veterans, but most were sedentary and itinerant Roma with various occupations and economic resources.⁵ At Governor Gheorghe Alexianu's instructions, Isopescu confiscated their carts and horses shortly after their arrival in Golta. Robbed of their possessions and homes, the Roma lived in makeshift tents, without any amenities (such as clean water, electricity, bathrooms, soap, medicine, and pots). Some worked for local farms, gathering potatoes, corn, and cabbage from the fields. In exchange for work, they received very little food: 300 grams (0.6 pounds) of corn bread and 500 grams (1.1 pounds) of potatoes. Soon typhus erupted among them, causing many deaths. Anticipating disaster with the onset of winter, the Roma of Tridubi requested housing. In response, the authorities force-marched the Roma to localities along the Bug River, where they were housed in primitive huts erected by the administration. In these wooded areas, the Roma cut down trees to warm up their huts and to cook and used what few goods or precious objects that they had hidden away to purchase food. But the majority had none left, having sold even their clothes for food. When the Romanian and German authorities retreated from Transnistria in March 1944, the Roma were abandoned in place and returned to Romania on their own. Hundreds of Roma died of cold waiting to cross the Dniester River (the German and Romanian armies having priority) into Bessarabia.

In 1945, the Bucharest's People's Tribunal sentenced Isopescu and Pădure to many years' hard labor and confiscation of their property for crimes committed against the Jews and Roma in Golta.⁶

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Tribudi's Jews and Roma can be found in "Tridubi," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 213; "Tridubi," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min hivasdam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sheniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 449; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 53; Ihiel Benditer, Vaḥniarca: Lagărele Vaḥniarca și Gro- sulovo, închisoarea Ribnița, ghetourile Olgopol, Savrani, Tribudi, Crivoi-Ozero și Tribati (Tel Aviv: Anais, 1995); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 6: War Crimes Trial (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For a collection of documents concerning the deportation of Romanian Roma in Transnistria, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004).

Primary sources documenting the life and treatment of Jews and Roma in Tridubi are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAMO (RG-31.008M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). For a Roma survivor's testimony, see Istrate Rădulescu's account at VHA, June 19, 1999 (#49997).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See a list of the Jews of Tridubi, July 8, 1943, "Tabel Nominal Model Nr. 1 de utilizarea evreilor din Transnistria," USHMMA, RG-31.008 (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis, delo not available, document file: AA 0552, pp. 23–26. See also a list of Jews ready to work, ages 20 to 40, "Tabel de evreii între vârsta de 20–40 ani—Tridube," USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 374, pp. 119–120.

2. "Tabel de medicii evrei disponibili în județul Golta," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, pp. 82–83 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1562, with page).

3. "Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Triduba," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1567, p. 501.

4. See Governor Alexianu's letter No. 456, June 16, 1942, informing the Golta prefecture about the arrival of deported Roma from Romania: USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 31, p. 78.

5. See correspondence addressed to Governor Alexianu, October 8, 1942, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1912, pp. 294–295.

6. See the prosecution's statement, "Actul de Acuzare," USHMMA, RG-25.00M (SRI), reel 19, file 40011, vol. 2, pp. 115–117, and court decision, pp. 136–137.

TROPOVA

Tropova is a village in the Șargorod raion, Moghilev județ (today: in Ukraine), in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria. It is more than 24 kilometers (15 miles) northeast of Moghilev. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 2,626 Jews in the Șargorod raion (census data for Tropova are not available).

The German and Romanian armies occupied the Tropova area at the beginning of August 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the region beginning in September 1941. The succeeding prefects of Moghilev, who oversaw Tropova, were Constantin Dimitriu, Ion Băleanu, Constantin Năsturaș, and Constantin Loghin, all Romanian colonels. The commandants of the Moghilev Gendarmes Legion were Dănulescu, Romeo Orășeanu, and Gheorghe Botoroagă, all Romanian majors. The first commandant of the gendarmes sector (or area) was Locotenent Vasile Grama, who was succeeded by Locotenent Vasile Mihăilescu. The first praetor of Șargorod was Isosif Dindelegan, succeeded by Dimitrie Rusu.

In December 1941, to relieve the overcrowding in the Moghilev ghetto, 1,200 Jews were marched to Tropova. The deportees were originally from Cernăuți and Dorohoi, as well as from other towns and villages in Bukovina. Some local Ukrainian Jews were detained in the ghetto as well. Many families from Dorohoi had been deported to Moghilev while their husbands and sons were deployed in forced labor battalions (the “external battalions,” or batalioane de muncă exterioare) in other parts of Romania.¹ If they still possessed material means after repeated confiscations and bribes on the way to Moghilev, the deportees rented rooms and apartments from Tropova villagers. A dozen or more individuals lived in each room. The less fortunate were crammed inside a former cinema building of the village’s collective farm (kolkhoz). The building was totally ill equipped as a living space; most people slept on the ground. The complex was enclosed and guarded: leaving without permission was prohibited and punished severely. In the middle of an extremely frigid winter, the Jews lived off whatever food they could barter from local Ukrainians and cooked on makeshift ovens.

Overcrowding coupled with the general lack of hygiene caused a typhus epidemic among the detainees. Typhoid fever and scabies were also common due to the lack of sanitation. In the winter of 1941, the ghetto lacked a doctor, medicine, and an isolation room for the sick. A Jewish doctor from the nearby Șargorod ghetto (12 kilometers [7.4 miles] away) attempted to visit the Tropova ghetto to offer what little help he could. He was mistreated by the Romanian gendarmes on his way there, so other doctors did not repeat the attempt. The mortality rate from typhus reached almost 50 percent. Bodies were gathered in piles and placed outside the buildings in the ghetto because the ground was frozen. In addition, the Ukrainian village heads were initially unwilling to allow the burial of Jews, so corpses were scattered in the fields of the kolkhoz where wild dogs and crows devoured them. Among the Romanian Jews detained in Tropova were decorated veterans of World War I, widows of that war, and wounded soldiers (invalizi de război).²

The overall situation improved with the arrival of spring in 1942, when the Jewish community started to organize itself. A Jewish committee was formed and led by Riven Napovnici.

The ghetto’s Jewish doctor, at least as of October 1943, was Carol Bretschneider.³ The chief of the office of Jewish labor in Șargorod was Moise Katz. Gradually, the Jews were allowed to leave the ghetto’s confines (as long as they did not leave the village’s perimeter) to search for food, usually in exchange for work. However, a few who were perceived as spreading rumors of Soviet resistance or even of the Red Army’s return to Transnistria were shot.⁴ In August 1942, a Romanian gendarme named Alecu Moșneagu was sent to Tropova to organize the ghetto for agricultural labor. Instead, he installed himself as village police chief and persecuted the Jews. His frequent beatings of Jews and Ukrainians alike terrorized the entire village. Only bribes or giving him whatever goods (or women) he demanded satiated his thirst for violence. Aid from the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) trickled in from Șargorod and Moghilev in 1942. Due to that help there were fewer deaths in the winter of 1942 from cold and starvation. The Jewish community of Iași in Romania also helped by sending individual family packages, although it was common for these packages to be ransacked before reaching their destination.⁵ Undeported family members or close friends from Romania also sent money to those in the ghetto via CER.⁶

In April 1943, the German authorities started two major bridge-building projects at Trihati and Nicolaev in the southeastern corner of Transnistria. Romanian authorities provided labor from Transnistria’s camps and ghettos, including Tropova. Carpenters from the ghetto were enlisted for work in Trihati, as were many unskilled workers.⁷ Some of those sent were or became sick (hernias and bone fractures were common) and were returned by the German authorities.⁸ In early 1943 a Soviet partisan network became operational in the area. Its activity increased toward the end of 1943, and the ghetto provided assistance in the form of food and medical supplies. According to Tropova survivor Bianca Idel, Soviet partisans hanged the village mayor for collaborating with the German authorities.⁹

According to CER’s March 1943 census of deported Jews in Transnistria, there were 582 Jews in Tropova. Of them, 105 were orphan children and teens who were later repatriated to Romania at the end of 1943 or the beginning of 1944. The Romanian gendarmerie counted 221 Jews in Tropova, excluding local Ukrainian Jews, in September 1943.¹⁰ At the end of December 1943, about 300 Jews were returned to Romania from Dorohoi, including 92 children under the age of 16. On March 23, 1944, the Red Army liberated Tropova. The ordeal of the Romanian Jews continued for a few more months as they sought permission from the Soviet authorities to return to Romania. The Bucharest People’s Tribunal arrested, tried, and sentenced Moșneagu as a war criminal in 1948.¹¹

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Tropova can be gleaned from the following sources: “Tropovoe,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2011), 7: 215; “Tropovoe,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 987; “Tropova,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kebilot: Romanyah: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-‘ad le-abar Sho‘at Milhemet ha-‘olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 448–449; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 47; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival and vol. 6: War Crimes Trials (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary documents pertaining to the fate of Jews deported to Tropova are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), ANR (RG-25.002M), and CER (RG-25.016M). VHA holds two testimonies by survivors of the Tropova ghetto: Bianca Idel, interviewed April 5, 1999 (#49774); and Eva Wiznitzer, interviewed June 23, 1995 (#03479).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. “Tabelul evreilor din județul Dorohoi, care în timp ce prestau munca obligatorie în detașamente exterioare, familiile lor au fost evacuate în Transnistria,” USHMMA, RG-25.016 (CER), reel 17, file 308, pp. 11–21, 32, 34, 39, 41, 42.

2. “Tabel nominal de evreii decorați, pentru merite speciale sau fapte de arme din războaiele Romaniei,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 15, p. 295 (verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/15, with page); “Tabel nominal de evreicele, care sunt văduve, aflate în ghetourile din raza acestei Legiuni,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/15, pp. 292 (and verso); and “Tabel nominal de evreii, invalizi de războiu aflați în ghetourile în raza acestei Legiuni,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/15, p. 293.

3. “Tabel nominal de medicii evrei aflați în ghetoul Moghilev și în Județ,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1562, p. 226 verso.

4. See the Transnistria Gendarmes Inspectorate’s monthly report for February/March 1942, “Buletin Informativ,” USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 15, file 134, 1942, p. 203.

5. “Tabel nominal de evrei ce au primit colete cu efecte de la Comunitatea evreilor din Iași cu inventarul No. 196 din 31/8, 1943,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/15, p. 138.

6. “Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Tropova (Jud. Moghilev),” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1564, p. 121 (verso); for more examples, see in the same collection, reel, fond, opis, delo 1562, p. 135; see also in reel 10, fond 2255, opis 1, delo 1180, pp. 83–86, 135–137; and finally, in reel 5, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1504, pp. 57 (and verso), 134.

7. “Tabel nominal de evreii specialiști disponibili din raza județului Moghilev,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/23, n.p.

8. “Tabel de lucrătorii evrei bolnavi incapabili de a lucra din cauza debilității din Transnistria,” July 1, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/4/2242/1/1499, p. 111.

9. VHA #49774, Bianca Idel testimony, April 5, 1999.

10. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345; for the September 1943 census, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 441.

11. The prosecution’s report is reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 6: 259–263.

TROSTINEȚ

Trostineț (pre-1941: Trostianets), seat of the Trostineț raion, Tulcin județ (today: Ukraine), in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located 33 kilometers (21 miles) southeast of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 1,731 Jews in the raion, making up 4.1 percent of the raion’s total population, and 878 Jews in the town, representing 16.4 percent of the town’s population.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Trostineț on July 25, 1941. A small group of local Jews retreated with the Red Army or fled deeper inside the Soviet Union, but most stayed in place. Immediately after the occupation, local Ukrainian Jewish communal leaders were murdered. The remaining Jews (some 450 people) were deported by Romanian authorities to ghettos in Ladijin (in the Trostineț raion) and then Pecioara (Spikov raion) between September and November 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the town in early September 1941. Under the new administration, the name of the town and raion were romanianized as Trostineț (also spelled as Trostianet or Trostineți). Colonels Ion Lazăr, Constantin Loghin, and Constantin Năsturaș served successively as Tulcin’s prefects. The commandant of the Tulcin Gendarmes Legion was Maior Mihailovici, followed by Căpitan Fetecău. The praetor in Trostineț was Constantin Alexandrescu.

In August 1942, 60 Romanian Jews were brought to Trostineț from the Cetvertinovka camp (also in the Trostineț raion). They were housed on the Trostineț state farm (Ferma de Stat Trostineț), which was situated on the town’s outskirts and was lightly guarded by Romanian gendarmes and Ukrainian policemen. The farm was enclosed with barbed wire. The inmates lived in huts inside the farm. The most eminent among them were permitted to live and work in town. In early April 1943, another group of Jewish deportees from northern Romania (Cernăuți and Dorohoi areas) was brought to the Trostineț farm from the Cariera de Piatră transit camp (a set of barracks near a stone quarry that had served as a Soviet penal colony; this camp was located near the town of Ladijin).

The camp had a total of 135 Jews (men, women, and children), and among them was the renowned Jewish surgeon, Dr. Joseph Rath. Dr. Rath worked as a physician at the Trostineț civilian hospital.

The Jews were recruited to work in various areas of the farm, under supervision. Some Jews worked in the fields; others raised animals, milked cows, and produced butter and cheese; and still others worked in workshops (ateliers) and light industries. The payment was 2 Reichskreditkassenschein (RKKS; German-issued scrip) per day for a skilled worker and 1 RKKS for an unskilled laborer, in accordance with the Romanian government's Ordinance No. 23.¹ When they were paid, which did not always happen, workers were generally given money or the equivalent in food or a combination of both.² The camp contracted out its labor force during the winter of 1942, and consequently most Jews were transferred to the Cariera de Piatră camp until April 1943, when they returned to the farm. In August 1943, a group of Jews from the Trostineț farm was sent to work on an airfield in Nestervarca (in the Tulcin raion) for two weeks. Dr. Arthur Pistiner worked as a doctor on the Trostineț farm, and although there were a few cases of typhus and malaria, some fatal, among the inmates, the camp was spared any epidemics.³ Constantin Niclește, a farm manager, showed a humane attitude toward the detained Jews, so long as his acts of kindness were rewarded with gifts of money or precious objects; the same could not have been said about his successor, Nicolae Dodon, who took every opportunity to mistreat the Jewish workers. Still, the Jews in the camp were able to observe Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur in the autumn of 1943.

Due to good local organization, self-help efforts, and material aid received from the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din Romania, Secțiunea de Asistentă, CER), a small public soup kitchen was set up in 1943 for the very needy. CER also assisted in the formation of workshops that provided the deportees with jobs. Private sums of money sent by family and friends from Romania via CER reached the Trostineț farm, although some of the intended recipients were no longer there, having been moved to a different location or transferred across the Bug River.⁴ Members of the Tulcin Jewish Committee were Sulim Fihman (president); Mayer Pincas, Samuel Mosner, Iacob Eidler, and Heinrich Deligdisch (committee members); and Herbert Wittner (secretary). The same group (minus Deligdisch) also served as members of the Jewish labor committee in Tulcin.⁵

According to the September 1943 census of Romanian Jews deported to Transnistria, there were 95 Jews (mostly from Bukovina and Dorohoi) in Trostineț. A subsequent count, in November 1943, found a total of 123 Jews (Ukrainian and Romanian) in Trostineț.⁶ The Red Army liberated the camp on March 13, 1944. After the war, one local Ukrainian policeman was sentenced to 10 years in labor camp by a Soviet court.

SOURCES Additional information about the Jews' fate in Trostineț can be gleaned from the following publications:

"Trostinets," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), pp. 987–988; "Trostinets," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 215; "Trostineț," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 447–448; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 48; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); and Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003).

Primary sources documenting the fate of deported Jews in Trostineț are found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004) and MAE (RG-25.006M).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For the text of this ordinance, see "Ordonanța Nr. 23," USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 20, fond 2361, opis 15, delo 1, p. 268 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/20/2361/15/1).

2. "Tabel nominal de achitarea mandatelor de plată convenită evreilor din Trostineț, Ferma Trostineț, Trostianciuc, Capustiana și Ladijin, conf. ord. Pref. Jud. Tulcin Nr. 6849 din 2 Iunie 1943," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/9/2255/1/1240, p. 225, and also in the same collection, "Tabel nominal de achitarea mandatelor de plată convenită evreilor din coloniile Trostineț, Trostianciuc și Capusteani, conf. Ord. Pref. Jud. Tulcin Nr. 11354 din 23 August 1943," p. 249.

3. "Tabel nominal al medicilor evrei aflați în județul Tulcin," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/6/2242/1/1561, p. 218.

4. "Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Trostineț (Jud. Tulcin)," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/9/2255/1/1240, p. 241; for additional remittances, see in the same collection, pp. 285, 322, and USHMMA, RG-31.004M/4/2242/1/1501, p. 150.

5. "Tabel nominal de membrii Oficiului județean al Evreilor, Tulcin," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/22, p. 12; and "Tabel nominal de membrii Biroului pentru organizarea muncii evreilor jud. Tulcin," p. 12 (verso), but see p. 13 for an expanded list of members.

6. "Situație numerică de toți evreii ce se află în raza județului Tulcin precum și de toți lucrătorii și funcționarii aflați la diferite instituții," USHMMA, RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 585.

TULCIN

Tulcin, a town and the administrative center of the Tulcin raion and județ (today: Ukraine), in the far northeastern corner of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is near the Bug River, the județ's eastern border. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 5,607 Jews in Tulcin, representing 41.68 percent of the town's population. During the German-Romanian invasion, Tulcin's well-to-do Jews retreated with the Red Army or fled deeper inside the Soviet Union, but many of the area's Jews stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Tulcin on July 23, 1941. After weeks of German control of the town during which time the Jews, especially the Jewish leaders, were brutalized, authority was transferred to the Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. Under the Romanian administration, the town's name was romanianized from Tulchin to Tulcin. In succession, Colonels Ion Lazăr, Constantin Loghin, and Constantin Năsturaș were Tulcin's prefects. Ion Vodă was the sub-prefect. The commandant of the Tulcin Gendarmes Legion was Maior Mihailovici, followed by Căpitan Fetecău. Andrei Partenie was the Tulcin raion's praetor.

A closed ghetto was created in late September 1941 in a small area of the town that contained abandoned and partially destroyed houses. Later, a local collective farm (kolkhoz) was also used as a temporary site. In November 1941, Prefect Lazar issued Ordinance No. 6, which severely restricted the mobility of ghetto inhabitants. Anyone who left the ghetto without written permission risked condemnation as a spy or communist courier.¹ A Jewish police force maintained order inside the ghetto, while Romanian gendarmes guarded the perimeter. The ghetto was overcrowded; on average 10 to 15 people lived in a room, with some sleeping on the floor. In November 1941, Tulcin's Jews, about 3,200 in total, were deported to the Pecioara camp (Tulcin județ), with the exception of 118 skilled laborers (artisans and professionals) deemed important to the administration in Romania.² Many of those expelled to Pecioara perished due to sickness, hunger, and hard labor.

The Tulcin ghetto was repopulated in December 1942 with Jews deported from Bukovina (Cernăuți and Dorohoi), who had already spent months in the Tulcin județ's other camps and ghettos. Runaway Jews from ghettos on the German side of the Bug also found temporary shelter in the Tulcin ghetto. For the new deportees, life in the Tulcin ghetto was noticeably better, although many restrictions remained in place. Improved relations between ghetto leaders and Tulcin's Romanian administrators, some of whom knew each other from before the war, occasionally facilitated a slight relaxation of rules. The town offered employment opportunities in offices and hospitals (a German military hospital existed, in addition to a civilian hospital) for a few educated and highly trained professionals. Various workshops were set up with assistance from the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) from Bucharest. CER funds augmented those received by the locksmith, tailor, carpenter, dyer, and watchmaker workshops, enabling a soup kitchen to open for the very needy.³ A small trade in baked goods also took place within the ghetto. One hour per week, on Sunday, Jews were permitted to leave the ghetto and attend the town's market. A few Romanian soldiers and even officers returning to Romania carried correspondence from and to the ghetto for a bribe. Lay-led morning and evening prayer services took place in people's homes, in addition to the observance of High Holidays. A bar mitzvah service took place as late as February 1944. The ghetto leaders forged ties with partisans who, in exchange for news about the course of war, accepted goods from ghetto residents.

Members of the Tulcin Jewish Committee were Sulim Fihman (president); Mayer Pincas, Samuel Mosner, Jacob Eidler, and Heinrich Deligdisch (committee members); and Herbert Wittner (secretary). The same group (minus Deligdisch) also served as members of the Jewish labor committee in Tulcin.⁴ Doctors in the ghetto were Oscar Schickler (resident physician), Sara Mednicov (dentist), and Mina Zloezower (ophthalmologist), who also worked in the general hospital in Tulcin.

Although restrictions were not particularly severe for Jews in the ghetto, forced labor was imposed for road maintenance, street cleaning, and hospital services. In addition, German SS units periodically rounded up Jewish workers for labor in German-controlled Transnistria. In August 1942, the German authorities from Gaysin requested that Tulcin's prefect, Colonel Loghin, provide 5,000 Jews to work on the Nemirov-Bratslav-Seminki-Gaysin segment of Highway IV (Durchgangsstrasse IV, DG-IV), the strategic highway connecting Lvov to Stalino in southern Ukraine. Three thousand Jews from the Tulcin județ were handed over, although it is not clear how many of these came from the Tulcin ghetto. Most of these workers were shot by December 1943, when the forced labor camps for Jews (Zwangsarbeitslager für Juden, ZALfJ) were liquidated.⁵ In April 1943, Romanian authorities sent 100 Jews from the ghetto to work on farms in the district. At the Nest-erarca labor camp near Silnitsia, a tributary of the Bug River, small groups of Jews from the Tulcin ghetto were occasionally sent to excavate peat (turbă). In August 1943, the Germans renewed murder campaigns (Aktionen) against Jews in Transnistria, and in one such instance, 200 Jews from Tulcin, including some from the ghetto, were picked up and sent across the Bug under the pretext of providing labor; however, they were shot on arrival. Children were part of this transfer as well, and 52 survived when their parents threw them out of the carts along the way. The large-scale recruitment of Jewish labor for German bridge-building projects at Nicolaev and Trihati in southern Transnistria resulted in the deployment of hundreds of Jewish specialists (carpenters, smiths, and builders) from the Tulcin județ; it is not clear how many came from the Tulcin ghetto.⁶

The repatriation of Romanian Jews began in the winter of 1943. Children under the age of 15 or slightly older were placed on "orphan lists" and repatriated from the Tulcin ghetto to Romania via Moghilev in late 1943. They arrived in Iași and Pașcani, Romania, in February 1944, where Jewish families and the Jewish community looked after them. Decorated World War I veterans and their surviving families, and former state functionaries and their descendants followed suit.⁷

The size of the ghetto's population varied in accordance with forced labor deployments. In March 1943, there were 500 Jews in the ghetto; in September 1943, there were 227 Jews (7 from Bessarabia, 220 from Bukovina), not counting the local Ukrainian Jews; a subsequent census in November 1943 found a total of 480 Jews.⁸

At the end of January 1944, the retreating German authorities intended to liquidate the Tulcin ghetto, but the commander of the Romanian gendarmes, Capitan Fetecău, opposed the plan, thus saving the ghetto's Jews. The Red Army liberated the ghetto on March 15, 1944. The remaining 230 Romanian Jews returned to Romania, with the exception of a few men of military age drafted into the Red Army. From October 1944 to March 1954, the Soviet Committee for State Security (Komitet gosudarstvennoi bezopasnosti, KGB) arrested and tried the leaders of the Tulcin ghetto for treason and collaboration with the fascist enemy. Wittner and an official named Weschler were (arbitrarily) found guilty and deported to Siberia; the rest were acquitted. The Bucharest's Peoples' Tribunal acquitted Capitan Fetecău due to supportive testimonies by ghetto leaders, but condemned Colonel Loghin to many years of hard labor.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Tulcin's Jews can be found in the following publications: "Tulchin," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1340; "Tulchin," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'alam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 443–444; "Tul'chin," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 222–223; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 23; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Primary sources regarding the fate of Tulcin's Jews are found at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and MAE (RG-25.006M). For a survivor's testimony, see Gerhard Schreiber's memoirs, available as an audio recording at <http://access.cjh.org/home.php?type=extid&term=1315434#1> and, as a transcript, at <http://access.cjh.org/home.php?type=extid&term=426298#1>.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. "Ordonanța No. 6," issued by Colonel Ion Lazăr, November 17, 1941, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 7, fond 2242, opis 2, delo 76, n.p. (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/7/2242/2/76, with page).

2. Romanian Presidency of the Council of Ministers, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 137–144 (USHMMA, RG-25.006M/10/21, with page).

3. Tables of names of payment recipients are available at USHMMA, RG-31.004M/9/2255/1/1240, pp. 19, 26, 65, 177, 181, 240.

4. See "Tabel nominal de membrii Oficiului județean al Evreilor, Tulcin," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/22, p. 12; and "Tabel nominal de membrii Biroului pentru organizarea muncii evreilor jud. Tulcin," p. 12 (verso), but see p. 13 for an expanded list of members.

5. See Governor Alexianu's answer to Loghin's telegram, "51304, 11 Aug. 1942, Inspectoratul de Jandarmi Transnistria," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/2/2242/1/1088, p. 151 (but see also pp. 148–150).

6. For the names of Jewish specialists from the Tulcin județ, see "Tabel nominal de evrei meseriași disponibili din jud. Tulcin," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/23, n.p.

7. "Tabel nominal de evrei, invalizi de războiu, aflați în județul Tulcin"; and "Tabel nominal de evrei, foști funcționari de stat, aflați în județul Tulcin," USHMMA, RG-31.004M/14/2264s/1/40a, pp. 38–39. For the names of war widows, descendants of state functionaries, orphans, state pensioners, and decorated war veterans found in the Tulcin județ, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M/1/2242/4s/50, pp. 23–29.

8. For the March 1943 census, see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 347; for the September 1943 count see "Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 442; for the November 1943 count, see "Situatie numerică de toti evreii ce se află în raza județului Tulcin precum și de toți lucrătorii și funcționarii aflați la diferite institutе," USHMMA, RG-25.006M/11/21, p. 585.

TURNU SEVERIN

An internment camp near the city of Turnu Severin (today: Drobeta-Turnu Severin), in the Mehedinți județ (today: Caraș-Severin județ), in the southern part of Romania along the Danube River, the Turnu Severin camp was located 66 kilometers (41 miles) southwest of Târgu Jiu and approximately 274 kilometers (170 miles) west of Bucharest.

The Turnu Severin internment camp was created on June 21, 1941, by Order No. 4147 of the Romanian Internal Affairs Ministry (Ministerul Afacerilor Interne, RMAI). The order announced to the Army General Staff (Marele Stat Major, MSM), gendarmes, police, and district prefects that all Jews living between the Siret and Prut Rivers in northwestern Romania were to be deported to and interned in camps in the southern part of the country. All able-bodied Jewish men between the ages of 18 and 60 living in this area were to be sent to the large camp at Târgu Jiu to work as forced laborers, while their families and all other Jews in the area were to be sent to the nearest urban area, where they would then be deported to smaller internment camps in southern Romania, such as Turnu Severin.¹ The deportations under this order began soon after the Axis invasion of the Soviet Union on June 22.

The prisoners in Turnu Severin were Jewish women and children from the village of Dărăbani, near Dorohoi in northwest Romania; the Jews of Dărăbani were force-marched approximately 29 kilometers (18 miles) to the rail station at Dorohoi to be deported to Turnu Severin. On August 7, 1941, the camp's population was 626: 518 adult women and 108 children under the age of 18.² The inmates were guarded by the local army garrison, with the assistance of the gendarmes and local police forces.

Whether the women performed forced labor in the internment camps is difficult to determine, because the organization of forced labor during the summer of 1941 was chaotic. Antonescu had ordered that all Jews living in the internment camps would perform "hard labor" (muncă grea), but it was not clear whether this obligation extended to women or only to the men who had been sent to Târgu Jiu specifically for this purpose. Initially, RMAI, which controlled the internment camps, was in charge of the labor of the Jews interned there. However, after the disorganized effort to subject Romanian Jews to compulsory labor in the first week of August, control over Jewish forced labor passed from RMAI to MSM. It was still unclear whether women were to be subjected to the labor requirement for those Jews living in the internment camps. MSM proposed that the control over these camps remain with RMAI, which could do with the camp population as it saw fit. MSM did not issue an order for work to be performed in the Turnu Severin camp; therefore, it is unlikely that any forced labor was imposed on the prisoners there, with due allowance for their possibly working in the local community.³

Turnu Severin and the other camps that held Jews from northeastern Romania under Order No. 4147 were not intended to be part of the Romanian state's killing apparatus. These Jews were not subject to Antonescu's order for extermination, which applied only to those living in the newly reoccupied territories of Bessarabia and Bukovina. The internment of the Jews from between the Siret and Prut Rivers was intended only to remove them from near the front lines, because Antonescu was paranoid that they would undermine the morale of Romanian soldiers by spreading communist "propaganda." Therefore, no organized killings took place at Turnu Severin. However, the Jews in the camp still suffered from inconsistent supplies of food and medicine and were under the constant threat of disease posed by poor sanitary conditions. The Romanian authorities did not record official statistics on illnesses in the camps, so it is impossible to determine how many people fell ill and how many, if any, died from disease and malnutrition. Turnu Severin's case was unique in that the harsh conditions in the camp were partially alleviated by the intervention of the local Jewish community, which provided supplies to the camp's population.

The internment camps in southern Romania, including Turnu Severin, remained in operation throughout the remainder of 1941. On December 16, 1941, RMAI ordered that the camps be closed and their inhabitants returned to the urban areas nearest their points of origin (because Jews were still legally forbidden to live in Romanian villages).⁴ The Jews in the Turnu Severin camps were therefore returned to the city of Dorohoi. None of the camp's guards or other personnel was ever brought to trial.

SOURCES Secondary sources describing the Turnu Severin camp include Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Vladimir Solonari, Purifying the Nation: Population Exchange and Ethnic Cleansing in Nazi-Allied Romania (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2009); and Ottmar Trașcă, ed., "Chestiunea Evreiască" în documente militare române, 1941–1944, preface by Dennis Deletant (Bucharest: Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2010). Additional information can be found in Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, 3 vols. (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, Contribuții la Istoria României: Problema Evreiască, 1933–1944, vol. 2, part 2 (Bucharest: Editura Hasefer, 2003); Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013); Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas habekbilot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyab shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam hasheniyah, (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), vol. 1; and Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust, 3 vols. (New York: New York University Press, 2001).

Primary sources documenting the Turnu Severin camp can be found in AMANR, available at USHMMA in collection RG-25.003M, and in ANR, available at USHMMA as RG-25.002M.

Dallas Michelbacher

NOTES

1. Order No. 4147 reproduced in Trașcă, ed., "Chestiunea evreiască," pp. 120–121, Doc. 5.
2. USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMANR), reel 144, file 2413, p. 309; and RG-25.002M (ANR), "Situația Lagărelor," August 6, 1941, reel 17, file 86, p. 19.
3. USHMMA, RG-25.003M, reel 136, file 2361, n.p.
4. USHMMA RG-25.003M, reel 144, file 2411, p. 2.

USTIA

Ustia is located in the Berșad raion, in the Balta județ, in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Ustya, Ukraine). It is situated approximately 70 kilometers (43 miles) north of the city of Balta, on the Donkha River.

The German and Romanian armies occupied the area by the end of July 1941, subsequently transferring control over it to the Romanian civil administration in September of the same year. The new authorities romanianized the town's name as Ustia or Ustie, and the raion became Berșad. The prefect in the Balta district was Colonel Vasile Nica, and the praetor in the Berșad raion was Constantin Alexandrescu.

The Romanian administration established a ghetto in Ustia in the late fall of 1941. Most of the ghetto inmates were deportees from Bessarabia and Bukovina in Romania who arrived in October and November. For example, a significant number of Jews from Rădăuți in northeastern Romania were registered at the site as early as October 1941.¹ The estimated number of Jews held in the Ustia ghetto was 2,500.

The inmates endured catastrophic conditions, starvation, and squalor, which contributed to the outbreak of a deadly typhus epidemic in the winter of 1941. In the Ustia ghetto alone, the disease claimed as many as 1,600 lives.² People died at such high rates that most corpses were only buried in mass graves.³ Over the course of 1942, the self-help measures implemented by the Jews in the ghetto brought the mass epidemic of typhus that re-erupted in the following winter (1942) under better control, which substantially decreased the number of victims. Humanitarian aid (medicine and clothes) received from the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER) in Bucharest in 1942 and 1943 further increased the effectiveness of the efforts to combat diseases in the ghetto. Still, conditions in the ghetto remained difficult for the entire duration of the deportees' captivity.

According to CER's census, there were 250 Jews in the Ustia ghetto in March 1943, probably not counting the Ukrainian Jews. Six hundred and sixty-five Jews from Bessarabia and 280 Jews from Bukovina were still registered at the site on September 1, 1943.⁴ It is unclear, however, whether this census number includes the Jews who were temporarily moved from the ghetto in June 1943 to work on a kolkhoz (collective farm) camp in Lugova on the Bug River, a few kilometers southeast of Ustia, or whether those Jews had returned to Ustia by September of that year.⁵ The chief of the Lugova camp (and probably leader of the Ustia ghetto) was I. Guttman.⁶

The Ustia ghetto likely operated until the spring of 1944. Scarce documentation suggests that Jewish detainees were interned there until their liberation in March and April 1944. Records often refer to a forced labor camp for Jews at Ustia during this period.⁷

SOURCES Further information about the fate of the Jews deported to Ustia can be found in the following publications: "Ustia," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 1007; "Ustia," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 324; "Ustia," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011), 7: 292; and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). Relevant publications include Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000).

Important primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Ustia can be found at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), AME (RG-25.006M), and ANR (RG-25.002M). See also Chernivtsi Jewish Survivors Organization Affidavits gathered by the Association of Former Prisoners of the Fascist Camps and Ghettos of the Chernivtsi Region, Ukraine (USHMM, RG-31.020M, microfiche no. 26, folder 2). VHA contains survivor testimonies, including those of Tsilia Koifman, December 16, 1996 (#24957); Ester Laufer, December 18, 1996 (#25088); and Hanah Porat, February 17, 1997 (#26337). The CNI of the ITS contains inquiries about numerous ghetto inmates likely incarcerated at Ustia; see ITS 1.2.7.24, folder 5. This documentation is available in digital form at USHMM.

Alexandra Lohse and Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Among others see CNI card for Miriam Guttman, Doc. No. 50580141; CNI card for Dora Lehrer, Doc. No. 50592894; and CNI card for Rosa Maudanek, Doc. No. 51277177.

2. "Ustia," in Altman, Kholokost na Territorii SSSR, p. 1007.

3. VHA #24957, Tsilia Koifman testimony, December 16, 1996.

4. For the March 1943 census, see "Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe," reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346; for the September 1943 census, see "Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943," reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 456. See also ITS, 1.2.7.24, folder 5, Doc. No. 82207440.

5. For the relocation of deportees from Ustia, see Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 308 (diary entry, June 25, 1943).

6. Cf. list of ghettos and camps in Balta județ, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562.

7. ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Ruth Fuhrmann, Doc. No. 51525241; ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Berta Mehler, Doc. No. 52029958.

VAPNIARCA

Vapniarca (pre-1941: Vapniarka), a village in the Tomașpol raion, Juguștriu județ (today: Ukraine), in the northwestern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located 47 kilometers (29 miles) northeast of Iampol. According to the 1939 Soviet census, 711 Jews lived in Vapniarca, representing nearly 20 percent of the village's total population. A number of Vapniarca's Jews fled with the retreating Red Army in June 1941, but approximately half stayed in the town.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Vapniarca on July 22, 1941. Soon thereafter the local Jews were sent to larger ghettos in the Tulcin județ. At the end of August 1941 control of the village was transferred to the Romanian civil administration, which romanianized its name as Vapniarca (also seen in reports as Vapnearca). The prefect of the Juguștriu județ was Colonel Ștefan S. Gheorghiadu, and the praetor in the Tomașpol raion was Victor Dobrescu. In succession, the commandants of the Vapniarca camp were Colonel Ilie C. Murgescu (1941–1942), Căpitan Sever Burădescu (1942–1943), Căpitan Cristodor Popescu (1943), Căpitan I. Urseanu, and Colonel Sabin Motora (1943). The commandant of the Vapniarca gendarmes was Colonel Basta.

A dilapidated former Soviet cavalry school, located 3 kilometers (1.8 miles) outside Vapniarca near a forest, was repurposed as a detention camp in October 1941. The facility changed from a detention camp into a prison camp (lagăr penitenciar) in March 1942. Surrounded by three barbed-wire fences, it comprised three large buildings (one for women and two for men) and two smaller buildings where a kitchen and washroom were set up. Each of the three barracks had two levels. An infirmary was set up at the end of 1942 in the first floor of one of the barracks. Watchtowers staffed with armed gendarmes marked the camp's limits. Near the entrance, there was a prison "cell," a deep hole in the ground covered with a large stone in which prisoners were thrown and kept standing in darkness without food or water for 24 to 48 hours. An open ditch near the camp's west side was the public lavatory. There was also a small, unmarked cemetery near the camp. The camp headquarters occupied a two-story building outside the barbed-wire fences.

The camp was first populated with a small group of Ukrainian convicts and some 101 Ukrainian members of a religious minority (Bogomils) persecuted for their faith. At the end of October 1941, 1,000 Jews from Odessa were deported to Vapniarca. A month later, in November 1941, a group of a few hundred Jews were deported there from Romania. A typhus epidemic erupted in December 1941. A large number of the detainees contracted typhus and died; others perished from cold, hunger, and illness; and still others were shot. The barracks lacked windows, doors, running water, and heating, which meant death in the bitter winter months of 1941. Another wave of more than 1,200 deportees from Odessa arrived in March 1942. Following Marshal Ion Antonescu's order in May 1942 that all religious minorities unrecognized by the state, or those recognized but disobeying government legislation, be deported to Transnistria, 350 Seventh-Day Adventists were deported to Vapniarca in the autumn of 1942.¹ The final large transport of prisoners to the camp occurred on September 16, 1942, when approximately 1,200 Jewish "political" prisoners from Romania, including 107 women and a few children, arrived after days of traveling in freight trains. Accused of being communists, socialists, and Zionists, 479 of them came from Romanian prisons, and an additional 722 were rounded up from their homes or workplaces.² A few leaders of the central and regional Jewish communal institutions accused of illegally helping Jews were among the deportees. On arrival, they were met with Murgescu's frightening words: "You entered a camp from where, if you survive, you'll leave on four feet or on crutches."

The camp had a Jewish committee consisting of Paul Dascal, Nicolae Goldschmidt, Rabbi Benjamin Vilner, Emanoil Vineanu, S. Bughici, and Aurel Rothenberg. Other committees known only among the prisoners also existed (secrecy about some committees was maintained for the prisoners' security). Pavel Donath was the camp's liaison with the Romanian authorities. Dr. Arthur Kessler from Cernăuți was one of the camp's 20 doctors. Thanks to the camp leaders' organizational skills and wisdom in dealing with Romanian authorities, the prisoners' living conditions gradually improved. Wooden planks, windows, bricks, and nails from nearby destroyed buildings were recycled. The Jewish leaders also imposed strict discipline in a mostly successful attempt to avoid conflict with other imprisoned groups.

The prisoners were fed daily 100 to 200 grams (3.5 to 7 ounces) of bread, a gluey type of dough made from hops and milled hay, and fodder peas. The fodder peas were toxic, intended primarily for animal consumption. The authorities knew about their adverse health effects, but still authorized the peas' consumption. By February 1943, 611 of 1,200 Jewish prisoners became sick with ulcers and chronic diarrhea, of whom 110 developed lathyrism—a neurological disease caused by eating the peas—in their feet.³ After refusing to eat the fodder peas during an organized strike, the prisoners were able to get better food, including horse meat.

Responding to claims of unfounded arrests, such as cases of mistaken identity, a commission from the Romanian Interior Ministry arrived in March 1943 at Vapniarca. The commission approved 427 cases for removal from the camp and placement at "liberty" in Transnistrian ghettos. Between April and June 1943, 100 Jews were sent to Olgopol, 127 to Savrani, and 200 to Trihaiu.⁴

Men and women undertook forced labor as office cleaners and cooks, and the skilled laborers worked in the camp's tailoring and shoemaking workshops (atelier). Teams of men unloaded coal at the train station and cut trees. Financial assistance from family and relatives was delivered to Vapniarca through the Aid Department of the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, Secțiunea de Asistență, CER), which also sent the inmates clothing, money, and Romanian Jews in the Transnistrian camp of Vapniarka, at work weaving.

USHMM WS #74182, COURTESY OF FEDERATION OF THE ROMANIAN JEWISH COMMUNITIES.

food.⁵ Partisans and their sympathizers stored food and other aid in the camp for anticipated attacks on the camp, which never occurred.⁶

At different occasions throughout their imprisonment, the talented and educated prisoners held cultural activities such as recitals and concerts for everyone, including the gendarmes and officers. A hidden radio provided information about the course of the war, which was then disseminated from person to person. Rabbi Vilner led prayers in the camp for the Jewish holidays. Other religious groups held their own services.

With the approach of the Red Army, the Romanian Interior Ministry decreed the closure of Vapniarka. In October 1943, 54 Jewish prisoners still serving a correctional sentence were sent to Râbnița prison to complete their sentence. On March 19, 1944, these Jews were shot in their cells and then burned with the entire prison (except for three or four survivors) by the Germans and their collaborators, despite ministerial plans for their repatriation.⁷ By mid-October 1943, the Vapniarka camp was dismantled and the remaining prisoners transported by train to the Grosulovo camp in the Tiraspol județ. Between December 1943 and January 1944, 355 of the former Vapniarka Jews then in Grosulovo were repatriated to Romania. The remaining 563 stayed in the Grosulovo camp until early March 1944. On March 12, 1944, Commandant Motora marched the group across the Dniester River to Tighina, in Bessarabia, in a last-minute effort to save them from the Germans who were reoccupying Transnistria.

The Bucharest People's Tribunal sentenced to life imprisonment three of Vapniarka's commandants: Murgescu, Burădescu, and Popescu. In 1983, Yad Vashem recognized Motora as a Righteous Among the Nations.

SOURCES Additional information about the Vapniarka camp can be found in the following sources: Paul A. Shapiro, "Vapniarka: The Archive of the International Tracing Service and the Holocaust in the East," HGS 27: 1 (Spring 2013): 114–137;

"Vapniarka," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 130; "Vapniarka," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2000), 4: 205; "Vapniarka," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sheniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 426–432; "Vapniarka," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., The Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1374; Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice "Dacia Traiană," 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2012); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Alexandr Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva 1941–1944: Entsiklopedichskii spravocnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 54. For the 1939 Soviet census, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 26. For the Righteous Among the Nations, see Israel Gutman et al., eds., Encyclopedia of the Righteous Among the Nations: Rescuers of Jews during the Holocaust, vol. 5, part 2 (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 2011), pp. 81–82.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews and non-Jews in the Vapniarka camp are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), SRI (RG-25.004M), and AME (RG-25.006M). The ITS holds three collections, available in digital form at USHMM, related to Vapniarka in 1.1.47.1 (Various Camps), including documentation by Dr. Arthur Kessler on lathyrism. A newspaper article "Lagărul de exterminare de la Vapniarka," LuNo (ca. 1946), recounts the living conditions in the camp and the sentencing of its camp commanders. The article can be found at USHMM, RG-68.029M (ACMEOR), reel 11, file 62, p. 496. There are 45 VHA testimonies in six languages about the Vapniarka camp. For an account of life in the Vapniarka camp and Rybnitsa prison, see two testimonies by former prisoner Matei Gall, Masacrul (Bucharest: Editura de Stat pentru Literatură, 1956), and Eclipsa (Bucharest: Du Style, 1997), originally published in German. For another eyewitness account, see Ihiel Benditer, Vapniarka: Lagărele Vapniarka și Grosulovo, închisoarea Râbnița, ghetourile Olgopol, Savrani, Tridubi, Crivoi-Ozero și Tribati (Tel Aviv: Anais, 1995), also available in a shorter form at www.nizkor.org/hweb/people/c/carmelly-felicia/benditer-ihiel.html.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Order No. 5721/M, May 6, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 34, file 40010, vol. 59, p. 51 (USHMMA, RG-25.004M/34/40010/59, p. 51).
2. General de corp de armată Constantin Z. Vasiliu, Deportation Order No. 799 / May 9, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/34/40010/59, p. 53.
3. VHA #20192, Leah Derera testimony, September 22, 1996; VHA #50007, Lupu Sloim testimony, July 26, 1999; for statistical figures in the spring of 1943, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 348; see also I. Stănculescu’s “Raport în legătura cu situația evreilor aflați în ghetourile din Transnistria,” USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21, pp. 594–598 (esp. p. 594).
4. “Tabel nominal de mutările și transferările de evrei,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 674, pp. 12–14 (and verso) (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/16/2358/1/674, pp. 12–14).
5. “Tabel de remiterile făcute evreilor din țară deportați în Transnistria și aflați la Vapniarca (jud. Juguștrou),” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/8/2255/1s, 1310, pp. 210–211; see also in the same collection, p. 209; and in USHMMA, RG-31.004M/8/2255/1s/1243, p. 355.
6. VHA #50019, Marcel Floreanu testimony, June 21, 1999.
7. Information letter No. 55.055, March 16, 1944, from the Romanian General Inspectorate of Gendarmes to the Târgu Jiu internment camp, USHMMA, RG-25.004M/40010/59, p. 79.

VASELINOVO

Vaselinovo (pre-1941: Veselynové), seat of Vaselinovo raion, Berezovca județ (today: Ukraine), in the southeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is located 29 kilometers (18 miles) northeast of Berezovca. The Chychykliya River, a tributary of the Bug River, divided the town into two parts. In 1939, there were 58 Jews in Vaselinovo township and 189 in the raion. German and Romanian forces occupied Vaselinovo in mid-August 1941, and shortly afterward, by early September, authority over the town and its surroundings was transferred to the Romanian civil administration. The name of the township and raion was romanianized as Vaselinovo or Veselinovo.

The high-ranking representatives of the Romanian authority in the Berezovca județ were Colonel Leonida Popp, who was appointed prefect in Berezovca, and his deputy, Sublocotenent Alexandru Smochină. The commandant of the Berezovca Gendarmes Legion was Maior Ion Popescu, who was subsequently replaced by Octavian Ursuleanu. The head of medical services for the Berezovca județ was Dr. Aurel Juga. The praetor in the Vaselinovo raion was Zacheu Buligă.

During the last days of German control of Vaselinovo, the 40 Jews who remained in place after the retreat of the Red Army were shot near a ravine on the township’s outskirts; this massacre took place on September 5, 1941. Many of those killed were German-speaking Jews, because the area was populated with many ethnic Germans (Volksdeutsche). The town was then empty of Jews until early 1942. On January 20, 1942, some 2,200 Jews from Odessa were deported by train to Vaselinovo. After disembarking, the Jews did not stay in town, but were marched (at times aimlessly) under escort, in unbearably cold, windy, and snowy conditions, to various villages in the raion. Hungry and impoverished after days of travel from Odessa, many elderly Jews died of exhaustion and cold on the road before they could find shelter in dilapidated barns and stables.

The Romanian authorities’ efforts to contain and eradicate typhus outbreaks during the winter of 1941 produced few results, endangering the lives of civilians and soldiers alike. By the summer of 1942 several foci of the epidemic in villages near Vaselinovo were still active. Fearing the epidemic would only intensify with the arrival of new waves of Roma deportations from Romania and the approach of winter, some 500 Jews (some ill with typhus, others simply unproductive because of a lack of clothes) were taken from the Suha Balca camp to Vaselinovo on September 22. At the recommendation of the SS Ethnic German Liaison Office (Volksdeutsche Mittelstelle, VoMi), they were shot, along with another group of 550 Romanian Jews brought there from Mostovoi, by an ethnic German police unit (Selbstschutz) on Yom Kippur. The same unit also exterminated 120 Jews brought to Vaselinovo from Mostovoi in May 1943. The rationale for the killings was to stop a typhus outbreak that began in the winter months of 1942 and was still active, because Jews and Roma were considered the main carriers of the disease.

Little more than numbers is known about the Vaselinovo ghetto and its inhabitants, despite the hundreds of Ukrainian and Romanian Jews murdered in the town. According to a March 1943 census of all deported Jews (Ukrainian and Romanian), there were four Jews in Vaselinovo and seven in Budienny farm (a facility near Vaselinovo).¹ The small ghetto was still in existence in September 1943, when 15 Jews were listed as ghetto residents.² In another account from the same month, 19 Jews working for the praetorial and gendarmes offices in Vaselinovo were listed as residents in the ghetto. They held blue-collar (carpenter, driver, and farmer) and white-collar (accountant) jobs. Of the 19 Jews, 11 worked for Budienny farm.³ A September 1943 census of Jews deported from Romania found three Jews (two from Bessarabia, one from Bukovina) in Vaselinovo, without counting the local Ukrainian Jewish population.⁴

In late 1943, the Romanian authorities aimed to relieve the overcrowding in existing Roma colonies in Mostovoi by transferring 95 Roma (Gypsy) families from camps in the Mostovoi raion to 33 villages in the Vaselinovo raion. At the time, around 2,600 Roma lived in the Mostovoi raion in overcrowded and underequipped facilities, lacking food, soap, and winter clothes. In the new locations in Vaselinovo, the Roma were supposed to work in agriculture and live off the land beginning in the spring of 1944.⁵ The Red Army’s liberation of Vaselinovo at the end of March 1944 disrupted the Romanian authorities’ plans, however, freeing both Jews and the Roma.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews and Roma in Vaselinovo can be gleaned from the following sources: “Veselinovo,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2000), 4: 236; “Veselinovo,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyab sbel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-ad le-abar Sho’at Milhemet ha-’olam ha-sheniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 1: 438; Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); and Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 54.

Primary sources documenting the fate of Jews and Roma in Vaselinovo are available at USHMMA, in collection DAOO (RG-31.004M).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reproduced in Ancel, Documents, 5: 347.

2. “Tabel nominal de evreii aflați în ghetoul Vaselinovo,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 19, fond 2361, opis 1, delo 591, p. 81 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/591).

3. See “Tabel nominal Nr. 1 de întrebuințarea evreilor din com. Veselinova—Jud. Berezovca,” USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/590, p. 64 (verso).

4. See “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 439.

5. See letter Nr. 564, February 18, 1944, from Vaselinovo raion praetorial office to the labor office, Berezovca District, USHMMA, RG-31.004M/19/2361/1/592, p. 221; but see also pp. 219–220 in the same collection.

VASLUI/LPRS NO. 4

The city of Vaslui, the county seat of the Vaslui județ, in Moldavia, in eastern Romania, is located 60 kilometers (37 miles) south of Iași, 276 kilometers (172 miles) northeast of Bucharest, and nearly 99 kilometers (over 61 miles) southwest of Chișinău. After the joint German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) were brought to Vaslui in early July 1941. The camp where they were held in Vaslui became known as Camp No. 4 for Soviet prisoners (Lagărul de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici Nr. 4), LPRS No. 4. The prefect in the Vaslui județ was Colonel Vasile Dumitrescu. The Army General Staff (Marele Stat Major, MSM) exercised ultimate authority over the camp; this institution issued the laws and regulations imposed on all Soviet POWs held in Romanian camps, including those held in LPRS No. 4 Vaslui. At the regional level, the III Territorial Command controlled LPRS No. 4, and Colonel Aliodor Ionescu served as its commandant.

Immediately on arrival in Vaslui, the POWs were taken to a registration center located on the premises of a large Orthodox church. After registration they were assigned to one of the two existing camps: LPRS No. 2 (commanded by Locotenent-colonel Căndea) and LPRS No. 4. After only a few weeks, by the end of July 1941, the two camps merged into a single entity, LPRS No. 4, with two parts. LPRS No. 4 was situated on the city’s outskirts in an empty school building (Școala normală “Ștefan cel Mare”). Gradually, as the number of prisoners grew, a number of large wooden barracks were built around the school building to accommodate the prisoners. A distinctive sign, a circle painted in black on the front and back of the internee’s overcoat, was mandated, but was rarely implemented and worn.

Most prisoners arrived in the camp in shabby clothes, and some were missing even their military boots. They were also filthy from weeks of internment in temporary holding centers without access to washing facilities. Soon after arrival, they were assigned in small groups and always under guard to do labor for impoverished Romanian families throughout the Vaslui județ. These were families whose sons or husbands were fighting on the front or were headed by war widows with small children. The prisoners helped with agricultural tasks: harvesting, weeding, haying, and hoeing. Town and village mayors also requested prisoners, usually in larger numbers, to work for landowners on farming and estate improvements. The requests were made by the mayors of Solești (which received 60 prisoners), Știoborăni (70), Ferești (20), Mânjești (100), Lipovăț (50), Deleni (100), Brodoc (122), Armășoia (100), Cozmești (140), and Negrești (200), among others. Transfers of prisoners to army centers or to small factories working for the army in Romania also occurred as early as the end of July 1941 and continued throughout 1942. On July 28, 1941, 169 prisoners (165 troops and 4 officers) were dispatched to Bucharest; the next day some 650 prisoners went to Constanța and another 700 to Slatina; later on in 1942, another group of 350 was transferred to Brașov where some worked as carpenters in a wagon factory. It is unclear how many prisoners were registered as belonging to LPRS No. 4 and its subcamps. The Soviet archives indicate about 10,000 prisoners, and some sources suggest that another 10,000 passed through the camp on their way to other camps for Soviet POWs.¹

An army infirmary or small hospital where ill prisoners received medical attention existed in the camp. The hospital had a very limited supply of medicine for the prisoners. Jewish doctors or pharmacists were requisitioned from all over the province of Moldavia (Iași, Botoșani) to work as medical staff in the camp. Whenever typhus or other epidemics erupted in the camp, many more Jewish doctors were enlisted to combat the epidemic and treat the ill.² A large number of prisoners perished from maltreatment and diseases. Soviet sources indicate a number of 799 fatalities, their bodies buried in the cemeteries of the towns or communes where they lived and worked at that time.³ During the frigid winters, when the number of victims was higher and temperatures dropped significantly below freezing, the corpses were piled up outside, awaiting burial until the weather improved.

Life in the camp was challenging. Working prisoners (those building or improving railroads, roads, and bridges) earned a small amount of pocket money, which they sometimes used to buy additional cigarettes or bread from other prisoners who had even less money. The army outfitted working prisoners with recycled clothes and peasant leather sandals (opinci), which also became commodities for trade in the camp with those unable or unneeded for work. Food in the camp consisted of a thin slice of bread and a bowl of watery soup, which was similar to what prisoners hired by private institutions received. To supplement their food, prisoners fought over potato peels that camp cooks usually tossed to the ground. Meals containing meat were rare and were served only when a horse died or when the camp was inspected (once a year) by members of the Romanian Red Cross (Cruce Roșie din România, CRR). Monsignor Andrea Cassulo, the papal nuncio to Romania, visited LPRS No. 4 Vaslui in the summer of 1942. Some Sundays, a priest arrived in the camp to pray with the prisoners of Ukrainian descent.⁴

LPRS No. 4 Vaslui had two subcamps. One subcamp was located in Bârlad about 45 kilometers (28 miles) south of Vaslui; the other was in Huși some 25 kilometers (16 miles) east of Vaslui. The Huși subcamp was set up in September 1942. It had a contingent of 100 prisoners and 12 guards. Prisoners in this subcamp were lodged in two wooden barracks outside Huși. They mined stone from nearby quarries and fixed roads and bridges. The Bârlad subcamp had 550 prisoners who undertook similar work projects.

Prisoners returned to the main camp from the subcamps at the end of 1943. On August 23, 1944, Romania switched sides and entered the war against Germany and its allies. The prisoners in LPRS No. 4 Vaslui remained in Romanian hands until October 1944, when they were handed over to the Soviet authorities to begin the difficult process of repatriation to the Soviet Union. After the war, starting in 1945, the commanders of LPRS No. 4 Vaslui were tried for mistreating the prisoners and causing the death of many. They were sentenced to many years of hard labor.

SOURCES Secondary sources attesting to the camp's existence include Paul Zahariuc, Fălciu, Tutova, Vaslui. Secvente istorice (1907–1989) (Vaslui: Centrul Județean pentru Conservarea și Promovarea Culturii Tradiționale, 2012); Andrei Șiperco, Crucea Roșie Internațională și România 1939–1944 (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 1997); and Vasile Popa, “Prizonierii Sovietici în România (1941–1944),” available at www.once.ro/sesiuni/sesiune_2007/9%20prizonieri_popa.pdf.

Primary sources documenting the fate of Soviet POWs and Jews in LPRS No. 4 Vaslui are available at USHMMA, in collections AMAN (RG-25.003); ANR-Vs (RG-25.025M, reel 18); and ANR-Is (RG-25.029, reels 6 and 15). Archival sources are also available at TsAMO, fond 58, opis 18003, delo 1607 (which opens on p. 2 with an instructive table listing the names of Red Army soldiers who perished in Romanian camps for POWs). Testimonies involving LPRS No. 4 can be found in VHA.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Prisoner registration forms, TsAMO, fond 58, opis 977528, delo 135, 161, 162, 163, 165.
2. See telegrams informing LPRS No. 4 of the arrival of Jewish doctors: USHMMA, RG-25.004M (AMAN), reel 36, file 7245, pp. 136–140, 392–395; and in the same record group, reel 42, file 7254, p. 122.
3. An alphabetical list with the names and places of burial of the 799 dead can be found in TsAMO, fond 58, opis 18003, delo 1607, pp. 159–238; and in the same record group, fond, and opis, delos 1624 and 1626.
4. VHA #02283, Samuel Reich testimony, April 27, 1995.

VAZDOVCA

Vazdovca (today: Hvozdvka Druha, Ukraine), in the Liubașevca raion in the southern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, Golta județ, is located 35 kilometers (22 miles) east of Balta. The German and Romanian armies occupied the area by the end of July 1941, subsequently transferring control to the Romanian civil administration in September of the same year. The Romanian authorities romanianized the village's name from Gvozdvka to Vazdovca (sometimes referred to in documentation as Văzdovca, Gvozdvca, or Cvozdvca) and changed the raion's name to Liubașevca. The prefect in the Golta district was Colonel Modest Isopescu.

The collective farm (kolkhoz) of Vazdovca served as a makeshift transit camp for deportation convoys during the mass deportations of Jews from the province of Bessarabia in Romania in the fall and winter of 1941. An estimated 15,000 Jews were registered at Vazdovca by October 1941. They included deportees from Chișinău, Bălți, and elsewhere in Bessarabia. Accommodations at Vazdovca were completely inadequate. Deportees endured catastrophic conditions as they crowded into basements, attics, and stables. Most people slept outdoors, exposed to the elements. Gendarmerie officers reorganized their deportation convoys at Vazdovca and then continued to force-march the survivors on to other sites, including the village of Zachariyevca in Golta's Vradiyevca raion and the Domanovca camp in the southern Golta județ. This southeastern part of the Golta județ was named by Holocaust scholars Transnistria's “kingdom of death” due to the high number of fatalities and murders that occurred there.

The guards abused and murdered countless deportees on their way to and from Vazdovca, leaving thousands of dead bodies in the fields and roads along the convoys' routes.¹ Vazdovca also immediately became a site of mass death as exhausted deportees succumbed to typhus and other diseases, starvation, and fatigue. According to a report by Prefect Modest Isopescu, some 8,000 people had already died at Vazdovca by November 13, 1941. Isopescu ordered the 20th Infantry Regiment, which was stationed there, to guard the Jews and prevent the spread of disease to the local populations. Maior Enache, the regiment's physician, declared the entire transit camp infected with typhus and warned of the spread of the disease to the soldiers and civilians in the area. The soldiers of the 4th Company road patrol unit of the 20th Division were dispatched to "disinfect" the camp at Vazdovca by burying the dead. However, the continuing influx of new deportees from the south and the ongoing mass dying at Vazdovca rendered these measures ineffectual in stemming the typhus epidemic. In late November 1941, Isopescu ordered the evacuation of the Jews from Vazdovca to the Bogdanovca camp, 75 kilometers (47 miles) southeast of Vazdovca on the west bank of the Bug River (today: Bohdanivka, Ukraine).² The camp was closed at the end of 1941, most likely returning to its original agricultural purpose in the spring of 1942.

SOURCES Additional information regarding the fate of Jews at Vazdovca, including those transferred from there to Bogdanovca, can be found in the following publications: "Gvoz-dovka," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evrejtva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiy spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 81; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 5 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary documentation is available in the following collections at USHMM: DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAMO (RG-31.008M), SRI (RG-25.004M), and AMAN (RG-25.003M). Relevant VHA testimonies include Ida Boiarskaia, March 4, 1997 (#28591); Maiia Fel'man, January 26, 1997 (#27615); and Charna Langman, May 17, 1997 (#15338). There are additional testimonies by survivors of the Bogdanovca camp.

Alexandra Lohse and Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 259.

2. Joint cable from Colonel Ion Georgescu and Maior Enache to Isopescu, November 17, 1941, as found in Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942, p. 109. The cable can be found at USHMM, RG-31.008 (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis1, delo 66, pp. 185–186.

VERHOVCA

Verhovca (today: Obodivka raion, Ukraine), in the Balta județ, is located 33 kilometers (21 miles) southeast of Tulcin. The German and Romanian armies occupied the area by the end of July 1941, subsequently transferring control to the Romanian civil administration in September of the same year. The new authorities romanianized the village's name from Verkhivka to Verhovca, and the raion became Obodovca. The prefect in the Balta district was Colonel Vasile Nica.

During the mass expulsions of Jews from Romania that began in the fall and winter of 1941, Verhovca served as a transit point for deportation convoys. As early as October 1941, some 1,200 Romanian Jews and a smaller number of Ukrainian Jews were detained in a large cowshed and some 20 clay huts at Verhovca.¹ Among them was 12-year-old Yona Maleron, who had been deported with her family. She noted in her diary that the village was desolate and the huts had been wrecked and ransacked. Many lacked roofs and had cracks in the walls. Hundreds of people crowded into these spaces, where they slept on straw-covered ground. The inmates endured catastrophic conditions, starvation, and squalor, which contributed to the spread of a deadly typhus epidemic in the winter of 1941. By early 1942, some 500 people had died in the Verhovca ghetto. As Yona Maleron described the harrowing experience,

It was snowing. The bitter cold inside the shed was indescribable. Snow covered the walls and floor. Typhus spared no home in the ghetto; it felled its victims without mercy. Within a few days, we had all taken ill. . . . My father lay in agony for five days and died like a dog. That same day, my grandmother took sick. She died the next day, apparently more from hunger and cold than from disease. My mother, too, fell ill, closed her eyes and ceased to utter a sound. . . . All around me, there were only the dead and the dying; no one became well again.²

Yona and most other survivors of the epidemic were transferred from Verhovca to other ghettos in the region, although a small number of Jews remained at the site. Sixty-eight Jews from Bessarabia and one from Bukovina were still registered at Verhovca on September 1, 1943.³ According to documentation from the Balta județ prefecture, a Jewish committee composed of eight men administered the ghetto and organized the forced labor at the site.⁴ Documentation also sometimes refers to the site as a labor camp for Jews during this period. Some Jews remained at Verhovca until its liberation in March and April 1944.⁵

SOURCES Relevant publications include Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Yona Maleron, Od Tetzi Mikan (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), pp. 365–366, which includes excerpts from her diary; Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). See also Michael and Raquel Stivelman, A marca dos genocídios (Rio de Janeiro: Imago, 2001); and Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996).

Important primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Verhovca can be found at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), including reels 6 and 17; AME (RG-25.006M); and ANR (RG-25.002M). See also Chernivtsi Jewish Survivors Organization Affidavits gathered by the Association of Former Prisoners of the Fascist Camps and Ghettos of the Chernivtsi Region, Ukraine (USHMM, RG-31.020M, microfiche no. 19, folder 2). The ITS contains inquiries about numerous deportees and ghetto inmates registered at Verhovca; see ITS, 1.2.7.24, folder 5.

Alexandra Lohse

NOTES

1. Among others, see ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Lea Hager, Doc. No. 52194550; and ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Baruch Hager, Doc. No. 52444982.

2. Maleron, Od Tetzi Mikan, pp. 23–25, quoted in Ancel, Transnistria 1941–1942, 1: 365–366.

3. ITS, 1.2.7.24, folder 5, Doc. No. 82207440.

4. USHMM, RG-31.004M, reel 6, List of Jewish Bureau Labor Organization of Balta County and of Jewish Committees from Balta County as of September 1, 1943.

5. ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Salo Müller, Doc. No. 51307306.

VIDELE

Videle, a small town in the Vlașca județ in the Regat, in the southern part of Romania (today: Videle, Teleorman județ), is located 48 kilometers (30 miles) west-southwest of Bucharest and 357 kilometers (nearly 222 miles) south-southwest of Iași.

A camp for political detainees existed at Videle at the time of the German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union. Formally known as the Videle internment camp (Lagărul de Internare Videle), it provided cheap labor for the Romanian Railways Company (Căile Ferate Române). For that reason the detainees were formed into the Videle Railway Detainee Detachment No. 68 (Detășamentul 68 C.F. Deșinuți Videle). The camp was also occasionally referred to as the “Videle Railway Work Vagabonds Detachment No. 68” (Detășamentul Lucru C.F. Vagabonzi No. 68 Videle), the word “vagabond” being freely interchanged with “political detainee.”¹

The camp was under the administration of the Railway Works Detachments Command (Comandamentul Detășamentelor Lucrări Căi Ferate), led by Locotenent-colonel Traian Panaitescu, but was ultimately controlled by the Romanian Internal Affairs Ministry. A group of 120 gendarmes commanded by Căpitan Ion Popescu guarded the camp. Popescu was also the camp commandant, assisted by two officers and three noncommissioned officers (NCOs).²

The camp was located in Videle near the train station. It was a primitive facility; the detainees slept in huts, on layers of straw or cattail (reed) mats. They were deloused by head shaving.

The camp initially held non-Jewish men and women suspected of communist activity. The detainees were classified as “S.2” (as opposed to “S.1,” the more “dangerous” suspects) within the Antonescu regime’s hierarchy of security threats. It was difficult to prove the suspects’ illegal activity that warranted detention, as the authorities occasionally admitted, but they were forcefully admitted into the Videle camp in any case.

The Videle camp appeared among the listing of detention camps in the Regat at the beginning of August 1941 as having a contingent of 89 “suspects.” By September, their number increased to 397, of whom only 235 were declared “apt” for work.³ Commandant Panaitescu informed the General Gendarmes Inspectorate in Bucharest that the health of the prisoners was “precarious” and invited a commission from the Internal Affairs Ministry to hear the appeals of the detainees because “many have repeatedly stated that they are innocent.”⁴

The detainees worked various jobs in the laying of new railway tracks near Videle in the Milcov Valley, on the new Bucharest-Craiova rail line that was being built at that time. Some detainees were assigned to build embankments and others huts, whereas still others were put to work in carpentry, ironsmithing, and loading and pushing barrows. The camp received payment for the work done by the detainees from August to November, but the detainees themselves were not paid. Their remuneration consisted of “room and board,” so when the camp was disbanded on November 26, 1941, they were sent away empty-handed.⁵

The Internal Affairs Ministry committee that inspected the facilities of the camp after it closed in November considered the prisoners’ sleeping mats, as well as other cooking utensils used for feeding them, to be beyond repair due to their lice infestation and/or deterioration. Because of the conditions inside the camp, the committee decided to burn or throw away these items, rather than reuse them.⁶

In addition to the non-Jewish detainees, Jews from Romania suspected of communist activity were also interned in the Videle camp during the summer months of 1941; in fact, in October 1941, 126 of 169 detainees were Jews (121 men and 5 women).⁷ To give one example, a group of 26 Jews from Bukovina, from places such as Suceava, Storojineț, and Rădăuți, were escorted back to Bukovina when the camp closed.⁸ Instead of being released, however, the governor of Bukovina, General de divizie Corneliu Calotescu, instructed that the Jews from Bukovina be interned directly in Sădăgura, a prison camp just outside Cernăuți. It is most likely that they were included among the second wave of deportees from Cernăuți sent to Transnistria in May–June 1942.⁹ Those who were from the Regat were subject to forced labor until August 1944, when Romania switched sides in the war and annulled the forced labor laws.

SOURCES A specific study of the Videle camp has not been done. For the forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the Videle camp and the fate of its prisoners are available at USHMMA, in collections ANR (RG-25.002M), AMAN (RG-25.003M), and DACkO (RG-31.006M).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. See, for example, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMAN), Fondul Commandamentul Detașamentelor de Căi Ferate, file 21, p. 230.

2. Information note to the General Gendarmes Inspectorate, September 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, file 11, p. 1; and file 21, p. 301.

3. See the camp statistics, “Situția Lagărelor,” August 6, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.002M (ANR), reel 17, file 86, p. 19; for the September figure, see RG-25.003M, file 11, p. 1.

4. Information note to the General Gendarmes Inspectorate, September 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, file 11, p. 1.

5. See payment receipts from July to November 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.003M, file 11, pp. 7–26, 34; also file 21, pp. 271–272.

6. USHMMA, RG-25.003M, file 11, pp. 28–29.

7. USHMMA, RG-25.003M, file 21, p. 301 (verso).

8. See a list of the names of these Jews, USHMMA, RG-31.006M (DACkO), reel 22, fond 38, opis 6, delo 152, p. 169.

9. See correspondence between the Videle camp, the Government of Bukovina, and the Sădăgura camp, USHMMA, RG-31.006M, reel 22, fond 38, opis 6, delo 152, pp. 163–168.

VIGODA

Vigoda, a village in the Belaevca raion, Ovidiopol județ (today: Vyhoda, Ukraine), in the southwestern corner of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is 30 kilometers (19 miles) northwest of Odessa. The Romanian administrative outline of the raion distinguishes between a “Russian Vigoda” and a “German Vigoda,” suggesting two localities in close proximity or one locality with two distinct parts.

The German and Romanian armies occupied the area in October 1941. The Romanian administration, taking control of the area in the second part of October 1941, romanianized the village’s name from Vygodă to Vigoda, and the raion became Belaevca. Ovidiopol’s prefect was Colonel Mihai Botez, who was succeeded by N. Canari. The commandant of the Ovidiopol Gendarmes Legion from 1942 to 1943 was Căpitan (then Maior) Angel Dedulescu. The praetor in the Belaevca raion was Grigore Goteu.

A convoy of hundreds of Jews deported from the city of Odessa and its surroundings in the spring of 1942 was held for a short period of time on the compounds of the Vigoda farm; these Jews were then shot and buried in a mass grave near the farm. The burial mounds were still visible months later. The Romanian authorities placed land mines in the area around the mass grave to prevent anyone from approaching the site.

In September 1942, over the course of a few transports, approximately 550 Romanian Jews were deported from the Old Kingdom (the Regat) and southern Transylvania to Transnistria because of their alleged absence from or tardiness in reporting to forced labor duties. These Jews were originally from such cities and districts as Arad, Bucharest, Brăila, Galați, Vaslui, Iași, Roman, Baia, Buzău, Dorohoi, Cernăuți, and Timiș.¹ According to the Romanian Army General Staff’s instruction (No. 88.66, issued in July 1942), the Jews who committed those infractions were to be deported to Transnistria. If the named Jews could not be found, their families were to be deported. The deportation appeared to be permanent, because no period of time was mentioned in the document.²

Of those 550 Jews slated for deportation, 293 Jews were transported by train in freight cars from Bucharest to Odessa.³ Many of these Jews were ordered to be deported by General de brigadă Nicolae Cepleanu, the inspector over all labor brigades for Jews from 1942 to 1944. After being held for three days in barns in Scârba, a village near Odessa, they were taken to Vigoda by another train. The journey lasted almost two weeks in debilitating, crowded conditions, with the deportees not receiving more than a few buckets of water.⁴ The Jews, of both sexes and of all ages, were placed in the Vigoda camp, which was a farm administered by the Government of Transnistria. The farm, known as Ovidiopol județ’s “experimental farm,” was situated between the villages of Vigoda, Petrovski (today: Petrivske), and Berezin (today: Berezan’). The farm’s Ukrainian name from Soviet times was Sevcenco, so that the Vigoda camp was occasionally referred to as the “Sevcenco camp.”⁵

The Jews were housed in a large dilapidated building, probably the former residence of a noble family (hence the use of the term “mansion” in some documents to describe the facility), which they restored and cleaned as best as they could. The building was isolated from the other parts of the farm and was encircled by a double barbed-wire fence. Some 44 of its rooms were repurposed as living quarters for the Jews. The rooms were empty, its windows had no glass, and plumbing was nonexistent. The pane-less windows were boarded up because of the cold, leaving only a small opening for light and air. No laundry, washing, or cooking facilities existed; for the setting up of such facilities, only “orders and instructions were given.” The Jews dug latrines outside the building, and a shower room and a small infirmary were set up in two small single-room houses. A few Jews were appointed as camp medical staff, and others became internal policemen. A few days after arriving, an effort was made to delouse everyone, but its good effect was soon reversed by the living conditions. The camp was lightly guarded by the gendarmes from the Petrovski gendarmes post, although there was a tall watchtower equipped with a rotating searchlight.

The regime inside the camp was stricter than in other camps, because these Jews were not ordinary deportees but rather were “delinquent Jews” (evrei infractori). Discipline followed a code of practice made up of 20 points that severely restricted the guards’ contact with the Jews and their movement outside the camp, censored access to information (letters and newspapers) and packages sent from home, prohibited barter, and permitted the soldiers to use firearms in case of disorder and disobedience.⁶ The camp administrator, Gogleață, was a harsh man; he was a declared Legionnaire, meaning that he wore the green shirt of the Legion of the Archangel Michael (Legiunea Arhanghelului Mihail) and was armed with a revolver. He took distinct pleasure in verbally and physically abusing the Jews. One night in October 1942, he orchestrated the gang rape of a young Jewish girl from the camp, taking part first in the act, followed by other guards.⁷

Compulsory work on the farm (picking sunflowers from fields) lasted from morning to evening, under the eyes for the guards. Children worked in the chicken coop. Hardly any food or water was given when working, and on the rare occasion when some food was distributed, the rations were small, watery, and poor in nutrients. Barter (although prohibited) became the only means of survival. Relatives from Romania sent small sums of money to their loved ones in the camp, but whether the money reached the intended recipients is unclear.⁸ The nights in October and November were very cold, and there was no wood to burn in the camp; it had to be collected from outside the camp at night, at great risk. Four Jews lost their lives to hunger and exhaustion, and many others suffered from diseases they contracted while imprisoned in the camp.⁹ A Jewish doctor from Romania undertaking his forced labor duty in Transnistria was temporarily assigned to the Vigoda camp, but had only aspirin at his disposal to treat his patients.

The camp closed on November 10, 1942 (or November 30, according to other accounts), when the Jews were transferred to Alexandrovca (in the Ovidiopol județ), a village 60 kilometers (more than 37 miles) southeast of Vigoda. There they lived in railcars and were forced to toil in a vineyard belonging to the governor of Transnistria, Gheorghe Alexianu, until December 26, 1942, when they were again deported to a different location.

On September 30, 1943, the Presidency of the Council of Ministers in Bucharest approved the repatriation to Romania of all Jews deported to Transnistria for allegedly neglecting their forced labor duties.¹⁰ This repatriation was in advance of the general repatriation that occurred in March 1944. The survivors of the Vigoda camp, at that point inmates of the Golta ghetto (in the Golta județ) where they ended up after repeated deportations, returned to Romania in November 1943 by train.

In 1945, the Bucharest People’s Court tried and sentenced to many years’ hard labor the military and civilian leaders who mistreated the Jews sent to Transnistria by General Cepleanu.

The general himself was under court investigation when he committed suicide.¹¹

SOURCES More information regarding the fate of the deportees sent to the Vigoda camp can be found in the following publications: Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vols. 5 and 6 (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Felicia Carmelly, Shattered! 50 Years of Silence: History and Voices of the Tragedy in Romania and Transnistria (Scarborough: Abbeyfield Publishers, 1997). For a collection of documents regarding the forced labor of Jews in Romania, see Ana Bărbulescu and Alexandru Florian, eds., Munca Obligatorie a Evreilor din România: Documente, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Iași: Polirom in association with the Elie Wiesel National Institute for the Study of the Holocaust in Romania, 2013).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews in the Vigoda camp are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), AMAN (RG-25.003M), AME (RG-25.006M), and SRI (RG-25.004M). A memoir by survivor Sonia Palty is Evrei treceti Nistrul! Îsemnări din deportare (Bucharest: Cartea Românească, 1992). Palty’s testimony is also available in German as Jenseits des Dnjestr: jüdische Deportationsschicksale aus Bukarest in Transnistrien 1942–1943, trans. Erhard R. Wiehn (Konstanz: Hartung Gore, 1995). VHA holds two testimonies (in English and Romanian) from Jewish survivors who were held in the Vigoda camp; three survivor testimonies (in Russian) document the massacre of Jews from Odessa in the Vigoda camp.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For a list of their names and places of origin, see “Tabel nominal de everii deportați în Transnistria,” August 1943, reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 383–389.

2. See MSM communications, USHMM, RG-25.003M (AMAN), reel 328, file 1054, p. 189 (see also pp. 180–182).

3. Diary entry for September 24, 1942, in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 297. See a list of names of these Jews issued by the Ovidiopol Gendarmes Legion, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 15, fond 2357, opis 1, delo 352, pp. 132–133 (and verso).

4. See Vigoda camp survivor Sonyah Palty account, an excerpt of which can be found at www.nizkor.org/hweb/people/c/carmelly-felicia/palty-sonia.html.

5. See medical doctor Teofil Buța’s camp inspection report, October 10, 1942, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 16, fond 2358, opis 1, delo 710, p. 500.

6. See code of practice, “Consemn pentru jandarmii aflați de pază la Lagărul de evrei,” USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 15, fond 2357, opis 1, delo 352, p. 134 (and verso).

7. VHA #18100, Sonyah Palți testimony, July 31, 1996.

8. See receipts after money transfers, USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 519, pp. 162, 164, 180.

9. Diary entry for November 10, 1942, in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 300.

10. See notification from the General Inspectorate of Gendarmes for gendarme legions in Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 26, p. 419.

11. See court report, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 28, file 38882, vol. 1, pp. 2–3; see also vol. 2 in the same collection.

VIJNIȚA

Vijnița (pre-1941: Vijnitsa), a town in the Storojineț județ, in northwestern Bukovina (today: Vyzhnytsya, Ukraine), is on the Ceremosh River, a tributary of the Prut River. Vijnița is 307 kilometers (191 miles) northwest of Chișinău and 55 kilometers (34 miles) west of Cernăuți. According to censuses taken by the Romanian authorities, in 1930 there were 2,666 Jews living in Vijnița; in December 1939 there were 14,832 Jews in the Storojineț județ, and by September 1941, 4,311 Jews remained. Census data for Vijnița are not available for the 1939–1940 period, but conservative estimates claim that between 5,000 and 7,000 Jews lived there. Dozens of able-bodied Jewish men were mobilized into the Red Army, and although some Jewish families fled deeper inside the Soviet Union, the majority of Jews remained in place.¹

In the days following the Soviet retreat from Vijnița and just before the arrival of the German and Romanian armies, Ukrainian gangs from the area pillaged Jewish houses and demanded sums of money from the Jews in exchange for not murdering them.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Vijnița on July 5, 1941. An order was immediately issued that for 24 hours all the villagers were permitted to do as they pleased with the Jews. On entering the town, Romanian mountain infantry units commanded by Maior Ion Oprea and Locotenent Voinea, assisted by Ukrainian nationalists and German sympathizers, searched Jewish houses under the pretext of looking for hidden arms. During these searches, they robbed, beat, raped, and killed Jews. Twenty-one Jews were murdered at that time, and 14 others were shot near the forest on the town's outskirts. Soon the number of deaths reached into the hundreds as the pogrom lasted several more days. Men, women, and children were murdered in their homes, yards, or on the streets.² The initial killings were undertaken in response to fabricated accusations that the Jews of Vijnița had mistreated the Romanian Army during its retreat from northern Bukovina in June 1940 and had then welcomed the Soviet occupying forces. Not all military men were antisemitic, however. Maior Petruc, passing through Vijnița on his way to the front in June 1941, showed kindness to the Jews, stopping the killing of 23 Jews. He distributed food left behind in the town by the Soviet authorities and gave money to the widows of those murdered.³ The subsequent killings and deportations that occurred after his passing through town were part of a planned operation aimed at “cleansing the territory” of Jews and political “enemies” (communist sympathizers) behind the front line.

The Romanian administration took control of the town shortly after its occupation. The town's name was romanianized as Vijnița (or Vișnița). The mayor in Vijnița was Virgil Leonaș, and the deputy mayor was Tiron Meletic. The praetor was Eugen Posteuță, assisted by Petru Bolocan. A transit camp was established in a few buildings (most likely synagogues or former Jewish schools) in mid- to late July 1941. Its purpose was to hold temporarily rural Jews living around Vijnița who were being deported to Transnistria. According to estimates of the Romanian military authorities, 1,820 such Jews were gathered in what became known as the Vijnița camp (Iagărul Vijnița). In August 1941 they were marched from place to place, eventually reaching the Edineți camp (in the Hotin județ) where many succumbed to hunger, thirst, and illness. At that time the Edineți camp had approximately 12,000 Jews (mostly from rural areas in Storojineț, Cernăuți, and Rădăuți). After weeks of internment, in September 1941, they were marched to Atachi and Cosăuți near the Dniester River, to be transferred to Transnistria.

Life under Romanian occupation was filled with restrictions for the Jews who remained in Vijnița. A curfew was introduced, and walking through the streets was restricted to a few hours during the day. Bartering started immediately, because Jews could no longer work at their former jobs. Jews had to wear a distinctive mark on their clothing. They were forbidden to leave the town and instead were forced to undertake work for whoever needed them. In September 1941, all Jewish mental patients from Cernăuți were transported to and kept in the Beit Midrash school courtyard in Vijnița. A Jewish committee set up for this purpose treated the patients and provided them with bedding, clothing, and food.

In October 12, 1941, on Hoshana Rabba (marking the seventh day of the Jewish holiday of Sukkot), drumbeats announced—as was customary in small towns at that time—that the Jews were being expelled from Vijnița. At that time, 2,800 Jews were deported from the town. Some were transported on carts and some on train to the Nepolocăuți (today: Nepolokivtsi, Ukraine) train station, which was 36 kilometers (23 miles) northeast of Vijnița. There they were loaded onto freight cars, 60 to 70 people per railcar, and transported to Atachi, one of the crossing points into Transnistria (across from Moghilev-Podolsk). After a short march from the Atachi train station they reached an assembly point (a temporary camp) near the banks of the Dniester River, where other Jews (from Suceava) awaited crossing by cable ferry. While waiting to embark on the ferry, they and their belongings were searched by Romanian gendarmes and their valuables (precious metals and foreign currency) confiscated. Their identity documents were also taken away. A few Jews, in desperation, committed suicide using cyanide pills and other similar poisons.

Once in Moghilev, the Jews of Vijnîța were dispersed in ghettos and camps throughout Transnistria, including in Moghilev, Berezovca, and Mostovoi. Some worked in government workshops (Birezula and Odessa), and others made it onto the lists of essential laborers who were retained in Moghilev. Of the 2,800 Jews deported from Vijnîța, 480 were brought to Djurin in the Moghilev județ (today: Dzhurin), 46 kilometers (29 miles) northeast of Moghilev-Podolsk, joining 5,000 other Jewish deportees. The 500 local Ukrainian Jews cared for them, taking them into their already crowded homes. The rabbi of Djurin, Rabbi Herzel Chrokmelnick, headed the provision of spiritual and material assistance. Rabbi Baruch Hager from Siret, also in Djurin, provided assistance. As far away as Bucharest, a committee that was established to help the Jews of Vijnîța and Cernăuți succeeded in sending them help each month via a Romanian officer. Of the 480 Jews from Vijnîța who were brought to Djurin, 390 survived. Jews deported to other locations were less fortunate. They suffered from hunger and epidemics, and many of them perished. Of the remaining 2,320 Jews deported from Vijnîța, only about 800 survived, including some children. They returned from Transnistria during the spring of 1944. Deputy Mayor Meletic was sentenced in February 1949 to 20 years' hard labor and confiscation of private property.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews of Vijnîța can be found in “Vijnîța,” in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopedyah shel ba-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1969), 2: 460–462; “Vijnîța,” in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1395–1396; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Ebrejstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 67; Marius Mircu, Pogromurile din Bucovina și Doroboi (Bucharest: Glob, 1945); Jean Ancel, The History of the Holocaust in Romania (Lincoln: University of Nebraska, 2012); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986).

Primary sources regarding the fate of Jews of Vijnîța are available at USHMM, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M) and SRI (RG-25.004M). For the trial record of Tiron Meletic regarding his murder of Schulem Pressner, a Jew from Vijnîța, the physical and verbal abuse of other Jews of Vijnîța, and confiscation of Jewish property, see RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 52, file 1142, vol. 651, pp. 53–54, 81–82.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. VHA #00945, Leizer Hoffer testimony, February 15, 1995.
2. Entry on July 5, 1941, in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3a: 31.
3. Mircu, Pogromurile din Bucovina și Doroboi, p. 45.

VINDICENI

Vindiceni, a village in the Iarișev raion, Moghilev județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Vendičany, Ukraine), is situated along the Vendičanca River, a tributary of the Dniester. It is located 18 kilometers (12 miles) north of Moghilev-Podolsk. In 1930, there were 829 Jews in Vindiceni.

The German and Romanian armies overran Vindiceni on July 19, 1941. After a short German military occupation, during which time the Jews were persecuted, the area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Vendičany to Vindiceni, and the raion's name became Iarișev. The praetor in the raion was Gheorghie Oșanu.

According to the statistical records of the Health Service of the Moghilev Prefecture, there were 835 deported Romanian Jews in Vindiceni in October 1942.¹ Siegfried Jägendorf, president of the Moghilev Jewish Council, estimated that up to 50 percent of the deported Jews in Moghilev (the town and district) perished during the winter of 1941 from cold, hunger, and typhus, chief among other fatal diseases.²

Convoys of Jews deported from southern Bukovina arrived in Vindiceni in October and November 1941. Many of the Jews in those convoys crossed the Dniester at Moghilev-Podolsk, stopping for a short time and being held in bombed-out buildings before being forced to press on; some came to Vindiceni directly and others by way of other locations (such as Ozarintsy). The newly arrived deportees—robbed and starved along the way—were crammed inside the homes of the local Jews, some of whom were still alive at that time. The Vindiceni ghetto was thus created. It was an open ghetto, at least for a period, and was guarded by Romanian gendarmes from the local gendarmes post, assisted by Ukrainian auxiliaries. Leaving the ghetto without permission was punishable by death; indeed, Plutonier Mocanu, the gendarmes post chief, shot a local Jew for doing just that.³ A Jewish police unit also existed to maintain order and implement the authorities' demands. Survival was possible only through barter, bribery, and covert aid by generous local individuals.

In an effort to relieve overcrowding in the Moghilev-Podolsk ghetto and a few other nearby ghettos, Romanian gendarmerie authorities transferred on May 30, 1942, a number of Jews (perhaps 100 or more) from the Vindiceni ghetto to the newly created but dreadful camp at Scazineți (today: Skazyntsi), some 14 kilometers (9 miles) southeast of Vindiceni. (These Jews from the Vindiceni ghetto were on the second transport; the first transport left a day earlier and included 1,000 Jews, mostly from the Moghilev ghetto.⁴)

Information about the living conditions inside the Vindiceni ghetto comes from a report of the Bucharest-based Relief Commission from the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) that visited Transnistria at the beginning of 1943, stopping on January 8 and 9 in Moghilev-Podolsk. The commission, led by Fred Șaraga, learned in a meeting with S. Iosspovici and A. Segall, representatives of the Vindiceni ghetto, that at that time 750 Jews were living in the ghetto, the majority of whom were from the Dorohoi județ (Darabani, Săveni, and Dorohoi). The commission also learned that a soup kitchen had existed in the ghetto for a brief period of time, but it had run out of funds; the ghetto had no hospital, the sick being treated in the town's dispensary (Avraham Veisman, Israel Rabinovici, and Heni Hirș were doctors active in and outside the ghetto in 1943). The commission donated 1,500 RKKS (Reichskreditkassenschein; German-issued scrip) toward the reopening of the soup kitchen.⁵

CER sent a few more aid boxes to the Vindiceni ghetto over the course of 1943 and facilitated the transfer of sums of money from relatives or friends living in Romania to individuals in the ghetto.⁶ The aid was hardly sufficient to offset the deportees' many needs. A visit from M. Katz, the president of the Moghilev Jewish Council (Consiliul Evreiesc Moghilev, CEM) after Jägendorf found the Jews in Vindiceni to be "physically weak, exhausted" and that, although some were working, "most had become beggars."⁷

A number of able-bodied people from the ghetto were taken to work in the local brick factory; some payment was received for that work.⁸ Other Jews worked in the Vindiceni sugar factory that the deportees had restored; it was run by Serghie Rachlițchi, a violent man who took pleasure in beating his workers. Some other Jews labored in forestry.⁹

By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Vindiceni was 746; it is not clear whether the Ukrainian Jews were counted. On September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 262 Jews in the camp (3 from Bessarabia, 259 from Bukovina).¹⁰

The repatriation of the Jews from the Dorohoi district and the Regat took place in December 1943, along with a few other categories of Jews who were permitted to return earlier (such as World War I veterans or widows and orphaned Jewish children). Some Jews in the Vindiceni ghetto qualified for this repatriation. The Red Army recaptured the village at the end of March 1944, liberating the ghetto. Some of the Jews were immediately drafted into the Red Army, but most made their way back to Romania amid great challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Vindiceni can be found in the following publications: I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009); A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Khar'kov: Karavella, 2001); Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2011); and "Vindiceni," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ba-yishuvim ba-Yehudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ba-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 436. Additional information can be found in A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Khar'kov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive," HM 2: 8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Vindiceni can be found at USHMMA, in collections DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), AME (RG-25.006M), and GARF (RG-22.002). VHA holds 15 survivor testimonies in four languages (English, Russian, Hebrew, and German) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.

2. Jägendorf memorandum, September 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 10, file 2699, vol. 22, pp. 257–289 (esp. p. 265). Survivors also attest to such deaths: see VHA #38599, Tsilah Fuks testimony, December 3, 1997.

3. Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 400.

4. Ibid., 3: 286.

5. For a visitor's report, see USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, pp. 127–128; for a list of medical doctors in the Vindiceni ghetto in 1943, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, p. 226 (and verso).

6. See receipts of remittances, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 10, fond 2255, opis 1, delo 1180, pp. 86, 120–122.

7. An excerpt from Katz's memorandum can be found in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 397.

8. List of payments to Jewish workers, USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reel 34 (no fond, opis, or delo).

9. Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 290; see also VHA #21462, Sieghard Hacker testimony, November 5, 1996.

10. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 345; and for the September 1943 census, see “Situație numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 457.

VLĂDENI-HOMOROD/LPRS NO. 2

Vlădeni and Homorod are two villages in the Țânțari township, Brașov județ (today: Vlădeni and Valea Homorod, Dumbrăvița township), in the central region of Romania. Located in a mountainous region, Vlădeni is 5 kilometers (3 miles) from Homorod, 22 kilometers (14 miles) northwest of the city of Brașov, and 160 kilometers (99 miles) north of Bucharest. Following the German and Romanian attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the capture of Soviet prisoners of war (POWs) necessitated the creation of camps to hold and exploit them.

Established in July 1941 as a camp for Soviet POWs in Vaslui, in the eastern part of Romania, this subcamp moved to Vlădeni-Homorod on August 3, 1941, and became a camp of its own. Soviet prisoners were brought to this camp to refurbish a segment of railroad tracks in the Vlădeni-Homorod area, especially the railway tunnel near Perșani, and to provide labor to other industrial and agricultural enterprises in the region. In August 1941, the Vlădeni-Homorod camp had a total of 2,556 prisoners, guarded by a contingent of 256 gendarmes and a few ranked officers. The commandant of the camp was Locotenent-colonel Cîndea.

The camp became known as Camp No. 2 of Soviet prisoners (Lagărul No. 2 de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici), LPRS No. 2 followed by the place name Vlădeni-Homorod, Homorod-Vlădeni, or simply, Vlădeni or Homorod. The Command Office of the Interior Defense Forces (Comandamentul Forțelor de Apărare Interioară a Teritoriului) controlled and regulated the camp's affairs, while the V Territorial Command, located in Buzău (Comandamentul V Teritorial Buzău), administered the camp. POW camps like the Vlădeni-Homorod camp were designed as self-sufficient entities. The camp received a small budget and was expected to live within its means by securing additional revenue from the hire of its prisoners. The chief employer of the camp's prisoners was the Romanian Railways Company (Căile Ferate Române, CFR), but other enterprises hired prisoners from the camp as well. For example, 300 POWs were sent in August 1941 to Mangalia, near the Black Sea, as agricultural workers for the Agricultural Inspectorate of Constanța (Inspectoratul Agricol Constanța).

In the Vlădeni-Homorod camp, prisoners were housed in three large wooden barracks built by CFR, Section 2, Brașov, as part of their employer-designated responsibilities.¹ Each barrack was 300 meters (984 feet) in length but had different widths. The first barrack held 600 prisoners and was guarded by 1 officer, 2 noncommissioned officers (NCOs), and 43 gendarmes. The second barrack, the largest of the three, held 1,110 prisoners; it was guarded by 2 officers, 3 NCOs, and 87 gendarmes. Finally, the third barrack had 759 prisoners, guarded by 2 officers, 3 NCOs, and 65 gendarmes. The three barracks were 3 to 5 kilometers (1.9 to 3.1 miles) from each other.

The barracks were primitive at best, each containing no more than a few small windows, a main door, and shared multitiered beds. Initially the camp lacked everything else: tables, chairs, bowls, spoons, storage rooms, showers, and toilets. Essential cooking equipment (such as large cooking pots) was procured and brought from the Vaslui POW camp. Gradually, a dining hall, outdoor lavatories, and a small infirmary were set up for each barrack. There was also a larger infirmary for the entire camp (for cases not requiring urgent hospitalization). Each barrack was encircled by barbed wire, and four watchtowers were placed at the camp's corners.²

A major delousing effort began soon after the prisoners' arrival at camp. An army mobile bathing train was used for washing, and several delousing ovens were used to disinfect the prisoners' clothes. The gendarmes, too, washed and had their clothes deloused. Dirty and louse-infested barracks were cleaned and washed with lime; old straw on which the prisoners slept was burned and replaced with new straw; and all prisoners had their hair cut short. In addition, an army nurse was assigned to the camp to monitor the health of the prisoners and troops and to prevent the outbreak of epidemics such as typhus or typhoid fever.³

The barracks were located close to the work sites. The prisoners were escorted on foot to the sites, guarded while working, and returned under escort to the camp in the evening. The payment of working prisoners was stipulated by contractual agreements established between the camp and the employers. However, records have yet to emerge verifying the payment of prisoners from the Vlădeni-Homorod camp.⁴

After a promising start, the lack of funds, absence of stored produce, and difficult road access up to the barracks on rainy and snowy days caused a food shortage in the camp. Many prisoners were taken captive when they were wearing light summer clothes, and many had been without shoes since their capture. Lack of the warmer clothes needed to live and work in a mountainous region led not only to the unemployment of those unable to perform their duties but also to illness. Furthermore, early camp reports indicate the absence of soap and underwear, leading to poor hygiene.⁵ Cases of illness needing hospitalization were reported. The most common sickness among the Soviet POWs held in the Romanian camps was tuberculosis, with related lung infections. Typhus was also a constant threat, in addition to other illnesses caused by battle wounds.⁶ The dead were buried in the Vlădeni village's cemetery. The bodies were later exhumed and reburied in the Soviet cemetery built after the war to honor Soviet soldiers who died in the area during the summer and fall of 1944.

Based on surviving documentation, the Vlădeni-Homorod camp was open until sometime in 1943. The remaining prisoners were likely absorbed by other camps, among them Camp

No. 3 Vameş (Covurlui judeţ; today: Galaţi judeţ), Camp No. 7 Budeşti (Ilfov judeţ; today: Călăraşi judeţ), and Camp No. 5 Tiraspol (Tiraspol judeţ).⁷

SOURCES For a secondary source mentioning the Vlădeni-Homorod camp, see Vasile Popa, “Prizonierii Sovietici în România (1941–1944),” in Cătălin Fudulu, ed., Eroi și Morminte: Studii și comunicări susținute la sesiunea anuală a Oficiului Național pentru Cultul Eroilor, ediția 1, București 12.12.2007 (Buzău: Alpha MDN, 2008), pp. 1–9.

Primary sources documenting the lives of Soviet POWs in the Vlădeni-Homorod camp are available at USHMMA, in collection SRI (RG-25.004M). Soviet prisoner registration forms from the Vlădeni camp are available at TsAMO (fond 58, opis 977528, delo 134); and RGVA (fond 1512, opis 1, delo 20).

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Instructions regarding the treatment and employment of prisoners were formulated in August 1941 by the General Staff of the Commandment of the Interior Defense Forces of Romania and clearly stipulate the employers' responsibilities, cf. “Instrucțiuni asupra întrebuințării prizonierilor la munci,” August 4, 1941, signed by General de divizie Hariton Dragomirescu, commandant of the Interior Defense Forces, USHMMA, RG-25.004 (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, pp. 23–25, 26–28. Colonel T. Turturescu, General Staff commandant of the V Territorial Command, transmitted such instructions to all camps coming under the supervision of his command center, including the Vlădeni-Homorod camp; see his secret note, p. 22 in the same file and volume.

2. Commandant Căndea's report, “Dare de Seamă,” August 9, 1941, explaining the difficulties faced in organizing and running the camp, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, pp. 40–41, and the subsequent report covering the period August 11–18, 1941, p. 56. A follow-up telegram from Colonel Turturescu to the Command Office of the Interior Defense Forces reiterated the camp's needs, as did his more detailed report, “No. 206882,” August 22, 1941, pp. 33 and 48 in the same file and volume.

3. Commandant Căndea's report and Colonel Turturescu's telegram report, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, pp. 45–47. See also the camp's medical report, pp. 58–59, in the same file and volume.

4. Regulations regarding payment owed to the camps for prisoner labor evolved continuously from July 1941 to May 1943. For the August 1941 rules, see General de divizie Dragomirescu's instructions regarding the employment of prisoners, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, pp. 23 and 26.

5. Commandant Căndea's report, “Dare de Seamă,” August 9, 1941, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, p. 41; see also entries 3 and 4 in Colonel Turturescu's report for the Command Office of the Interior Defense Forces, August 22, 1941, p. 48, in the same file and volume.

6. With few exceptions, the reason for hospitalization is not indicated: see correspondence between the camp, the V Territorial Command, and the Command Office of the Interior Defense Forces regarding discharge from the hospital of prisoners, USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, pp. 63–66.

7. POWs discharged from the hospital were not returned to the Vlădeni-Homorod camp, but were directed to Camp No. 3 Vameş, Covurlui judeţ, which seems to indicate where some of the internees were moved: USHMMA, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 42, file 40030, vol. 33, pp. 65–66. Similarly, see individual registration forms of Soviet POWs held in the Vlădeni-Homorod camp, “Foaia individuală a prizonierului,” RGVA, fond 1512, opis 1, delo 20, p. 19; and the information gathered about each prisoner in “Stat nominal pentru prizonieri,” TsAMO, fond 58, opis 977528, delo 134, pp. 193, 308.

VOITOVCA

Voitovca, a village in the Berşad raion in the Balta judeţ, in the northeastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Viitivka, north of Berşad, Ukraine), is situated near the Bug River. It is located 54 kilometers (34 miles) north of Balta. In 1939, there were 14 Jews in Voitovca.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Voitovca at the end of July 1941. The Romanian civil administration took control of the area beginning in September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Voitovka to Voitovca, and the raion was renamed Berşad.

The praetor in the Bershad raion was Constantin Alexandrescu.

A camp, often termed a colony (colonie), for Jews deported from Bessarabia and Bukovina in Romania was set up in Voitovca in the fall of 1941. The camp was on the grounds of the local collective farm (kolkhoz). A handful of Romanian gendarmes aided by local Ukrainian auxiliaries guarded the camp. There was a ban on movement outside of the camp; violators were severely punished. Epidemics (especially typhus), hunger, cold, and exhaustion led to many deaths, especially during the first two years of internment (1941–1942); deportees continued to die thereafter, but at a slower pace. It is estimated that 2,500 people perished in this way in the camp.¹ Wearing the yellow star was obligatory.² A Jewish Council existed in the camp under the leadership of Zisu Fraier.³

Barter, begging by the most destitute, and the generosity of local non-Jews helping those who sought aid were the key means of survival for many. Humanitarian aid sent by the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) in Bucharest during 1943 and early 1944 may have reached this camp; individual sums of money sent by the undeported relatives of those in the camp were also important for survival.⁴

Able-bodied Jews (men and women) undertook forced labor in various forms. Workers were occasionally recompensed with a watery soup and a slice (200 grams, 7 ounces) of stale bread or a handful of produce.⁵

At some point in early 1942, the number of Jews in the camp was 319 (64 men, 120 women, and 135 children). CER's census in March 1943 listed Voitovca as having 280 Jews. On September 1, 1943, however, the camp held 893 Jews (475 from Bessarabia, 418 from Bukovina), without counting the local Ukrainian Jews. The increase was due to the transfer of internees from nearby ghettos, especially Berșad.⁶

Roma (Gypsies) deported from Romania in the summer of 1942 were scattered within the territory of the Berșad raion, coming to live in primitive huts in the winter of that year and thereafter. Some were brought to work on the kolkhoz in Voitovca in 1943, but fled for fear of encountering German soldiers, who were retreating from the other side of the Bug.⁷

The Red Army recaptured the village at the beginning of March 1944, immediately liberating the camp. Some Jews were conscripted into the army, and the rest of the survivors made their way home amid many challenges.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Voitovca can be found in the following publications: “Voitovka,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 177; “Boitovka,” in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evrejstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 67; “Boitovka,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2000), 4: 271; and M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tiurmi ta getto na okupovaniï territorii Ukraïni (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). See also A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000). For a collection of documents on the persecution of the Roma deported from Romania, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews imprisoned in the Voitovca camp can be found at USHMMA, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), and DAOO (RG-31.004M). VHA holds 16 survivor testimonies in three languages (English, Hebrew, and Russian) from Jews and Roma held in the camp for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. The figure is an estimate by ChGK, April 1945, USHMMA, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 3, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1242, p. 14.

2. VHA #46670, Leonid Batel'man testimony, September 17, 1998.

3. List of ghetto and camp leaders in the Balta județ, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562.

4. Receipts of remittances, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 12.

5. VHA #42867, Semen Borokhovskiy testimony, March 18, 1998. For a list of Jews undertaking forced labor on laying railway tracks, see USHMMA, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reels 32 and 33.

6. The March 1943 census does not contain Voitovca among the Juguștru district localities, as can be seen in “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346; for the September 1943 census, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 456.

7. VHA #33904, Vasiliu Radu testimony, September 10, 1997. See also Achim, Documente privind deportarea țiganilor, 2: 402–403 (Doc. 560).

VOROȘILOVCA

Voroșilovca, a small town in the Moghilev județ, in the north-eastern part of Romanian-occupied Transnistria (today: Voroshylivka, Ukraine), is located near the Bug River. It is 77 kilometers (47 miles) northeast of Moghilev-Podolsk. In 1923, there were 977 Jews in Voroșilovca. According to the 1939 Soviet census, the number of Jews in the Tivriv (Tyvrov) raion, of which Voroșilovca was then a part, had 1,840 Jews, with only a few hundred living in Voroșilovca. During the 1941 invasion of the Soviet Union, some Jews retreated with the Soviet authorities, others were drafted into the Red Army, but many stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Voroșilovca in the second part of July 1941. After a short German military occupation, during which time some of the village's remaining Jews were killed by the Nazi SS and the Ukrainian collaborators, the Romanian civil administration took control of the village in September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Voroshilovka to Voroșilovca (occasionally spelled Voroșilofca), and the raion's name from Tyvrov to Tivriv. The praetor in the Crasna raion was Nicolae Coman.¹

A ghetto was established in Voroșilovca at some point during the summer of 1942, although a camp for Jews may have existed even earlier. Confirmation about the creation of the Voroșilovca ghetto comes from a report from the administrative inspector Ștefănescu, after his visit to the raions in the Moghilev district.²

Jews deported from Bukovina and northern Bessarabia in Romania, as well as Ukrainian Jews from northern Transnistria, were brought to the ghetto at that time. These Jews had survived the devastating winter months of 1941 and the great deprivations brought on by the Romanian administration.

The Jews deported to Voroşilovca were crowded inside the former homes of the local Jews. The perimeter was marked and guarded by Romanian gendarmes, assisted by Ukrainian auxiliaries. Wearing the yellow star was mandatory for all adult Jews. This and other ordinances were enforced in the ghetto by its leadership and the Jewish police. The Jews in the ghetto survived on charity and barter. Many perished from hunger, cold, and disease in the following two years. A mass graveyard was created in the Jewish cemetery in Voroşilovca. At the same time, as bad as conditions were, the Voroşilovca ghetto absorbed Jewish escapees from German-occupied territory across the Bug, such as Gnivan.

According to the statistical records of the Health Service of the Moghilev Prefecture, there were 238 Jews deported from Romania held in Voroşilovca in October 1942.³ The Relief Commission from the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews in Bucharest (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) visited Transnistria at the beginning of 1943, stopping on January 4 in Şmerinca, some 17 kilometers (11 miles) west of Voroşilovca. The commission, led by Fred Şaraga, was urged by the Jewish leaders of the Şmerinca ghetto to open a distribution subcenter in their ghetto so they could distribute aid to such places as the Voroşilovca ghetto.⁴ The distribution of individual funds sent by friends and relatives not deported from Romania to those in the Voroşilovca ghetto was also made possible through CER.⁵ This form of help, together with additional parcels sent by CER for the entire ghetto, made a difference, even if small, in ameliorating the conditions of the Jews in the Voroşilovca ghetto.

By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Voroşilovca was 639, probably not counting the Ukrainian Jews; on September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 278 Jews in the ghetto (108 from Bessarabia, 170 from Bukovina).⁶ The difference in numbers is due to the relocation for forced labor to peat exploitation fields outside Tulcin and of a few skilled workers to the Trihati camp.⁷ The survivors from both camps returned to the ghetto at the end of the year.

The repatriation of the Jews originally from Dorohoi and the Regat began in December 1943, although only a few Jews from Voroşilovca qualified for it; the remaining Jews deported from Romania were not permitted to return to the country until the beginning of March 1944, on the eve of the Red Army's recapture of Voroşilovca. Those still in the ghetto were liberated at that time; men of military age were drafted into the Red Army, and the rest continued their journey to Romania amid great difficulties.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Voroşilovca can be found in the following publications: "Voroshilovka," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1413; "Voroshilovca," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-abar Sho'at Milhemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyab (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 434; "Voroshilovka," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 184; "Voroshilovka," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukraïnskogo Evreïstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 77; and A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005). For census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942, The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnytsa Oblast State Archive," HolMod 2/8 (2010): 18–26. On Jews fleeing across the Bug to Voroşilovca, see the rescue account of Vladimir Dlozhevskiy, a hero designated as a Righteous Among the Nations, available at <http://db.yadvashem.org/righteous/family.html?language=en&itemId=4211579>.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Voroşilovca can be found at USHMM, in collections DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), and AME (RG-25.006M). Declarations by survivors of the Voroşilovca ghetto can be found in Chernivtsi Jewish Survivors Organization Affidavits (USHMM, RG-31.020M). VHA holds 40 survivor testimonies in five languages from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For the praetors in the Moghilev judeţ, see USHMM, RG-31.011M (DAVINO), reel 13, fond 2383, delo 44, pp. 9–10.
2. Report is dated August 20, 1942, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 1, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 22, pp. 52–53 (and verso).
3. USHMM, RG-25.006M (AME), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 20, p. 281.
4. For a visitor's report, see USHMM, RG-25.004M (SRI), reel 9, file 2710, vol. 33, p. 115.
5. See examples of such money orders for Voroşilovca, USHMM, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 4, fond 2242, opis 1; reel 11, fond 2255, opis 1, delos 1364 and 1365; and reel 12, fond 2255, opis 1, delos 1400, 1403, and 1407.

6. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 346, and for the September 1943 census, see “Situatie numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 457.

7. For correspondence between the German and Romanian authorities regarding the Trihati bridge, see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 23, p. 37 and the following unnumbered pages; for the list of specialists from the Stanislavcic ghetto in June 1943, see the same collection, reel, and fond.

VRADIEVCA

Vradievca, seat of Vradievca raion, Golta județ (today: Vradivka), in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria, is 29 kilometers (18 miles) southwest of Golta. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 481 Jews in Vradievca, representing 6.85 percent of the village’s population (the entire raion had 625 Jews).

The German and Romanian armies occupied Vradievca in early August 1941. Weeks later, some of the Jews still living in Vradievca and its immediate surroundings were gathered and shot by Einsatzgruppe D units. The killings took place outside the town near the Kodyma River, a Bug tributary. In September 1941, the town came under Romanian control and its name was romanianized from Vradievka to Vradievca. The Golta județ prefect was Locotenent-colonel Modest Isopescu, and Aristide Pădure was the deputy prefect. Corneliu Ciureanu directed labor in the Golta județ. The praetor in the Vradievca raion was Gheorghe Zaharia, and the chief of the gendarmes post in Vradievca was Plutonier Radu Ioan.

A ghetto was created in Vradievca in the fall of 1941 for Jews deported from Romania (Moldavia, Bessarabia, and Bukovina), and Transnistria (Odessa, Balta, and other places). For most of its early existence, the ghetto functioned as a transit center for convoys passing through to Golta’s “death camps” (Bogdanovca, Domanovca, and Acmeceța). For this reason, the ghetto’s population remained under 100 people. Thus, on June 22, 1942, there were 73 Jews in the ghetto (26 men, 26 women, and 21 children), of whom 6 were between the ages of 20 and 40.¹ The ghetto was enclosed and was guarded by Ukrainian police, if for no other reason than its proximity to the train line connecting Kiev to Odessa (via Golta). The Jews held in the Vradievca raion’s detention sites were used in 1943 as forced laborers in workshops. Such workshops were designed according to trades, such as tailoring, shoemaking, and carpentry, whereas Jewish nurses and doctors worked in the Vradievca hospital and other medical centers throughout the raion. The organization coordinating Jewish labor in Vradievca was the Jewish labor office based in the ghetto. The members of this office were Iosifescu Iosifovici (chief and ghetto head), assisted by Hariton Viner and Huna Epelman.²

On May 20, 1942, 48 Jewish mental patients from Chișinău’s Costiugeni Hospital, along with the last 156 remaining Jews from the Chișinău ghetto, were deported by train from Chișinău via Tiraspol to Vradievca. The deportation took place with the explicit approval of Bessarabia’s governor, General de divizie Constantin Voiculescu, who had previously requested their deportation earlier that year.³ The Chișinău convoy reached the Vradievca train station on May 23; from there the Jews were dispatched to the camps in the Vradievca raion.

In September 1943, the Vradievca ghetto held 20 Romanian Jews (from Bessarabia), in addition to Ukrainian Jews.⁴

The Golta județ received many Roma (Gypsies) deported to Transnistria from Romania in the summer of 1942. Weeks after the Roma’s arrival and dispersal to various collection centers, Golta’s prefect confiscated their horses and carts (used by some to travel to Transnistria) to use them in Golta’s farms where the Roma were also supposed to find work. Some 300 Roma were placed near Vradievca, housed in primitive wooden huts.⁵ Angered and hoping for a quick return to Romania, the Roma initially lived off whatever they were able to smuggle into Transnistria and sell (gold rings, foreign currency); lived off the land (fruit trees, bushes with berries, forest food); or stole. Petitions from the Roma deported to the Vradievca raion and on their behalf by relatives in Romania reached the authorities, but went unheeded.⁶

The complete lack of hygiene in which the Roma lived as a result of their inhumane accommodations led to a typhus outbreak in November 1942. The epidemic spread quickly through the Vradievca raion, especially because measures were not taken to delouse the Roma and the local hospitals were unprepared to handle the epidemic.⁷ Jewish physicians, like M. Michelson, were brought from Romania to the Vradievca hospital for 30-day periods to combat the epidemics and to provide general medical treatment. Thus, from November 20 to December 20, 1942, in addition to treating ghetto inmates, Dr. Michelson treated infections among schoolchildren in Vradievca, deloused 782 Roma transferred to various villages in the Vradievca raion, and attended to gendarmes’ and army soldiers’ medical needs (prescribing treatment, delousing).⁸ With the arrival of the winter of 1942, the Roma colony was moved to dilapidated homes in Vradievca. The Vradievca raion’s Romanian physician informed the district sanitation service that resettling the Roma in the village would spread typhus among the Ukrainian population. He requested that all Roma be concentrated in one location, in a large camp of sorts, and kept under guard, but to no avail.⁹

Work was sporadic and insufficient for the Roma seeking to earn an honest living. Women, children under working age, and the elderly who depended on male adult family members to secure food or income suffered the most. Attempts to flee Transnistria from the Vradievca train station increased substantially in November 1943, as winter conditions settled in and there were even fewer opportunities to work. Some managed to reenter Bessarabia and even get home, but most stayed in place until March 1944 when they returned home on their own. The Red Army liberated Vradievca on April 8, 1944.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews and Roma in Vradievca can be found in the following sources: “Vradievca,” in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 187; “Vradievca,” in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond “Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia,” “Epos,” 2000), 4: 288; A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainskogo Evrejstva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskiy spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 77; Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993), p. 53; Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, vol. 1: History and Document Summaries (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vols. 3a and b: Transnistria (Bucharest: Societatea Națională de Editură și Arte Grafice “Dacia Traiană,” 1947); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); and Paul A. Shapiro, The Kishinev Ghetto, 1941–1942: A Documentary History in Romania’s Contested Borderlands (Tuscaloosa: University of Alabama Press in association with USHMM, 2015). For a collection of documents on the deportation of Romanian Roma to Transnistria, see Viorel Achim, ed., Documente Privind Deportarea Țiganilor în Transnistria, 2 vols. (Bucharest: Editura Enciclopedică, 2004). For information about rescuers of Jews in Vradievca, see Israel Gutman et al., eds., The Encyclopedia of the Righteous Among the Nations, vol. 5 (Europe, part 2) (Jerusalem: Keterpress, 2011), p. 432; and supplementary vol. 2 (The Netherlands-United States) (Jerusalem: Keterpress, 2010), pp. 763–764 (the articles are also available at http://db.yadvashem.org/righteous/familyList.html?placeTemp=Vradievca&results_by=family&placeFam=Vradievca&language=en).

Primary sources on the fate of Jews and Roma in Vradievca are available at USHMMA, in collections DAOO (RG-31.004M), DAMO (RG-31.008M), MAE (RG-25.006M), and AMANR (RG-25.003). At USHMMA, there are 46 oral testimonies (in Hebrew and Russian) of Jewish and Roma survivors who were deported to or from Vradievca.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. Statistical tables, “Tabel de evreii între vârsta de 20 și 40 de ani,” USHMMA, RG-31.008M (DAMO), microfiche, fond 2178, opis 1, delo 374, p. 119 (USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/374, p. 119); and “Situția numerică de evrei aflați pe raza județului Golta la data de 22 Iunie 1942,” USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/423, p. 163.

2. List of names for the Vradievca Jewish labor office, “Tabelul cuprinzând numele și pronumele evreilor de la Ghetoul Vradievca județul Golta propuși pentru Biroul de muncă,” August 16, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 6, p. 57 (USHMMA, RG-31.004M/13/2264/1/6, p. 57). For labor duties, see “Situția Model 2 de utilizarea evreilor din Raionul Vradievca, Județul Golta,” November 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/373, p. 128.

3. Evacuation plan, “Plan de evacuarea evreilor din Ghetoul Chișinău,” signed by Colonel Teodor Meculescu, Chișinău’s chief gendarmes inspector, USHMMA, RG-25.003M (AMANR), reel 128, file 96, pp. 65–68, but see also subsequent reporting between various organizations carrying out the deportation, p. 69. For Voiculescu’s request, see his address No. 2141/March 17, 1941, to the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, USHMMA, RG-25.006M (MAE), reel 10 (Problem 33), vol. 21, p. 177.

4. “Situție numerică de numarul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3b: 442.

5. For an estimated number of Roma in the Vradievca raion, see Praetor Zaharia’s note, November 13, 1943, USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/372, p. 127.

6. Telegram and formal petition, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1912, pp. 110, 164.

7. Legiunea Jandarmi Golta, information report, “Nota informativă Nr. 1225,” November 21, 1942, USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/31, p. 18.

8. Activity report, December 23, 1942, USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/431, pp. 20–21.

9. Medical service report, USHMMA, RG-31.008M/2178/1/423, p. 46.

ZABOCRICI

Zabocrici, a small town in the Crișopol raion in the Juguștrou județ, in the northern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Zhabokrych, Ukraine), is located 33 kilometers (21 miles) south-southeast of Tulcin. According to the 1939 Soviet census, there were 3,104 Jews in the Crișopol raion, 1,400 of whom lived in Crișopol and 679 in Zabocrici. Although some Jews retreated with the Soviet authorities and fewer still were drafted into the Red Army, most stayed in place.

The German and Romanian armies occupied Zabocrici in the middle of July 1941. During the short German military occupation, 435 Jews were killed between July 27 and 29 by German police forces and Romanian soldiers. About half of the victims were Jews from Zabocrici, and the other half were gathered from nearby villages; among the dead were 61 children. The Jews were shot in the cellars of local houses.¹ The Romanian civil administration took control of the town beginning in September 1941. The town’s name was romanianized from Zabokrich to Zabocrici, but was routinely spelled Iabocrici or Jabocrici. The prefect in the Juguștrou județ was Colonel Ștefan S. Gheorghide.

A ghetto was established in the town probably in October 1941 or perhaps even earlier during the German occupation.

The local Jews were held in the ghetto, as were Jews deported from northern Bessarabia and southern Bukovina in October and November.² The majority of the deported Jews entered Transnistria via the Atachi and Iampol crossing points and then made their way on foot to Zabocrici. The convoys of deportees were robbed of many of their possessions at the entry points into Transnistria, as well as en route to their deportation place, adding substantially to their misery.

Life in the ghetto was fraught with privations. There was a ban on movement outside of the ghetto; violators were severely punished. Gendarmes and local auxiliaries watched the ghetto. Inside the ghetto, the deportees were crowded into the houses of local Jews, with several families sharing a single room. Epidemics (especially typhus), hunger, cold, and exhaustion led to deaths. Wearing the yellow star was obligatory. Barter, begging by the most destitute, and the generosity of a few local non-Jews were key means of survival for many.³ The establishment of government-controlled workshops (ateliers) where skilled Jews inside the ghetto could work in exchange for food or small sums of money also provided a means of survival. The creation of Jewish workshops was in accordance with Ordinance No. 23 of the Government of Transnistria, but it fell on the shoulders of the ghetto leadership to set them up. Fortunately, the Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER) provided some aid.

There were a number of workshops in the Zabocrici ghetto that came into existence most likely at the end of 1942 and the beginning of 1943 and were coordinated by Monia Fleișer. For example, there existed a tailors and furriers workshop, and there were workshops for hairdressers, ironsmiths, hatmakers, and mechanics. All in all, some 37 people were employed in the workshops in October 1943.⁴

At some point in early 1942, the number of Jews in the ghetto was 558. By March 1943, the known number of Jews in Zabocrici was 200, most likely not counting the Ukrainian Jews; on September 1, 1943, without including the Ukrainian Jews, there were 245 (70 from Bessarabia, 175 from Bukovina).⁵ Repatriations of deported Jews originally from the Dorohoi district and the Regat took place in December 1943, with a few cases applying to the Zabocrici ghetto. Orphaned children under age 19 were the next group to be repatriated; there were a small number of such children in the ghetto. Units of the Kovpak partisan formation were active around the Zabocrici area during the retreat of the German and Romanian armies from Transnistria at the beginning of 1944. The partisans' activities benefited the Jews in the ghetto as they distracted the guards and brought news of the Red Army's advancement, and in turn the Jews provided the partisans with shelter and information about the local administration.⁶

The Romanian administration retreated from Zabocrici at the beginning of March 1944 on the eve of the Red Army's recapture of the town at the end of that month. The deported Jews who remained in the ghetto were liberated at that time and began their difficult journey back home.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Zabocrici can be found in the following publications: "Zhabokrich," in Shmuel Spector and Geoffrey Wigoder, eds., Encyclopedia of Jewish Life before and during the Holocaust (New York: New York University Press, 2001), 3: 1504; "Zabocrici," in Jean Ancel et al., eds., Pinkas ha-kehillot: Romanyab: Entsiklopediyah shel ha-yishevim ha-Yebudiyim le-min bivasadam ve-'ad le-ahar Sho'at Milbemet ha-'olam ha-sbeniyab, (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1980), 1: 439; "Zhabokrich," in I. A. Altman, ed., Kholokost na Territorii SSSR: Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rosspen, 2009), p. 150; "Zhabokrich," in A. I. Kruglov, Katastrofa Ukrainського Evreystva, 1941–1944: Entsiklopedicheskij spravochnik (Kharkov: Karavella, 2001), p. 112; "Zhabokrich," in Rossiiskaia Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia (Moscow: Rossiiskaia Akademiia Estestvennykh Nauk, Nauchnyi fond "Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia," "Epos," 2000), 4: 278; A. I. Kruglov, The Losses Suffered by the Ukrainian Jews in 1941–1944 (Kharkov: Tarbut Laam, 2005); and M. G. Dubik, ed., Dovidnik pro tabori, tiumri ta getto na okupovaniu teritorii Ukraini (1941–1944) / Handbuch der Lager, Gefängnisse und Ghettos auf dem besetzten Territorium der Ukraine (1941–1944) (Kiev: Ukrainian Archive State Committee, Ukrainian National Fond, 2000), 38; for census figures, see Mordechai Altshuler, ed., Distribution of the Jewish Population of the USSR 1939 (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Centre for Research and Documentation of East-European Jewry, 1993). Additional information can be found in Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942, The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMM, 2000); and Faina Vynokurova, "The Fate of Bukovinian Jews in the Ghettos and Camps of Transnistria, 1941–1944: A Review of the Source Documents at the Vinnitsa Oblast State Archive," HM 2: 8 (2010): 18–26.

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews deported to Zabocrici can be found at USHMM, in collections GARF (RG-22.002M), DAVINO (RG-31.011M), DAOO (RG-31.004M), and AME (RG-25.006M); the last collection contains a map of the Juguastri district showing the exact location of the Zabocrici ghetto and the number of inhabitants in 1942, in reel 11 (Problem 33), vol. 21. A Jewish survivor's testimony about his imprisonment in the Zabocrici ghetto can be found in the Chernivtsi Jewish Organization Affidavits, RG-31.020M, microfiche 24, folder 6, vol. 588. VHA holds 53 survivor testimonies in four languages (Russian, Ukrainian, Hebrew, and English) from Jews held in the ghetto for various periods of time.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. According to reports produced by ChGK, April 1945, USHMM, RG-22.002M (GARF), reel 4, fond 7021, opis 54, delo 1265, pp. 20–23, 26–28.

2. See the list of ghettos in Juguastu district, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 13, fond 2264, opis 1, delo 22, n.p.

3. USHMMA, RG-50.477*0495, Sabina Spektor testimony, February 26, 1992. See also VHA #30996, Aleksei Brener testimony, April 29, 1997; and VHA #23080, Sarra Epshtein testimony, November 20, 1996.

4. Cf. confidential correspondence on Jewish workshops between the Juguastu Prefecture and the Labor Department, Government of Transnistria, USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 6, fond 2242, opis 1, delo 1562, pp. 96–104 (esp. pp. 98–99). Work in such facilities is attested also by VHA #9200, Mendel Halpern testimony, November 26, 1995.

5. For the March 1943 census, see “Tabloul numeric al evreilor deportați în Transnistria pe localități, raioane și județe,” reprinted in Ancel, Documents, 5: 348, and for the September 1943 census, see “Situție numerică de numărul evreilor aflați astăzi în Transnistria pe județe și localități, dintre cei ce au fost evacuați din Basarabia și Bucovina. Situația la 1 Septembrie 1943,” reproduced in Carp, Cartea Neagră, 3: 458.

6. VHA #43724, Bella Khamko testimony, April 30, 1998; VHA #37431, Evgeniia Farber testimony, October 9, 1997.

ZAHARIOVCA

Zahariovca, a small village in the Vradievca raion in the Golta județ, in the eastern part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Zakhariivka, Ukraine), is located 36 kilometers (22 miles) south-southwest of Golta. This Zahariovca should not be confused with Zakhariievka/Zakharovka in the Zakhariievca raion, in the western part of Romanian-controlled Transnistria (today: Frunzivka).¹

The German and Romanian armies overran the village in late July or early August 1941. After a short German military occupation, the area came under Romanian civil administration at the beginning of September 1941. The village's name was romanianized from Zakhariiovka to Zahariovca (spelled also Zaharovca). The praetor in the Vradievca raion was Gheorghe Zaharia.

The dilapidated cowshed in the collective farm near the village was used in November and December 1941 as a transit camp for Jews deported from Bessarabia in Romania as well as for Ukrainian Jews from Transnistria (Balta and Ananiev județe). Groups of deportees escorted by gendarmes occasionally converged in larger villages along the deportation routes leading to the terrible camps in the Domanevca raion in the Golta district (an area labeled by Holocaust scholars as the “kingdom of death”). The meetings gave the escorts the opportunity to reorganize the groups as well as to change guards. One such meeting point was Vazdovca (today: Ivanovka), a village 4 kilometers (about 3 miles) northeast of Zahariovca. Zahariovca is located between Vazdovca and Domanevca, making it a suitable stopping point. Ukrainian policemen working for the Golta Prefecture were assisting the few Romanian gendarmes present at the camp.

The combination of extreme cold in the winter of 1941 and the inhumane living conditions in the cowshed (crowded, filthy, and unheated), not to mention the authorities' utter disregard for the deportees' lack of food supplies and warm clothing, meant certain death for vulnerable groups of people, such as the elderly, young, and sick. Holocaust survivor Haim Cogan, a Jew from Chișinău who passed through the Zahariovca camp in December 1941, described seeing thousands of Jews from Chișinău held there without food. As a result, “each day dozens of people died,” wrote Cogan, “and their bodies were thrown into the field because it was bitter cold.”² After spending varying periods of time in the camp, the convoys headed in wintry conditions to the camp in Domanevca and, beyond, to the Bogdanovca camp, where most were shot soon after their arrival and their bodies burned.

The Zahariovca camp was most likely abandoned at the beginning of 1942.

SOURCES Additional information about the fate of Jews deported to Zahariovca can be found in the following publications: Jean Ancel, Transnistria, 1941–1942: The Romanian Mass Murder Campaigns, 3 vols. (Tel Aviv: Goldstein-Goren Diaspora Research Center, Tel Aviv University, 2003); Paul Shapiro, The Kishinev Ghetto, 1941–1942: A Documentary History of the Holocaust in Romania's Contested Borderlands (Tuscaloosa: University of Alabama Press in association with USHMMA, 2015); Jean Ancel, ed., Documents concerning the Fate of Romanian Jewry during the Holocaust, vol. 5: Bessarabia, Bukovina, Transnistria: Extermination and Survival (New York: Beate Klarsfeld Foundation, 1986); Matatias Carp, ed., Cartea Neagră: Fapte și Documente; Suferințele Evreilor din România, 1940–1944, vol. 3: Transnistria (Bucharest: Diogene, 1996); and Radu Ioanid, The Holocaust in Romania: The Destruction of Jews and Gypsies under the Antonescu Regime, 1940–1944, foreword by Elie Wiesel, preface by Paul A. Shapiro (Chicago: Ivan R. Dee in association with USHMMA, 2000).

Primary sources documenting the fate of the Jews held in Zahariovca can be found at USHMMA, in collection DAOO (RG-31.004M), which includes a detailed list of towns and villages in the Golta județ in reel 7, fond 2242, opis 2, delo 37, pp. 10–12; the ANR records, fond IGJ (RG-25.010M) contains a contemporaneous map of the Golta județ showing the exact location of Zahariovca in reel 12, file 163, p. 17.

Ovidiu Creangă

NOTES

1. For the renaming of Zakharovka as Frunzivca after World War I, see <http://data.jewishgen.org/wconnect/wc.dll?jg-jgsys~community~-1038725>. Note, however, that the old name is retained in the Transnistria settlement list produced in 1942 by Romanian census takers; see USHMMA, RG-31.004M (DAOO), reel 7, fond 2242, opis 2, delo 37, pp. 9–10.

2. Haim Cogan testimony, April 29, 1963, reproduced in Ancel, Transnistria, p. 86.

SERBIA

After the rejection of the Tripartite Pact and the formation of a new Yugoslav government on March 27, 1941, Nazi Germany and its allies decided to invade the kingdom of Yugoslavia and destroy it as a state. In a war that lasted from April 6 to 18, 1941, Yugoslavia was defeated, and the Axis powers divided its national territory per an agreement made at Vienna on April 22. On July 22, 1942, in Berlin, Yugoslavia's territorial dismemberment was formalized with the "Agreement concerning the Division of the Property of the former Yugoslav State."¹ The regimes carving up Yugoslav territories were the Reich, Italy (including Albania and Montenegro), Hungary, Bulgaria, the Independent State of Croatia (Nezavisna Država Hrvatska, NDH), and Serbia, represented by the German government.²

Serbia was the only area of Yugoslavia under direct German occupation (except for part of Slovenia). Three German infantry divisions conquered the territory, and in late 1941, two German divisions suppressed an incipient rebellion. German military administration was established in central Serbia, the Banat region, and northern Kosovo. From the end of 1941 there was a strong Bulgarian occupying force in southern and central Serbia. Other parts of the country were annexed by neighboring countries: the Bačka region by Hungary, the Srem region by the NDH, and most of the Kosovo and Metohija regions by the Italian protectorate of Albania.

Serbia's land area was about 51,100 square kilometers (19,730 square miles) with a population of approximately 3,810,000. In addition to Serbs and numerous members of the German (Volksdeutsche) and Hungarian minorities in the Banat, it had a population of approximately 17,800 Jews, including some 1,200 refugees from Central Europe.³

The Nazi regime pursued a policy of punishing Serbs as severely as possible, as the German occupiers introduced full control over Serbian social and economic life. German military courts extended their jurisdiction to include Serbia. The German authorities implemented curfews, censorship, bans on public gatherings, and food rationing. The military administration imposed a war indemnity totaling 1 billion Serbian dinars (roughly $1 million in 1940 U.S. dollars) and responsibility for provisioning the occupation troops. It banned all political organizations except for the pro-fascist national movement, Zbor, under the leadership of Dimitrije Ljotić. The movement's name stemmed from the Serbian word for "assembly" and was also an acronym for the United Combative Organization of Labor (Združena Borbeno Organizacija Rada). Zbor was a small political organization founded in early 1935. In the 1935 and 1938 elections it received less than 1 percent of the vote, too little to earn it any parliamentary seats.⁴

THE GERMAN OCCUPATION

As the German occupation began, the German police immediately imposed antisemitic measures requiring the registration, marking, forced labor, and property confiscation ("Aryanization") of Serbian Jews. By decree the military commandant of Serbia codified these measures on May 30, 1941.⁵ Accompanying the anti-Jewish measures was an ever more vitriolic antisemitic propaganda campaign, orchestrated by the Propaganda Department Southeast (Propagandaabteilung Südost). From the part of Slovenia annexed to the Reich, 6,720 Slovenes were deported to Serbia. According to an agreement between Germany and the NDH, Serbs from the NDH were also deported to Serbia. At the same time, many more Serbs were fleeing the NDH to escape mass murder being perpetrated by the Croatian forces, including the Ustaša. At the end of September 1941, approximately 150,000 refugees from various occupied areas had entered Serbia, and by the autumn of 1942, that number rose to about 400,000.⁶

The supreme authority was the Military Commander in Serbia (Der Militärbefehlshaber in Serbien). In succession, the following generals held this post (with the rank equivalent to a U.S. lieutenant general): General der Flieger Helmut Förster, General der Flakartillerie Ludwig von Schröder, General der Flieger Heinrich Danckelmann, General der Gebirgstruppe Franz Böhme, General der Artillerie Paul Bader, and General der Infanterie Hans-Gustav Felber. The occupying power operated through 4 regional military commands (Feldkommandanturen), 10 district commands (Kreiskommandanturen), and about 100 local commands (Ortskommandanturen). The commandant administering the occupied territory operated through the command headquarters (Kommandostab) for military affairs and an administrative headquarters (Verwaltungsstab) for governmental concerns. Headed by SS-Gruppenführer Dr. Harald Turner, the administrative headquarters exercised the functions of a provincial government and controlled the work of the Serbian authorities. One of its 12 departments oversaw Jews and immigrants. The General Plenipotentiary for the Economy in Serbia (Generalbevollmächtigter für die Wirtschaft in Serbien), Franz Neuhausen, managed the economy and oversaw the Aryanization of Jewish property. In Serbia, the Plenipotentiary of the German Foreign Office (Bevollmächtigter des Auswärtiges Amtes), Felix Benzler, also dealt with foreign policy issues involving the "Jewish Question."⁷

Soon after the military occupation of Yugoslavia, the Einsatzgruppe of the Security Police and Security Service for Yugoslavia (Einsatzgruppe der Sipo und des SD für Jugoslawien, EG-J) restricted its sphere of activity to Serbia. In Belgrade, the Einsatzkommando Belgrade (Einsatzkommando der Sipo und des SD Belgrad) performed mainly an operational executive function. The commander of EG-J was SS-Oberführer Dr. Wilhelm Fuchs, and the head of Department IV (Gestapo) was SS-Sturmbannführer Hans Helm. The commander of the Belgrade Einsatzkommando up to October 1941 was SS-Sturmbannführer Karl Kraus. At the end of October 1941, EG-J and the Einsatzkommando were merged into a single bureau. Its main activity was geared to the Gestapo, whose organization was divided into six sections, one of which was Jewish Affairs, headed by SS-Untersturmführer Fritz Stracke.

The Serbian authorities and courts were gradually restored, but under strict German control. In late April 1941, with the exceptions of military and foreign affairs, the ministries were reestablished—but under the control of the respective departments in Turner's administrative headquarters. Serbian commissioners were appointed to head the ministries and sat on the German-established Council of Commissioners under the leadership of career police officer Milan Aćimović. In early May 1941, the Serbian gendarmerie was reestablished, consisting of about 3,000 gendarmes.⁸ In late May 1941, Serbian police officers and gendarmes were issued infantry weapons and a limited amount of ammunition. In the second half of April 1941, the Serbian police had been reestablished under collaborator and German informant, Dragomir Jovanović, who also served as mayor of Belgrade until 1944; it was directly subordinated to the German authorities. The reconstituted Belgrade police prefecture, which included 830 guards and 210 police agents in the summer of 1941, established two prisons: the first was located in the prefectural headquarters at Obilićev Venac and the second within the guard barracks on Takovska Street.⁹

The most important section of the Belgrade police was the newly formed Serbian Special Police (Odeljenje specijalne policije, OSP), which played a role comparable to that of the Nazi Sipo. It worked to suppress any activity against the occupation, especially the communist activities of the Partisans. The responsibility for combating the royalist resistance movement, which was associated with the Yugoslav government-in-exile in London, fell under the jurisdiction of the German police. The seventh section of OSP was responsible for the implementation of measures against Jews and Roma.

At the end of August 1941, the Military Commander in Serbia established the Serbian puppet government of former general Milan Nedić. Nedić represented political forces favoring Serbian statehood within the Nazi "New Order" and the state's social transformation into a "Government of National Salvation" (Vlada nacionalnog spasa). The Serbian national state was to be based on patriarchal traditions and a class hierarchy in which peasants had a dominant role. From its inception, the Nedić government campaigned to stop the persecution of Serbs in neighboring territories, primarily the NDH, as well as to expand Serbia's borders to include other Serb-inhabited areas. The German authorities rebuffed these attempts for political and ideological ("racial") reasons. Germany did not want to alienate or jeopardize their allies—the NDH, Bulgaria, Hungary, Italy, and Albania (after the Italian capitulation on September 8, 1943)—or contribute in any way to the restoration of Serbian statehood.¹⁰

To combat the Partisans, the German authorities allowed the formation of Serbian armed detachments. Among them were volunteers from the Zbor movement, called the Serbian Volunteer Corps (Srpski dobrovoljački korpus, SDK). After signing an agreement with the German police, the četnik (Chetnik) units of Konstantin Kosta Milovanović Pećanac came under the puppet government's command as well. All these Serbian formations played an important role in crushing the uprising against German occupation in late 1941, especially in the persecution and arrest of insurgents. The Serbian police managed to break most of the organizations of the communist resistance movement and to arrest and intern a great number of their members. The Serbian police and other armed formations also took part in finding hidden Jews and in arresting Jews. By an order of the Military Commander in Serbia dated December 22, 1941, anyone caught hiding Jews could face the death penalty.¹¹

OVERVIEW OF GERMAN-RUN CAMPS IN SERBIA

The German police established a network of prisons and then camps that were managed by the Gestapo, but the German military commands played an important role as well.¹² The Serbian authorities also took part in the establishment and management of some of these detention sites. The first German police prison (Polizeigefängnis) was in the district court building for the Belgrade district. EG-J established its own prison (Hausgefängnis) at its headquarters in Ratnički dom. The network of German camps began to be established after Operation Barbarossa, Germany's invasion of the Soviet Union beginning on June 22, 1941. The most important camps were in Belgrade (Banjica), Šabac, Niš, and Semlin/Zemun (the Belgrade Fairgrounds); the last camp was better known as Sajmište. On July 20, 1942, a camp in Petrovgrad/Gross Betschkerek (today: Zrenjanin) was established for the Banat region. A series of minor and temporary camps and collection centers were established during roundup operations against the resistance.¹³

The Dedinje detention camp (Anbaltelager Dedinje) was established in the military barracks at Banjica in Belgrade in early July 1941. Its primary purpose was the detention of actual and potential opponents to the occupation. Although under the auspices of the Belgrade police prefecture and with a Serbian administration, the camp was actually under the command of the Nazi SS. Its guard force consisted of members of the Order Police (Ordnungspolizei, Orpo) and the Serbian gendarmerie. Two-thirds of the Dedinje camp was set aside for German arrest targets, and the remainder for the targets of Serbian arrests. Together with Jews, the opponents of the occupation served as a constant "human reservoir" for retaliatory shooting actions. From the end of April 1942, the prisoners in the Dedinje detention camp were sent to concentration and labor camps in the Third Reich and in occupied countries.

Milan Nedić, the president of the collaborationist Serbian government, 1941–1944.

USHMM WS #90152, COURTESY OF MUZEJ REVOLUCIJE NARODNOSTI JUGOSLAVIJE.

After the uprisings against the occupation in Serbia, among the first victims of mass murder were the Jews. Large-scale roundups soon followed. The Šabac detention camp (Anbaltelager Šabac) was established to confine members of the resistance and hostages from western Serbia. Jewish refugees from Central Europe (called the “Kladovo transport”) were detained in the military barracks in Šabac on July 20, 1941. Local Jews from Šabac were subsequently taken prisoner. In October 1941, during a “punitive expedition” by General der Gebirgstruppe Franz Böhme, the Jewish men in the Šabac camp were shot, and their families were deported to the Semlin camp. Generally, after a brief period of detention the prisoners in the Šabac camp were shot or transferred to camps at Banjica and the Belgrade Fairgrounds.¹⁴

In September 1941, the Niš detention camp (Anbaltelager Niš) was established in the military barracks at Niš. The camp held resisters, hostages, and Jews from Niš and south Serbia. Some of the detainees were shot, and most of the remaining prisoners were sent to the Belgrade camps. After the breakout of prisoners from the camp on February 12, 1942, the remaining prisoners were murdered, among them Jewish men; their wives and children were sent to the camp at Semlin.

The anti-Jewish measures were implemented more quickly and completely in the Banat, where the Volksdeutsche governed, than in other parts of Serbia. From mid-August to September 20, 1941, all the Jews in the Banat were arrested and deported to Belgrade. Jewish men from the Banat were confined to artillery sheds (Serbian: Topovske šupe; German: Kanonenschuppen) located in Belgrade’s Autokomanda neighborhood. Jewish men from Belgrade and some members of the Roma community were subsequently held there as well. In October and November 1941, the camp became a major Jewish and Roma “hostage reservoir” for reprisal shootings. Almost all of the prisoners were killed, thereby destroying the Jewish male population in Serbia. The few survivors were transferred to the newly established camp for Jews at Semlin.

In late October 1941, the German occupation authorities decided to establish the camp at the Belgrade Fairgrounds, across the Sava River from downtown Belgrade. The former fair’s pavilions were redesigned to be the Semlin camp for Jews (Judenlager Semlin). On December 8, 1941, all the remaining Jews in Serbia, who by that time were mostly women and children, were confined to Semlin. A large group of Roma women and children were also detained there, but they were released by the spring of 1942. In mid-March 1942, a gas van was sent to Belgrade that killed all the Jewish prisoners at Semlin; this action lasted until May 10. The “Final Solution” thus came to its end in Nazi-occupied Serbia.¹⁵ Of approximately 16,600 Jews who lived in Serbia, 13,600 (almost 82%) lost their lives.¹⁶ All 1,200 Jewish refugees from Central Europe who found their way to Serbia were killed as well. The few Jews who survived did so by escaping to the Italian occupation zone and then to neutral and Allied countries. Some joined the Partisans, and a small number were rescued by friends and other patriots.

In early May 1942, the camp at Belgrade Fairgrounds became the Semlin detention camp (Anbaltelager Semlin). This reclassification was associated with a change in German policy concerning members of the resistance that was prompted by Germany’s acute labor needs. The camp was assigned the function of the central German concentration and labor camp in southeastern Europe for the detention of members of the resistance in Serbia, the NDH, Greece, and Albania. The camp at Banjica was in part charged with the same function. In mid-May 1944, Semlin was handed over to the Croatian police, and in the second half of July 1944 it was disbanded.

SERBIAN COLLABORATION

In early 1942 the German authorities established an even harsher occupation regime with the appointment of SS-Obergruppenführer August Meyszner as Higher SS- and Police Leader (Höherer SS- und Polizeiführer, HSSPF). Under Meyszner’s command were the Commander of the Order Police (Befehlshaber der Orpo, BdO), Oberst Andreas May, and the Commander of the Security Police and Security Service (Befehlshaber der Sipo-SD, BdS), SS-Standartenführer Emanuel Schäfer. Within BdS, SS-Sturmbannführer Bruno Sattler headed Department IV (Gestapo), and SS-Untersturmführer Fritz Stracke assumed direction over the Freemasons (Section IV B 3), in addition to Jewish Affairs (Section IV B 4).

The Meyszner appointment led to the reorganization of the Serbian armed units. The Serbian State Guard (Srpska državna straža, SDS) was established in early February 1942 and consisted of 15,000 soldiers and officers. It played a significant role in the persecution and arrest of the rebels in the months that followed. The captured and imprisoned insurgents, their supporters, and family members were assembled in temporary “prisoner camps” (Gefangenenlager) in Smederevska Palanka, Valjevo, Kragujevac, Čačak, Kruševac, and Leskovac. There they were interrogated and a few were released. However, most were sent to the Šabac, Niš, Belgrade, and Semlin camps, and the others were murdered.¹⁷

The camp in Smederevska Palanka gained a new purpose with Nedić's decree on August 4, 1942. At the initiative of the Zbor, the Education Ministry was authorized to set up the Institute for Compulsory Youth Education (Zavod za prinudno vaspitanje omladine) in the former camp, in tandem with the Serbian Interior Ministry.¹⁸ The Institute was under SDS security and OSP control. Its mission was the "reeducation" of members of the communist resistance movement in accordance with the ideological principles of the "New Order."

Serbian government, police, and armed units played an important role in the German occupation system. They pursued communist resisters and other occupation opponents, arrested individuals and groups, conducted interrogations and detentions, delivered detainees to the German police, and murdered detainees themselves. The Serbian police took part in the establishment and maintenance of the camp at Banjica, which partly served as its own camp. The police and educational authorities in the Serbian government also conducted the forced "reeducation" of young members of the communist resistance movement.

Although the German police directed antisemitic policy, the Serbian police also implemented anti-Jewish measures. After the roundups, the Serbian police and SDS hunted down hidden Jews. Serbian propaganda policy played a significant role in the anti-Jewish campaign. Confiscated Jewish property benefited not only local Germans but also Serbian collaborators. To accelerate the liquidation of Jewish property, on August 26, 1942, the occupying authority "donated" Jewish property to Serbia. In return, Serbia was obliged to pay the sum of 360 million dinars in reparations for alleged war damages that the Germans had suffered in Yugoslavia. It was yet another form of thinly veiled robbery of occupied Serbia.¹⁹

WAR CRIMES TRIALS

Immediately after the liberation of most of Serbia and Belgrade at the end of October 1944, military courts of the National Liberation Army of Yugoslavia began to impose summary death sentences on members of Serbia's quisling government, police, and the armed forces. The new Yugoslav government acted indiscriminately: there were mass executions, usually without trials, of thousands of people. Since the new government was communist and revolutionary in its character, members of the middle class were killed as well; the wealthy, whose property was confiscated on the grounds of their "economic cooperation" with the occupiers, were especially targeted. After the war, regular civilian and military courts were established, and a series of war crimes trials began.²⁰ Among the accused, however, was neither Milan Aćimović, who disappeared without a trace in the last days of the war, nor Milan Nedić. Nedić was arrested in Austria and extradited to Yugoslavia, but during the investigation he committed suicide early in 1946.

The charges against prominent representatives of the Serbian quisling government included participation in the persecution of Jews. In addition, in judgments against the German occupation authorities, one of the principal charges concerned the persecution of the Jews in Serbia. The most important material documenting the charges was collected by the Yugoslav State Commission to Investigate Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators (Državna komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača, DK). The documents on crimes against Jews and Roma were collected according to specific instructions. These materials were later used for the preparation of the "Black Book" detailing the suffering of the Jews in Yugoslavia.²¹ Dragomir Jovanović was convicted and sentenced to death by the military court on July 15, 1946.²² The Serbian administrator of the Banjica camp, Svetozar Vujković, was sentenced to death by the Belgrade county court on October 30, 1949.²³ On December 22, 1946, the military court in Belgrade sentenced 18 senior police officials in Serbia (among them, Wilhelm Fuchs, Hans Helm, and August Meyszner) to death. On March 9, 1947, the military court of the Yugoslav Third Army condemned to death Harald Turner, his deputy Georg Kiessel, and the commander of Reserve Police Battalion No. 64, Adolf Josten.²⁴ On October 31, 1947, the military court in Belgrade sentenced Heinrich Danckelmann to death.²⁵ In 1953, the Federal Republic of Germany sentenced Emanuel Schäfer to six and a half years in prison. The commander of the Jewish camp at Semlin, Herbert Andorfer, was sentenced in 1967 in Austria to two and a half years in prison, while his assistant Edgar Enge was acquitted.²⁶ Bruno Sattler was arrested in 1947 and died in 1972 in prison in the German Democratic Republic.²⁷

SOURCES Among the secondary sources on Serbia during World War II, the most important are Branko Petranović, Srbija u Drugom svetskom ratu, 1939–1945 (Belgrade: Vojnoizdavački i novinski centar, 1992); and Stevan K. Pavlowitch, Hitler's New Disorder: The Second World War in Yugoslavia (New York: Columbia University Press, 2008). The following studies are also useful: Karl-Heinz Schlarp, Wirtschaft und Besatzung in Serbien 1941–1944: Ein Beitrag zur nationalsozialistischen Wirtschaftspolitik in Südosteuropa (Stuttgart: Franz Steiner Verlag Wiesbaden GmbH, 1986); Akiko Shimizu, Die deutsche Okkupation des serbischen Banats 1941–1944: Unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der deutschen Volksgruppe in Jugoslawien (Münster: Lit, 2003); Mladen Stefanović, Zbor Dimitrija Ljotića 1934–1945 (Belgrade: Narodna knjiga, 1984); Branislav Božović, Specijalna policija u Beogradu 1941–1944 (Belgrade: Srpska školska knjiga, 2003); and Bojan Dimitrijević, Vojska Nedićeve Srbije: Oružane snage srpske vlade 1941–1944 (Belgrade: Institut za savremenu istoriju, 2011). On the Holocaust in Serbia, an older but still useful publication is Zločini fašističkih okupatora i njihovih pomagača protiv Jevreja u Jugoslaviji (Belgrade: Savez jevrejskih opština Jugoslavije, 1952). The most important newer studies are Christopher R. Browning, Fateful Months: Essays on the Emergence of the Final Solution, rev. ed. (New York: Holmes & Meier, 1991); Walter Manoschek, "Serbien ist judenfrei": Militärische Besatzungspolitik und Judenvernichtung in Serbien 1941/42 (Munich: R. Oldenbourg Verlag, 1993); and Branislav Božović, Stradanje Jevreja u okupiranom Beogradu 1941–1944 (Belgrade: Srpska školska knjiga, 2004). On the rescue of Jews, see Milan Ristović, U potrazi za utočištem: Jugoslovenski Jevreji u bekstvu od holokausta 1941–1945 (Belgrade: Službeni list SRJ, 1998); and Milan Fogel, Milan Ristović, and Milan Koljanin, Righteous among the Nations: Serbia (Belgrade: Jewish Community in Ze-mun, 2010). On the state of Holocaust research in Yugoslavia there is a valuable study by Jovan Ćulibrk, Istoriografija holokausta u Jugoslaviji (Belgrade: Pravoslavni bogoslovski fakultet, Institut za teološka istraživanja, 2011). On the camps in Serbia see Miloš Krstić, Nepokorena mladost: Koncentracioni logor u Smedervskoj Palanci 1942–1944 (Belgrade: Vuk Karadžić, 1981); Miroslav M. Milovanović, Nemački koncentracioni logor na Crvenom krstu u Nišu i streljanja na Bubnju (Belgrade: Institut za savremenu istoriju, 1983); Stanoje Filipović, Logori u Šapcu (Novi Sad: NP Dnevnik, 1967); Sima Begović, Logor Banjica 1941–1944, 2 vols. (Belgrade: Institut za savremenu istoriju, 1989); and Milan Koljanin, Nemački logor na Beogradskom sajmištu 1941–1944 (Belgrade: Institut za savremenu istoriju, 1992). On the postwar trials, see the study by Srđan Cvetković, Između srpa i čekića: Represija u Srbiji 1944–1953 (Belgrade: Institut za savremenu istoriju, 2006). On the case of Bruno Sattler, see Beate Niemann, Mein guter Vater: Mein Leben mit seiner Vergangenheit. Biographie meines Vaters als Täter (Berlin: Metropol Verlag, 2008). For further discussion of Serbian sources related to the Holocaust, see Milan Koljanin, “Historical sources on the Shoah in Serbia (Archival Research and Findings),” in Jacques Fredj, ed., Les archives de la Shoah (Paris: L’Harmattan, 1998), pp. 653–668.

Major primary sources about Serbia in World War II, the Holocaust, and the camp systems are stored in Belgrade archives: AJ; AS; IaB; VaB (some of this documentation is available at USHMMA as RG-49.008M, Selected Records from the Military Historical Institute of General Staff of the Armed Forces of Serbia on the German Zone of Occupation of the Former Yugoslavia, 1941–1944; and RG-49.010M, Nda); and JIM-bg (some of this documentation is available at USHMMA as RG-49.007M). The ITS holds several collections relating to persecution actions and camps in occupied Serbia under references 1.1.0.7 (Verschiedene Lager und Haftstätten in Jugoslawien) and 1.2.7.23 (Verfolgungsmassnahmen Serbien). This documentation is available in digital form at USHMMA. Postwar trial documentation is available in published form in Đorđe Lopičić, ed., Nemački ratni zločini 1941–1945: Presude jugoslovenskih vojnih sudova (Belgrade: Muzej žrtava genocida, 2009); Jelena Lopičić-Jančić, ed., Ratni zločini nemačkih okupatora u Jugoslaviji 1941–1945. godine. Presude jugoslovenskih vojnih sudova (Belgrade: Muzej žrtava genocida, 2010); and Izdajnik i ratni zločinac Draža Mihailović pred sudom. Stenografske beleške sa suđenju Dragoljubu-Draži Mihailoviću (1946; Belgrade: Multinacionalni fond kulture, 2005).

Milan Koljanin

NOTES

1. “Vereinbarung über die Aufteilung des Eigentums der ehemaligen jugoslawischen Staats,” RGBl, May 18, 1943, Part 2: 154–165.
2. SINo, 83 (October 22, 1943): 1–3.
3. Petranović, Srbija u Drugom svetskom ratu, pp. 111–147; Pavlowitch, Hitler’s New Disorder, pp. 65–66.
4. Stefanović, Zbor Dimitrija Ljotića, pp. 41–71.
5. VoB-Serbien, 8 (May 31, 1941).
6. Pavlowitch, Hitler’s New Disorder, p. 85; Dimitrijević, Vojska Nedićeve Srbije, pp. 321–323.
7. Schlarp, Wirtschaft und Besatzung in Serbien, pp. 109–164.
8. Dimitrijević, Vojska Nedićeve Srbije, pp. 18–20.
9. Božović, Specijalna policija u Beogradu, pp. 36–72.
10. Petranović, Srbija u Drugom svetskom ratu, pp. 455–470.
11. VoB-Serbien, 27 (December 24, 1941); Božović, Stradanje Jevreja u okupiranom Beogradu, pp. 205–269.
12. The German-run detention sites described here will be treated in greater detail in subsequent volumes.
13. Koljanin, Nemački logor na Beogradskom sajmištu, pp. 26–30, 45–53.
14. Filipović, Logori u Šapcu, pp. 180–181.
15. Browning, Fateful Months, pp. 68–85; Manoschek, “Serbien ist judenfrei,” pp. 185–195.
16. Koljanin, Nemački logor na Beogradskom sajmištu, pp. 130–131.
17. For the Čačak camp, see the statement by Pešadijski Narednik Novak B. Todorović in AJ, fond 382-1-511.
18. SINo 62 (August 4, 1942); SINo 14 (February 19, 1943).
19. Zločini fašističkih okupatora i njihovih pomagača protiv Jevreja u Jugoslaviji, pp. 48–50.
20. Cvetković, Između srpa i čekića, pp. 157–276.
21. Zločini fašističkih okupatora i njihovih pomagača protiv Jevreja u Jugoslaviji.
22. Božović, Specijalna policija u Beogradu, p. 320.
23. Ibid., pp. 311–313.
24. Lopičić, Nemački ratni zločini, pp. 51–83, 99–156; Lopičić-Jančić, Ratni zločini nemačkih okupatora u Jugoslaviji, pp. 14–86.
25. Božović, Stradanje Jevreja u okupiranom Beogradu, pp. 144–146.
26. Manoschek, “Serbien ist judenfrei,” pp. 176, 183–184; Browning, Fateful Months, pp. 95, 104–106.
27. Niemann, Mein guter Vater, p. 170.

Camps in Serbia

■ CITY ● CAMP

0 20 40 60 80 miles

0 20 40 60 80 kilometers

BORDERS AS OF NOVEMBER 1942

SMEDEREVSKA PALANKA

On August 4, 1942, the Nedić regime established the Institute for Compulsory Youth Education (Zavod za prinudno vaspitanje omladine) at Smederevska Palanka, located 64 kilometers (approximately 40 miles) southeast of Belgrade. Called “the Institute” and erroneously described by British war crimes investigators in 1947 as a “reformatory,” it was a youth reeducation camp for young Serbian men and women, aged 14 to 25, accused of leftist associations or considered vulnerable to communist propaganda.¹ The Internal Affairs Ministry maintained order and security, whereas the Education Ministry oversaw the faculty and curriculum. When it was set up, confinement lasted between six months and two years. However, on February 19, 1943, the regime, in agreement with the Education Ministry, empowered the Institute’s director to extend the minimum stay to eight months.²

The Institute occupied the military barracks in Smederevska Palanka. Built in 1940, it served as a German Frontstalag, a POW camp, in April 1941 and then as a camp for captured rebels and hostages beginning in late 1941. Its last large group of 82 prisoners was sent to the German-run camp at Banjica on June 18, 1942. In October and November 1942, six prisoners from this group returned to the new youth camp.³

Establishing the camp required approval by the German Commander of the Security Police and Security Service (Befehlshaber der Sipo und des SD, BdS), through the Serbian Special Police (Specijalna policija Srbije, SPS). The camp administration was formed on September 7, 1942, and the first 28 detainees, called “pupils” or “cadets,” arrived from Belgrade’s Duša Street prison on September 22. Another 48 followed from Banjica on October 10 and 11, 1942. Banjica’s prisoner files showed that they were “sent to the Smederevska Palanka camp.”⁴ In February 1943, there were 311 detainees, and the number increased to 454 in September 1943, but the size of the population declined thereafter.⁵ The total number of detainees was between 1,000 and 1,270.⁶

The initiative to reeducate leftist youth in the “New European Order” came from the Serbian fascist movement, Zbor (an acronym for United Combative Organization of Labor, Združena Borbena Organizacija Rada). Zbor was the only legal political party under the Nedić regime. Its leader, Dimitrije Ljotić, lectured at the Institute. Smederevska Palanka’s director of the male dormitory was Milovan Popović, a lecturer at the University of Belgrade, general secretary of the Yugoslavian Anti-Marxist Committee (Jugoslovenski antimarksistički komitet), and Zbor propagandist. His wife, another prominent Zbor member, Dr. Dragojla Popović-Ostojić, oversaw the female inmates. The Serbian State Guard (Srpska državna straža, SDS), the Nedić regime’s armed forces, guarded the institute. Popović unsuccessfully sought to reassign this duty to the Zbor paramilitary, the Serbian Volunteer Corps (Srpski dobrovoljački korpus, SDK). After the Partisans attacked neighboring villages in the spring of 1943, the Institute tightened security.

Above the camp’s entrance stood the sign, “Educational Institute of the Ministry of Education” (Vaspitni zavod Ministarstva prosvete). Barbed wire and guard towers surrounded the camp. Smederevska Palanka had 19 wooden barracks housing inmates, staff, and guards, with a capacity of approximately 500 people. The camp compound also contained a kitchen, mess hall, infirmary, warehouse, library, community hall, prison, workshops, garden, 14-hectare (approximately 35-acre) farm, and pasture for livestock. Sales revenues from camp-made goods supplemented institutional contributions and monthly payments by the detainees’ parents. Only the poorest families were exempt from paying these fees.

In comparison with the detention sites in which they had earlier been held, the inmates’ living conditions were initially much better, but food, housing, and hygiene soon deteriorated. Food supplies decreased further when the Institute prohibited care packages in retaliation for a revolt in April 1943 (see the later discussion). As Popović complained to the Education Ministry, insufficient food and heating caused widespread illness during the winter of 1943.⁷

The pupils were a closely supervised unit. Required to work in workshops and on the farm, they attended morning and evening roll calls. Penalties for transgressing camp rules included prolonged physical labor; reprimand; 1 to 15 days’ imprisonment; beatings (even by Popović and his wife); and transfer to Banjica. Monthly family visits took place in a special barrack under supervision. The staff maintained individual rehabilitation files, and Popović reduced the lengths of stay for those showing improvement. Three pupils were released in March 1943 and 11 more in April 1943. Sixteen of the “best” inmates joined the camp administration.

The Institute approached indoctrination holistically. Male inmates were divided into three categories according to their educational level and familiarity with Marxism: the first were university students and high school graduates; the second were high school students, workers, and peasants captured as Partisans or communist youth leaders; and the third were deemed susceptible to communist propaganda. The females were only divided into two categories; a number of them attended lectures with males in the first category.⁸ First-category detainees took a liberal arts curriculum and were subjected to intensive indoctrination in anticommunism, antisemitism, anti-Free Masonry, and Zbor ideology. The second-category inmates received a simpler version of the same curriculum. In addition to vocational training, third-category detainees got a rudimentary education emphasizing Zbor ideology. The instructors’ essay assignments required pupils to reflect on the reason(s) for their arrest and to demonstrate ideological reform. Their evaluations weighed heavily in determining the length of confinement.

Extracurricular activities reinforced the indoctrination. Weekly theatrical and musical events, which took place in the community hall, began and ended with the inmate-composed anthem of the Institute. The theatrical troupe staged Serbian works and William Shakespeare’s authoritarian play, Coriolanus, a favorite among fascists.⁹ All inmates played sports. The soccer club, named the Sports Club Institute, was considered among Serbia's best.¹⁰

The revolt on April 11, 1943, exposed the ineffectiveness of the reeducation effort. A large group of detainees conspired to disarm the guards and join the Partisans. A pupil's betrayal led to their arrest and transfer to Banjica, where 12 of them were murdered. Interpreting this revolt as proof of the Institute's failure, the German authorities enjoined Education Minister Velibor Jonić to reassign the inmates to forced labor. The Serbian government refused to do so, but the Institute imposed a harsher regime, placing recalcitrant inmates in "isolation" (isolation), a segregated part of one barrack. Additional infractions resulted in solitary confinement.

Fifty more escapes occurred in 1944. On August 30, 1944, Jonić ordered Popović to draft the reformed inmates and create a list of the "unreformed." A few days later, 104 of the 200 remaining pupils were registered in government service, but soon fled and joined the Partisans. After the September 7, 1944, escape of 25 pupils, Popović dismissed the others, and he departed three days later. On October 10, 1944, Partisan units entered Smederevska Palanka.

The Yugoslav State Commission to Investigate Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators (Državna komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača, DK) declared Popović, Popović-Ostojić, and other Institute staff as war criminals, but the British rejected their extradition.¹¹ However, Jonić was extradited to Yugoslavia in 1946, sentenced to death, and executed as a war criminal.

SOURCES The most comprehensive work about the Smederevska Palanka youth reeducation camp is the monograph by Miloš Krstić, Nepokorena mladost: Koncentracioni logor u Smederevskoj Palanci 1942–1944 (Belgrade: Vuk Karadžić, 1981). Early Yugoslav historiography and publications about the Institute include Milan Borković, Kontrarevolucija u Srbiji: Koislimska uprava 1941–1944; Knjiga prva (1941–1942) (Belgrade: Sloboda, 1979); Mladen Stefanović, Zbor Dimitrija Ljotića 1934–1945 (Belgrade: Narodna knjiga, 1984); Đurica Labović, Da se čita Oče naš (Smederevska Palanka: Hermes, 1970); and Dušan Azanjac, Ivo Frol, and Đorđe Nikolić, eds., Otpor u žicama: Sećanja zatočenika, 2 vols. (Belgrade: Vojnoizdavački zavod, 1969), vol. 2. For contemporary Serbian historiography on the Institute, see Maja Nikolova, Zavod za prinudno vaspitanje omladine u Smederevskoj Palanci 1942–1944 (Belgrade: Pedagoški muzej, 2010); and Ljubinka Škodrić, Ministarstvo prosvete i vera u Srbiji 1941–1944: Sudbina institucije pod okupacijom (Belgrade: Arhiv Srbije, 2009), pp. 223–228. Useful information can be found in Nenad Ristić, Razbibriga u baraci br.8. Pozorišni život u Zavodu za prinudno vaspitanje u Smederevskoj Palanci (Smederevska Palanka: "Ben Akiba," 2000); and Boro Majdanac, Pozorište u okupiranoj Srbiji: Pozorišna politika u Srbiji 1941–1944 (Belgrade: Altera, 2011), pp. 144, 252, 568–569.

The most important primary sources on Smederevska Palanka are found in AS, collections of the Ministry of Education and Religious Affairs, and in DK. In VaB, collections on Nda (copied to USHMMA as RG-41.010M) and on German archives hold documentation related to the youth camp. At IaB, there are relevant collections on the Belgrade Police Prefecture-SPS, BdS, and the Smederevska Palanka camp. Institute lesson plans can be found in Pm. Cinematic documentation, in the form of a newsreel by Ufa (Universum Film AG) Magazin marking Smederevska Palanka's first anniversary in the fall of 1943, which can be found at AJK. The ITS holds CNI cards on Dragojla Popović-Ostojić, whom U.S. authorities were seeking as late as June 1992. The most important contemporaneous publications, primarily newspapers and magazines, are Novo Vreme, Obnova, Srpski narod, Službene novine I, and Prosvetni glasnik. They are available at NbS. The most important published testimonies can be found in "Saopštenje br. 10 Državne komisije za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača," Saopštenja br.7–33 o zločinima okupatora i njihovih pomagača (Belgrade: Demokratska Federativna Jugoslavija, Državna komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača, 1945), pp. 145–171; Evica Micković and Milena Radojičić, eds., Logor Banjica: Logoraši; Knjige zatočenika Koncentracionog logora Beograd-Banjica (1941–1944) (Belgrade: Istorijski arhiv Beograda, 2009); and Miodrag Zečević and Jovan Popović, eds., Dokumenti iz istorije Jugoslavije, 4 vols. (Belgrade: Arhiv Jugoslavije, Printer komerc, 1998), 2: 556–557. Serbian apologies published by Institute staff emphasized its role in rescuing Serbian youth: Predislav Kuburović, "Vaspitni zavod u Smederevskoj Palanci 1942–1944," Zapisi iz dobrovoljačke borbe, 2 (1955): 70–90; Marko Pivac, Koraci u noći (N.P., 2002); and Branislav Žorž, Zavod u Smederevskoj Palanci-ostrvo spasa ili robijašnica (Belgrade, 2006). Pivac's account includes some reprinted documentation, unfortunately without archival provenance. A Serbian-born Austrian author published a testimony about Smederevska Palanka in novelistic form: Milo Dor (pseud., Milutin Doroslovac), Tote auf Urlaub: Roman (1952; St. Polten: Residenz-Verlag, 2005).

Milan Koljanin

NOTES

1. Službene novine, August 4, 1942; British war crimes investigation, "Staff of Smederevska Palanka Reformatory," Hamburg, November 30, 1947, reproduced in Pivac, Koraci u noći, p. 380.
2. Službene novine, February 19, 1943.
3. Banjica prisoner files reproduced in Micković and Radojičić, Logor Banjica, 1: 424–429.
4. Ibid., 1: 425–426, 430, 441, 443–446.
5. IaB, UGB, SP IV, k. 252, Monthly reports on Institute activities, February–March 1943.
6. Pivac, Koraci u noći, p. 161; Kuburović, "Vaspitni zavod u Smederevskoj Palanci," p. 75.
7. VaB, fond Nda, k.30A, reg. br. 63/4, Popović to Education Ministry, March 1, 1944.
8. AS, fond Ministarstva prosvete I i vera, G-3, Popović to Education Ministry, January 3, 1943.
9. Pivac, Koraci u noći, pp. 362–363.
10. Ibid., p. 364.
11. Zečević and Popović, Dokumenti iz istorije Jugoslavije, 2: 556–557.

SLOVAKIA

Jewish prisoners at forced labor paving a road in the Novaky labor camp, circa 1943.
USHMM WS #08652, COURTESY OF BEDRICH FRED VOHRZEK.

SLOVAKIA

Czechoslovakia came into being in 1918, after the dissolution of Austria-Hungary at the end of World War I. It included the Czech provinces of Bohemia and Moravia, Slovakia, the province of Carpatho-Ruthenia (or Transcarpathia, today part of Ukraine), and portions of Austrian Silesia. According to the 1921 Czechoslovak census, its population of roughly 13.5 million included 3 million Germans, almost 750,000 Hungarians, and approximately 180,000 Jews; Slovakia had 3 million people, including 145,844 Germans, almost 656,000 Hungarians, and 135,918 Jews.¹ Despite its multinational population and tense relations with its neighbors, all of which coveted its territory, Czechoslovakia remained a parliamentary democracy with a flourishing economy until the Munich crisis of September 1938.

Internal politics, particularly in the Slovak territory, reflected the complexities of Czechoslovak democracy. The economic crisis during the interwar period affected the entire territory; however, it had deeper and longer lasting effects in Slovakia, where many areas were already economically underdeveloped. In response to that underdevelopment and perceived discrimination, the Slovak People's Party, led by Roman Catholic Priest Andrej Hlinka and thus known after 1925 as the Hlinka Slovak People's Party (Hlinkova slovenská ľudová strana, HSELS), advocated for autonomy and the recognition of Slovak sovereignty. From the second parliamentary elections in 1925 until the dissolution of Czechoslovakia, the HSELS (also known as Ľudáks) remained unequivocally the strongest political party in Slovakia. One-third of the inhabitants in Slovakia supported HSELS policies.

At the Munich conference of September 1938, France, Italy, the United Kingdom, and Nazi Germany reached an agreement that forced Czechoslovakia to cede the Sudetenland, its predominantly German-inhabited region, to the Reich. Czechoslovakia lost more than 4 million people, as well as 28,000 square kilometers (10,810 square miles) of territory. The HSELS quickly took advantage of the weakened central government; its leaders seized the opportunity to achieve the party's long-term goal: autonomy of Slovakia within Czechoslovakia.

On October 5, 1938, Ľudáks leaders met in Žilina to discuss Slovak autonomy, with encouragement from the Nazi regime. On October 6, the day after the resignation of Czechoslovak president Edvard Beneš, the executive committee of the HSELS agreed to declare the autonomy of Slovakia in Žilina; this declaration, which the representatives of some other political parties also signed, was called the Žilina Agreement. The HSELS also formulated the Manifesto of the Slovak Nation, which included the following declaration: "We will stand side by side with other nations fighting the Judeo-Marxist ideology of destruction and violence."²

The territory of Slovakia (Slovenská krajina) subsequently became an autonomous part of the Czechoslovak Republic, and the Slovak autonomous government was formed. Jozef Tiso, a Roman Catholic priest and one of the leading Ľudáks, originally from Veľká Bytča, became its prime minister.

A clerical-conservative and later a fascist party, HSELS began to create an authoritarian regime and gradually liquidated the most important elements of democracy. Some political parties were forced to unite with HSELS, others, including communists, social democrats, and two Jewish parties, as well as the Slovak National Party, were dissolved. Civic societies and local government organs were dissolved too.

The HSELS created its own paramilitary organization called the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) and awarded it the property of dissolved organizations. Within the Hlinka Guard, the youth paramilitary organization called the Hlinka Youth (Hlinkova mládež) was formed.

Another two political parties of national minorities existed within the authoritarian political system: the Magyar Párt (Hungarian Party) and the Deutsche Partei (German Party, DP) which also had its own paramilitary organization, the Freiwillige Schutzstaffel (FS).

The HSELS considered control of the mass media and public opinion to be of critical importance. In October 1938, the government established the Office of Propaganda (Úrad propagandy), with Alexander (Šaňo) Mach at its head. It eliminated independent journals and newspapers, effectively creating a government monopoly on the provision of information and doing away with dissenting opinions and newspapers representing other political parties or views. The Office of Propaganda used its control of the press to vilify Czechs and Jews, creating an imperative for eliminating "enemies" of the new regime.

Baldur von Schirach, leader of the Hitler Youth, is greeted by Jozef Tiso, President of Slovakia, while on an official visit, March 1939.

USHMM WS #09681, COURTESY OF SCHERL BILDERDIENST.

On November 2, 1938, Germany and Italy decided on the new borders of Slovakia in the First Vienna Award. More than 10,000 square kilometers (3,861 square miles) of Slovak territory had to be ceded to Hungary. The official HSLS propaganda was eager to blame the Jews for this loss, describing them as enemies of Slovakia and Slovaks. The first deportations of Jews from Slovakia were organized almost immediately.

In December 1938, elections to the new autonomous 63-member parliament (Snem Slovenskej krajiny) were held, but HSLS allowed only a united list of candidates to run. As a result of these manipulated elections, Ludačks gained 95 percent of the votes. This was the final blow to Czechoslovak democracy.

INDEPENDENT SLOVAKIA

Because Nazi Germany sought a pretext to annex the Czech territories of Bohemia and Moravia, it pressed Ludačks to declare an independent Slovak state. It did so on March 14, 1939. On that day, and with German acquiescence, Hungary seized Carpathian Ukraine (former Carpatho-Ruthenia). On March 23, Slovakia and Germany concluded a Treaty of Protection, by which Slovakia aimed to “organize its military forces in close agreement with the German armed forces” and also closely align its foreign policy with its new protector.³ The treaty also forged close economic cooperation between the two countries.

The new Slovakian regime was originally led by Prime Minister Jozef Tiso, Ferdinand Ďurčanský (foreign minister and minister of interior), General Ferdinand Čatloš (minister of national defense), and several other mostly conservative Ludačks ministers.

HSLS first consolidated its power by focusing on the creation of core ministries, power structures, and constitution of a new state. The constitution, which was adopted in July 1939, renamed the state as the Slovak Republic. It confirmed the central and authoritarian position of HSLS, stipulating that Slovaks could participate in political life only through the HSLS.

The Deutsche Partei and Magyar Párt, however, remained part of the system. While the DP, led by Franz Karasin and its paramilitary organizations Freiwillige Schutzstaffel and Deutsche Jugend, was privileged, Magyar Párt played only a marginal role within the Tiso regime. No other national minority was allowed to create a party.

The executive branch of the government was quite strong. Its rulings and decrees, passed without the involvement of the parliament, organized the various spheres of life. The president, even though he was elected by the parliament for a seven-year term, was not accountable to the parliament. He was the highest commander of both the army and the Hlinka Guard (Najvyšší veliteľ Hlinkovej gardy). He also controlled academic life, appointing and dismissing professors. In late October 1939 Jozef Tiso was elected the president of Slovakia while the leader of the radical wing within the HSLS, Vojtech Tuka, became the prime minister.

The parliament, called the Assembly of Slovak Republic (Snem Slovenskej republiky) was the main legislative body. The 63-member body was formed in the pre-independence elections held in December 1938, and new elections were never held. It never played more than a marginal role in political life for the whole period of the regime's existence.

In addition to the government ministries, the Assembly, and the president, there was also the State Council (Štátna rada), which was intended to be the unofficial “second chamber” of the parliament. In reality it only served as an advisory body and had no power to make laws. Its members, who were appointed, represented the elite of society. Some were members of the clergy, such as deputy chairman, Roman Catholic bishop Ján Vojtaššák.

The powers and responsibilities of the entire system of security agencies (including the state police and gendarmerie) were strengthened by Ludačks. In early 1940, the political police, called the Central State Security Headquarters (Ústredňa štátnej bezpečnosti), was created with the help of Nazi Germany to ferret out antistate activities. It cooperated with Nazi Germany's secret services.

The internal politics of Slovakia was characterized by the power struggle of two wings within the HSLS: the conservatives (moderates), led by Jozef Tiso, and the radicals, led by prime minister Vojtech Tuka and Hlinka Guard Chief Commander Alexander (Šaňo) Mach. Although the cabinet contained members of both wings, its members carried out HSLS policies in their respective functions.

Power struggles between conservatives and radicals were always closely followed and influenced by Nazi Germany, and they sometimes resulted in changes of ministers or high dignitaries. Probably the most significant change occurred after the German-Slovak talks in Salzburg at the end of July 1940.

Dr. Vojtech Tuka (on right, with sash), prime minister of Slovakia, attends a session of the Slovak National Parliament, between 1939 and 1944. USHMM WS #80652, COURTESY OF THE CZECHOSLOVAK NEWS AGENCY.

In Salzburg, Adolf Hitler demanded changes in the Slovak government, and Ferdinand Ďurčanský was removed. The radical prime minister Vojtech Tuka then took over the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and Alexander (Šaňo) Mach became the Minister of the Interior. Mach also resumed the position as Chief Commander of the Hlinka Guard, from which he had resigned a few months earlier.

Hitler, however, maintained Jozef Tiso in power. From 1942 on, Tuka and his camp started to lose influence, and Tiso remained at the top of the Slovak political scene. This was confirmed by the title of Leader (Vodca) that Tiso bore from October 1942 on. Tuka, whose health deteriorated, left the top tier of politics in 1944, when the whole Ľudák regime was already in deep internal crisis.

Domestically, the regime created legislation that progressively eliminated many political and personal freedoms, including freedom of the press, assembly, and movement, which had all been enjoyed during the existence of Czechoslovakia. Any act of disobedience resulted in a large fine or a prison sentence.

The HG played a significant role in Slovakia. As the voluntary paramilitary organization of HSLS, it attracted mostly radical members of the party and various opportunists. Many HG members, wearing its dark blue uniform, called for social revolution and the solution of “the Jewish Question.” Government authorities participated to an extensive degree in developing antisemitic policies, enacting hundreds of laws, decrees, and regulations that encroached on the rights of Jewish citizens, and HG members brutally implemented them. They co-organized persecution of Jews, looted Jewish property, ran labor camps holding Jews, prepared transports of Jews, and eventually participated in mass murders of Jews on Slovak territory in 1944 and 1945.

After the establishment of the Slovak state, the persecution of Roma (called Cigáni: “Gypsies”) began. Initially, Ľudáks persecuted those Roma without permanent residence and prevented them from obtaining citizenship. After January 1940, Roma could only serve in the labor units of the army. Several months later, the regime defined a Roma for the first time as “a person of Gypsy origin from both parents, living a nomadic life, or avoiding work.”⁴

In 1941, the authorities ordered Roma living the traditional nomadic life to return to their home villages. They had to sell their caravans, and the state administration tried to settle them near villages. In certain areas, settled Roma had to move their houses away from main roads and the local population.⁵ Other measures included appointing local representatives in Roma communities, called “Vajda,” in 1941.⁶

In accordance with the Interior Ministry Ordinance of April 2, 1941, the first work units (pracovný útvar) for people deemed “asocials,” including Roma, came into being.⁷ In addition, the first seasonal labor camps for so-called asocials were created. In 1942, permanent labor camps were established in Hanušovce nad Topľou, with subcamps in Bystré, Nižný Hrabovec, and Petič. Roma and other “asocials” had to build the strategically important rail line from Prešov via Vranov nad Topľou to Strážske. Other camps of this kind were opened in Dubnica nad Váhom, Ilava, and Revúca. All of those were guarded by gendarmes.⁸ In the autumn of 1944, the regime decided to solve the “Gypsy” question by concentrating the Roma. The work unit in Dubnica nad Váhom was turned into a concentration camp for Roma, including women and children, in November 1944, and the work unit in Ústie nad Oravou was similarly repurposed.⁹

From 1938 to 1945, the Tiso regime operated at least 38 camps of different types in Slovakia.

THE HOLOCAUST IN SLOVAKIA

The persecution of the Slovak Jewish population from 1938 to 1945 was central to the domestic policy of the Slovak state because it was the result of German expectations and, starting in August 1944, direct Nazi intervention. Anti-Jewish measures permeated every aspect of public and social life; intimidation and the threat of prison made any form of opposition extremely dangerous. A powerful propaganda machine, building on existing currents of antisemitism in Slovakia, set up the Jews as the perfect target—the “enemies of the state.” The regime’s agenda was systematically and purposefully employed to isolate, dispossess, and deport the majority of Slovakia’s Jewish citizens.

Tiso took the opportunity to blame Jews for Slovakia’s extensive territorial losses to Hungary as part of the 1938 First Vienna Award. On the day preceding the announcement of the Award, a group of Jews had demonstrated to support the annexation of Bratislava to Hungary, and Tiso seized the chance to demonize them. As historian James Mace Ward has pointed out, Slovak antisemites closely identified Jews in Slovakia with Hungary and Magyarization.¹⁰ On November 4, 1938, Tiso ordered district offices to gather Jews “without material means” from their districts and bring them into what was then Hungary; this order was amended later the same day to target Jews with foreign citizenship. Moreover, Jews who possessed more than 500,000 Czechoslovak crowns (Kč) were arrested to prevent their emigration. Between November 4 and 7, 1938, Slovakia deported 7,500 Jews into the annexed territory,¹¹ but Hungary refused to accept them. Because the respective governments forbade them to move into residences in either Slovakia or Hungary, the deported Jews, including the elderly and children, needed to fend for themselves in the cold autumn weather in camps in Vel’ký Kýr and Miloslavov, where they were trapped.¹² These camps existed for only a few months and drew a strongly negative international response, particularly from the United Kingdom and France, because of humanitarian concerns.

The HSLS considered the “solution” of the “Jewish Question” to be a priority and thus began implementing anti-Jewish actions even before establishment of the independent Slovak state. In January 1939, the autonomous government created the Committee for the Solution of the Jewish Question, which discussed the drafts of various anti-Jewish laws, including those defining the term “Jew” or the confiscation of Jewish property.¹³ Some politicians claimed that they needed to address the matter urgently for economic reasons. By 1940, there were approximately 89,000 Jews in Slovakia, amounting to just over 4 percent of the population.

With the creation of an independent Slovakia, Ludáks made anti-Jewish policy a state doctrine. Only a month after the declaration of independence, the first official anti-Jewish law went into effect. On April 18, 1939, the government defined the term “Jew” (Slovak: Žid) on the basis of religious criteria, describing Jews as all persons of the Jewish faith who had not been baptized prior to October 30, 1918, or persons without any denomination born to Jewish parents. The very same law limited the number of Jews allowed to practice the profession of lawyer to 4 percent. All journalists falling into the category of “Jew” were expelled from all non-Jewish newspapers.¹⁴

Further regulations limited the number of Jews allowed to practice the profession of medical doctor or pharmacist to 4 percent. In June 1939, Jews serving in the army became the target of persecution. Following the military ruling, the authorities transferred Jewish soldiers from full military service to special labor units. In September 1939 they were stripped of their rank.

Anti-Jewish policy continued with measures in the economic sphere. The confiscation of Jewish property and its transfer to the non-Jewish (“Aryan”) population, called Aryanization, became increasingly rigorous. It first targeted the so-called agricultural and enterprise property of Jews. In April 1940, the Slovak Assembly adopted the First Aryanization Law (No. 113/1940). It defined the term “Jewish business” and authorized the county offices and the Ministry of Economy “to decide, according to free consideration and with final validity whether and under what conditions” the Jewish business should be liquidated or Aryanized. Aryanization was defined as “selling of the business to a qualified Christian candidate.”¹⁵ The property owner could suggest the Aryan person who would become the owner of at least 51 percent of the company. This was colloquially called “voluntary Aryanization.”

Aryanization of enterprise property was sharply criticized by radical Ludáks who demanded quick “removal” of Jews from the society. Shortly after the Salzburg meeting with Adolf Hitler on July 27–28, 1940, anti-Jewish policy radicalized. Nazi advisor for the “Jewish Question” Dieter Wisliceny of the Reich Security Main Office (SS-Reichssicherheitshauptamt, SS-RSHA), as well as several other German advisors for various other “questions,” arrived in Slovakia.¹⁶

On September 3, 1940, the Slovak Assembly adopted the Constitutional Law (210/1940) that empowered the government within the period of one year “to take all measures necessary for the exclusion of the Jews from Slovak economic and social life and for transferring all Jewish property into Christian ownership.”¹⁷ This law, signed by President Tiso, allowed the government to regulate anti-Jewish policy according to its own requirements, and thus accelerate its implementation.

Prime Minister Vojtech Tuka acted quickly. On September 16, 1940, a new government agency, the Central Economic Office (Ústredný hospodársky úrad, ÚHÚ), came into being under Tuka’s advisor Augustín Morávek. ÚHÚ’s main task was to craft and implement all the necessary steps needed to remove Jews from economic and social life.

The escalation in the number and severity of racial policies and guidelines continued, and the Jewish Center (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ) was created. It was the only non-religious organization of Jews in Slovakia that was allowed at the time, and each Jew was obliged to become a member. The ÚŽ was to help the regime with the enforcement of its measures.¹⁸ Within a few months, the Slovak government adopted regulations allowing the Central Economic Office (ÚHÚ) to take complete control over various types of Jewish property. Houses and apartments of Jews were subordinated to the so-called temporary administration.¹⁹ The bank accounts of Jews in all banks in Slovakia were blocked, and any payments made to Jews could be put into these blocked accounts only. Jews could withdraw only 1,000 Slovak crowns (Ks) per week, and this sum was reduced subsequently to 500 Ks and 150 Ks.²⁰ Employment of Jews was subject to ÚHÚ’s approval, and a special fee had to be paid by the employer.²¹

The Aryanization of “Jewish businesses” according to the First Aryanization Law was soon stopped. From November 1940 on, the Central Economic Office became the sole body to decide whether a Jewish business would undergo the process of Aryanization (now called “transfer”) or be liquidated. In this new process, in contrast to the First Aryanization Law, the Aryanizer no longer needed to be a “qualified Christian candidate,” and “voluntary” Aryanization was no longer possible. Under the leadership of Morávek, the ÚHÚ began to issue liquidation and Aryanization decrees in great numbers in 1941, thus depriving thousands of Jews of a means of earning a living. Aryanization of businesses culminated in the middle of 1941. Of a total of about 12,300 businesses, nearly 2,300 were Aryanized and about 10,000 liquidated.²² The whole process was heavily corrupt.²³

In 1940, another ruling mandated that Jews and Roma work for two months each year for state defense. The associated labor units belonged to the National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO). According to the Defense Law, Jewish and Roma recruits could serve only in labor units. In 1941, all Jewish and Roma recruits were assigned to the Sixth Labor Battalion (Šiesty robotný prápor), made up of three Jewish and two Roma companies. Jews wearing blue uniforms and blue berets received their basic military training with shovels and picks instead of rifles, and were subsequently sent to various construction sites all over Slovakia. They worked in Sabinov, Liptovský Svätý Peter, Láb, Svätý Jur, and Zohor. The Sixth Labor Battalion was dissolved in 1943, and its Jewish members were sent to various labor camps for Jews.²⁴

The intensity of anti-Jewish views increased in 1941. On their own initiative, local representatives of the regime persecuted Jews living in the territory under their control. Thus for example Andrej Dudáš, the head of Šariš-Zemplín County, ordered tens of thousands of Jews living in the county to wear “a 3 cm [a little over an inch] wide yellow (lemon) ribbon” around the left arm from April 1941 on. This triggered various manifestations of physical violence.²⁵

Group portrait of a Jewish forced labor unit in Slovakia, 1940. USHMM WS #08826, COURTESY OF BEIT LOHAMEI HAGHETAOT (GHETTO FIGHTERS' HOUSE MUSEUM).

In April 1941, a decree issued by the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo Vnútra, MV) allowed the creation of small labor camps for jobless Jews, and in July, the government issued a regulation that authorized the ÚHÚ to order Jews to perform labor assignments. In September 1941, there were about 80 smaller labor camps for Jews in Slovakia, with about 5,500 Jews working manually for private companies. By the end of 1941, most of these camps had been dissolved. The official propaganda said that camps had been closed because of the harsh weather conditions that complicated the work at various sites.²⁶ Little documentation has survived on most of these camps.

By early September 1941, the one-year period during which the Slovak government had the right to dictate anti-Jewish policy, was almost over. The state then adopted, on September 9, 1941, Decree 198/1941, officially called "On the Legal Status of Jews" and commonly referred to as the Jewish Code (Židovský Kódex, ŽK). Its 270 paragraphs defined Slovakia's anti-Jewish restrictions, and according to domestic propaganda, they were the strictest in all of Europe, even more stringent than the Nuremberg racial laws. Most of the paragraphs summarized the antisemitic regulations that had been passed by that time, but there were some brand-new elements. The ŽK defined the term "Jew" on explicitly racial grounds as "a person who comes from at least three Jewish grandparents in terms of race."²⁷ It also introduced the term "Jewish half-breed" (židovský miešanec) as a person who "comes from one Jewish grandparent in terms of race."²⁸ Jews six or more years old had to wear the yellow star and also affix a Jewish star on their correspondence and envelopes, something even the German authorities had not mandated. According to Paragraph 255, the president of the Slovak Republic had the right to partly or fully exempt individual Jew from the regulations in the ŽK.²⁹

The promulgation of the ŽK marked the disappearance of the Jews' last rights and privileges in Slovakia. The humiliating laws forbade Jews from being members of any clubs, sports teams, or organizations, and Jews could only shop for groceries during restricted hours. They were no longer allowed to use radios and phones. Jews were allowed to travel, but only on third-class railway cars at set times. Jews and "Jewish half-breeds" were forbidden to be HSEs members or Hlinka Guardists.

All these and numerous other measures within the ŽK effectively isolated Jews from the rest of society. No longer allowed to control property or businesses, participate in public life, or have social ties to non-Jews, they were outcasts. As this process continued, the special anti-Jewish Department 14 was created at the MV.

As a result of the process of exclusion of Jews from social and economic life, the Jewish population in Slovakia was in ruins. About 16,000 of the 27,000 Jewish households lost their regular income. In other words, the process deprived about 64,000 of 89,000 Jews of their means of living.³⁰ In the summer and autumn of 1941, more and more Jews living in Slovakia became dependent, and their living space was severely restricted.

Ludáks were searching for the answer to the question: what to do with Jews without a living income? Some proposals suggested moving Jews to large labor camps. In August 1940, Minister of Interior Alexander Mach officially announced that the state would build such labor camps for Jews in Sered' and Nováky. Construction started in September 1941.³¹

By October 1941, the ÚHÚ had started to assign new residences to Jews, forcing them from their homes and restricting them to suburban sections of towns. The ÚŽ was required to administer this process, determining which personal items Jews could take with them for resettlement and which items the state would confiscate. Many Jews were also forced to leave Bratislava and were sent to distant towns in eastern Slovakia.

It did not take long until the government realized that building labor camps for thousands of socially deprived Jews would be a lengthy and costly process. On October 20, 1941, SS-chief Heinrich Himmler suggested to Tiso, Mach, Tuka, and Čatloš, during their visit to Hitler's headquarters near Rastenburg, that they should deport the Slovak Jews to German-occupied Poland. A few months later, Mach said openly that this was how the idea of deportation came into being.³²

In November 1941, Nazi Germany requested permission from Bratislava for the deportation of Jewish Slovaks from the territory of the Third Reich, including the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia and the Ostmark, to a designated area in the east. As historian Eduard Nižňanský noted, once permission had been given to deport Jewish Slovak citizens from the territory of the Reich, the deportation of Jews living in Slovakia was the next logical step.³³ The Slovak-German talks in early 1942, which had the aim of sending 20,000 laborers from Slovakia to Germany, marked the moment when the idea of deportation began to have practical consequences. The Slovak government discussed the deportation of Jews on March 3, 1942, and the State Council did so on March 6, 1942. It was Prime Minister Tuka who briefed these bodies about deportation and presented the displacement of Jews in economic terms.

It is still not exactly clear whether Nazi Germany asked for the 20,000 Jewish laborers or Slovak officials offered them Jews instead of Slovaks.³⁴ However, the question of initiative should not be overrated. There is no doubt at all that, regardless of who actually took the initiative, the Germans did not have to force Ludáks to deport the Jews from Slovakia and that on March 26, 1942, only a day after the deportation started, Interior Minister Mach openly said, “We have also obtained help from the Germans on this Jewish question. We want to rid ourselves of the Jews with the help of Germans.”³⁵

Many hoped that Tiso would intervene on behalf of the Jews. Rabbi Frieder, the head rabbi in Slovakia, personally handed him a memorandum, which equated the deportation with “the physical destruction of the Jews in Slovakia.” Tiso did not react.³⁶

Roman Catholic bishop Karol Kmet’ko, as well as the Vatican’s diplomat in Slovakia, Giuseppe Burzio, both of whom had received reliable reports about the genocide of Jews in Ukraine, also confronted Tiso. According to the Nazi secret service SD, Burzio even threatened Tiso with an interdict. As James M. Ward noted, Jozef Tiso responded to such pressures with half-measures. Tiso said that he had had assurances from the Germans that they would treat Jews well. Both Minister of National Defense general Ferdinand Čatloš and Slovak general Jozef Turanec later testified that they had reported the mass killings of Jews to Tiso by February 1942.³⁷

MV’s Department 14 managed the nationwide organization and deportation of Slovak Jews, with the help of Nazi advisor Dieter Wisliceny; however, other ministries as well as the regional state administration, security forces, HG, and FS also participated. The gendarmerie, together with the Hlinka Guard and FS, first took Jews from individual municipalities to district seats and from there to one of the newly established concentration camps for Jews (Koncentračné stredisko Židov) in Poprad, Žilina, Bratislava-Patrónka, Nováky, and Sered’; from there the Jews were to be put on transports and deported from Slovakia. The first transport left Slovakia from Poprad on March 25, 1942; it consisted of 1,000 girls and women between the ages of 16 and 45.³⁸ The transport arrived in Auschwitz the next day. In the first few transports, men and women were deported separately. From April 10, 1942, on, the deportation of whole families began. Transports were organized either in the above-mentioned concentration camps or in district towns.

Between March 25, 1942, and October 20, 1942, a total of 57 transports carrying 57,628 Jews left Slovakia³⁹: 19 transports went to Auschwitz and 38 to the Lublin region in the General Government.⁴⁰ Only a few hundred people survived the deportations of 1942.

Dieter Wisliceny, the advisor to the Slovak government on the “Jewish Question,” was present during many of the deportations. The Germans charged a “resettlement fee” of 500 Reichsmarks for each Jew deported out of Slovakia, which ultimately, the Slovak government paid.⁴¹ The Nazis followed through on their promises that most of the Jews would not return to Slovak territory and would not demand repayment for former possessions—by murdering them in various killing centers.

In the beginning, the deportations started without a legal basis and despite protests by the representatives of the Jews or the Holy See. On May 15, 1942, however, the Slovak Assembly legalized the deportations retroactively. All but one parliamentarian, János Eszterházy, a representative of the Hungarian minority in Slovakia, raised their hands in support of deportation.⁴²

Jews boarding boxcars for deportation from Slovakia, circa 1942. They are supervised by Hlinka Guardsmen. USHMM WS #33092, COURTESY OF YAD VASHEM PHOTO ARCHIVES.

The Slovak leadership played an active role in the deportation of Slovak Jewry. On August 17, 1942, Tiso gave a speech in Holíč in which he claimed that the deportations were for the good of the nation: “People ask whether what is being done with the Jews is Christian. Is it human? Is it not robbery? . . . I ask is it Christian when the nation wants to free itself from its eternal enemy? . . . And we did it according to the commandment of God: Slovak, free yourself from those who harm you.”⁴³

The reactions among the Jews who had not yet been deported ranged from emigration to desperation. Many Jews attempted to escape their fate, with the help of local clergy, through mixed marriages or baptisms. Other options included bribing local officials, Hlinka Guards, and especially officials of MV’s Department 14. According to post-World War II testimonies, Anton Vašek, the head of Department 14, accepted hundreds of thousands of Slovak crowns in bribes during this period.⁴⁴

Only those Jews who had managed to obtain work permissions from ministries, presidential exemptions, or false papers, or who were held as workers in one of the labor camps remained in Slovakia after the transports ceased. They ended in October 1942 due to growing internal resistance.

As of January 1, 1943, there were 18,945 Jews living in Slovakia. Approximately five to six thousand Jews had already fled to Hungary, which was the only country at that point that did not yet deport Jews. About 2,500 Jews lived in three major labor camps (pracovný tábor) in Sered’, Nováky, and Vyhne at that point. The regime also opened smaller labor camps, called work centers (pracovné stredisko), at various building sites in Slovakia. Camps and work centers were controlled by the Ministry of Interior, through the Government Commissar of Labor Camps, Július Pečúch (an employee of Department 14), and guarded by the HG and later the gendarmes. The ÚŽ was obliged to collaborate with the MV (and the government commissar) on the organization of Jewish labor camps and centers.

In 1943, Jewish Councils (Židovská rada) were established in Jewish labor camps and centers, which helped organize life and tried to improve conditions in the camps. Their self-sufficiency, turnover of finished goods, and level of production were the only factors that really mattered for the dignitaries of the Interior Ministry and several other representatives of the regime, however. To keep up with production quotas, the Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps (Ústredná kancelária pre pracovné tábory Židov) was established at the ÚŽ, which helped camps secure orders from various customers. In addition, Jewish Councils bribed commanders of camps and HG in order to ease the life of the inmates. Jews were under constant threat of the resumption of deportations.

Alexander Mach, the Interior Minister and the Main Commander of the Hlinka Guard, called for the resumption of deportations in February 1943. His plans sparked new protests from Catholic bishops and the Holy See. When a formal papal protest arrived in Bratislava, the authorities put further deportations on hold; in addition, Germany's military setbacks made Slovak politicians less eager to participate in the further deportation of Jews. Moreover, despite general and personal risk, many locals and church officials rescued Jews by offering block baptisms (along with certain financial incentives to the authorities) and hiding family members in their homes. Several priests ignored jail threats from the HG and MV and were arrested, imprisoned, and tortured in the Ilava detention camp for helping Jews.

THE WORKING GROUP

In the summer of 1941, a group of Jewish activists within and outside the ÚŽ coalesced clandestinely and across political or religious affiliations for the purpose of better coordinating aid and rescue efforts. In the spring of 1942, the government's decision to start deportations to Poland prompted this Working Group led by Gizela (Gizi) Fleischmann, the head of the ÚŽ emigration department, and Rabbi Michael Dov Weissmandel—together with Andrew (Ondrej) Steiner, Tibor Kováč, Oskar Neumann, Rabbi Abraham (Armin) Frieder, and a group of public figures and activists in the various youth movements—to massively lobby among state functionaries, economic leaders, and Catholic clergy. Members of the group bribed key Slovak figures and intervened with Tiso, yet failed to stop the deportation wave. Subsequently, their multiple efforts to reach a deportation moratorium focused on a two-pronged approach: first, exerting pressure on regime officials, combined with material incentives, particularly vis-à-vis the Interior Ministry's Department 14 head Anton Vašek; and second, entering into negotiations with Dieter Wisliceny, also involving large bribes. Many credit the Working Group with the halting of mass deportations, but other factors also influenced their suspension after October 1942, including pressure from the Vatican and local bishops who were displeased with Tiso.

The temporary halt in deportations convinced the members of the Working Group that bribery was effective. For this reason, Rabbi Weissmandel initiated the Europa Plan, an attempt to save the remaining Jews in German-dominated Europe by paying ransom. The group entered into secret negotiations with SS officials in the fall of 1942, a time when Himmler was starting to develop an interest in negotiating with representatives of what he deemed "international Jewry" for the purpose of undermining the Allied war effort, but also as a means to obfuscate the ongoing implementation of the "Final Solution" and improve Germany's image in the event of an armistice. Members of the Working Group coordinated with Jewish organizations overseas, particularly the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (AJJDC), to help raise money demanded by their German interlocutors, until it became clear in late summer 1943 that the Reich's representatives were using the negotiations merely as a means of delay and personal enrichment.⁴⁵

In addition to their pursuit of the Europa Plan, the members of the Working Group tried to assist Jews in a number of ways. They not only tried to improve the conditions of Slovak deportees but also found hiding places for Jewish refugees coming from Poland and provided them with false identification papers. At the same time, the members of the group spread information about the mass murder of Jews, hoping to interfere with the expected deportation of the Hungarian Jews. Slovak Army officers had already reported the mass shootings of Jews in occupied Galicia and Soviet territories in the summer and autumn of 1941. Since the summer of 1942, reports of mass murder in German camps had reached Slovakia; however, eyewitness testimony of Jewish extermination became available only in April 1944, when two Slovak Jews, Rudolf Vrba (Walter Rosenberg) from Topolčany and Alfred Wetzler from Trnava, managed to escape from Auschwitz. After several weeks in hiding, they were able to provide firsthand testimonies to the ÚŽ, which reached Geneva, the Swiss press, the Czechoslovak government in exile, as well as the United States.⁴⁶ Ultimately the efforts of the Working Group failed: some members were arrested, and toward the end of 1944 their leaders, Gizi Fleischmann and Rabbi Weissmandel, were deported. Weissmandel jumped from the deportation train, survived in hiding, and later emigrated to the United States. Fleischmann was murdered in Auschwitz.

THE SLOVAK NATIONAL UPRISING

By the end of 1943, the Ludák regime was in deep internal crisis. After Germany's military defeats on the eastern front and the capitulation of Italy, the future of the Tiso regime was not bright. The previously fragmented resistance movement, consisting of communists and "civic" (noncommunist) groups, joined forces and created the Slovak National Council (Slovenská národná rada, SNR) at the end of 1943. From the spring of 1944 on, the SNR cooperated with the underground group within the Slovak army called the Military Center (Vojenské ústredie, VÚ). Their goal was to prepare a military uprising and overthrow the Tiso regime. The plan was to attack the rear of the retreating German Army near the mountainous eastern border of Slovakia, thus opening the Carpathian passes for the Red Army. At the same time, the Ľudák regime was to be overthrown in the west of the country. If that failed, there was to be immediate resistance to the German Army in case of an unexpected German occupation of Slovakia.⁴⁷

During the summer of 1944, Slovakia became the operational area of various partisan groups formed by Soviet officers. They were dropped into Slovak territory to operate in the German rear. The increase in partisan activities and operations of various partisan groups in coordination with the Soviet partisan headquarters, but not with the SNR, provoked German military intervention.⁴⁸

On August 29, 1944, the landscape in Slovakia changed dramatically when the first German units crossed Slovakia's borders. What came to be referred to as the Slovak National Uprising (Slovenské národné povstanie, SNP) to resist the German occupation and overthrow the Tiso government began under the command of the Banská Bystrica-based Military Center.

In reaction to the uprising, the HSELS regime underwent major changes. A new government came to power under Prime Minister Štefan Tiso, and the security apparatus was reorganized. Special units of the Hlinka Guard (Pobotovostné oddiely Hlinkovej gardy, POHG) were formed to help the Nazi security forces in suppressing the uprising and persecuting its supporters.

German Einsatzgruppe H der Sipo und des SD units began to fight in Bratislava with its Einsatzkommandos and Sonderkommandos operating all over the progressively occupied areas of western and central Slovakia. In eastern Slovakia, Nazi Kommando ZbV 27, under the control of KdS Krakau (Krakow), started to operate.⁴⁹

When Nazi Germany invaded Slovakia, its goal was to liquidate partisan groups, but in the area of central Slovakia its units instead faced an organized army. The First Czechoslovak Army in Slovakia, under the command of General Ján Golian, succeeded later by General Rudolf Viest, fought against better equipped and trained German units (and their Slovak collaborators) until October 27, 1944. On that day, the center of the uprising, Banská Bystrica, fell. Insurgents retreated into the mountains and carried out a guerilla campaign; this combat continued until the liberation of Slovakia in 1945.

The German reaction was predictably harsh. The Germans shot or arrested Slovaks whom they suspected of aiding the uprising and razed 93 villages in retaliation for suspected collaboration. A later estimate of the death toll among civilians was 5,304 people, and postwar authorities discovered 211 mass graves resulting from those atrocities.⁵⁰ The largest mass killings occurred in Kremnička and Nemecká; other civilians were taken to the various concentration camps where they were tortured and murdered.

The failed uprising and the German occupation ushered in the final bloody stage of the Holocaust in Slovakia. The Tiso regime's hostility toward the remaining Jewish population escalated. The regime attempted to use the "Jewish Question" to strengthen its power, describing the Jews as "Judeobolsheviks" and other undesirables who wanted to gain control of Slovakia and take advantage of all good Slovaks and Christians. The regime-sponsored newspapers were filled with antisemitic propaganda that in some ways surpassed in intensity that in the 1940 to 1942 period.

German military and security authorities began to organize deportation trains from Sereď and from eastern Slovakia. From the end of September 1944 to March 1945, 11 transports from the Sereď concentration camp and several transports from Prešov carried the remaining Jews out of Slovakia. Some were sent to Auschwitz, and others to Sachsenhausen, Ravensbrück, or Terezín. Approximately 13,500 people were deported.⁵¹

The occupation units and the members of the POHG or other Slovak forces no longer recognized exemptions and employment licenses for Jews. Acts of brutality, robbery, and murder accompanied the deportations, and German units, sometimes with the help of Hlinka Guard (either POHG or field companies of the HG) murdered hundreds of Jews and Roma immediately on capture.

After the Red Army conquered Slovakia in April 1945, Tiso fled first to Austria and then to a Capuchin monastery in Alttötting, Bavaria. U.S. forces captured him there in June 1945 and extradited him to the restored Czechoslovakia, where he was tried. On April 15, 1947, the Czechoslovak National Court (Národný súd) found him guilty of treason and sentenced him to death. Tiso was executed wearing his clerical garb in Bratislava on April 18, 1947.

SOURCES Political histories of the Slovak state include Yehoshua Robert Büchler, Gila Fatranová, and Stanislav Mičev, Fragments z dejín židovstva na Slovensku (Banská Bystrica, Slovakia: Datei, 1991); Ingrid Graziano and István Eördögh, Josef Tiso e la questione ebraica in Slovacchia (Cosenza: Periferia, 2002); Katarína Hradská, Prípady Dieter Wisliceny: Nacistické poradcovia a židovská otázka na Slovensku (Bratislava: AEP, 1999); Yeshayahu Jelínek, The Parish Republic: Hlinka's Slovak People's Party 1939–1945 (Boulder, CO: Eastern European Quarterly, 1976); Hana Kubátová, Nepokradneš! Nálady a postoje slovenské spoločnosti k židovské otázce, 1938–1945 (Prague: Academia, 2013); Eduard Nižňanský, Nacizmus, bolokaust, slovenský štát (Bratislava: Kalligram, 2010); Eduard Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku medzi československou parlamentou demokraciou a slovenským štátom v stredoeurópskom kontexte (Prešov, Slovakia: Universum, 1999); Peter Sokolovič, Hlinkova garda 1938–1945 (Bratislava: Ústav Pamäti Národa, 2009); Tatjana Tönsmeier, Das Dritte Reich und die Slowakei 1939–1945: Politischer Alltag zwischen Kooperation und Eigensinn (Paderborn, Germany: Schöningh, 2003); and these works by James Mace Ward: Priest, Politician, Collaborator: Josef Tiso and the Making of fascist Slovakia (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 2013); "People Who Deserve It: Josef Tiso and the Presidential Exemption," NatPprs 30:4 (2002): 571–601; and "The First Vienna Award and the Holocaust in Slovakia," HGS 29:1 (Spring 2015): 76–108.

With the fall of the Iron Curtain, a new generation of historians has focused on a myriad of topics related to the Holocaust, including general aspects of the Slovak state, political history of the clerico-fascist nation, local history of towns or specific sites of discrimination, and non-Jewish victims. In addition, many conferences have been hosted in Slovakia whose papers have contributed to numerous edited volumes on the Holocaust in Slovakia. The following list of works is not comprehensive, but should provide the reader with a solid starting point for examining Slovak sources related to the Holocaust. General books and articles about the Slovak state include Gila Fatranová, Boj o prežitie (Bratislava: SNM—Múzeum Židovskej Kultúry, 2007); idem, “Die Deportation der Juden aus der Slowakei 1944–1945,” Bohemia 37:1 (1996): 99–119; idem, “The Working Group” HGS 8:2 (Fall 1994): 164–201; Tomáš Gerbec, Štát proti Židom, available at www.impulzrevue.sk/article.php?816; Gabriel Hoffmann, Katolícka cirkev a tragédia slovenských židov v dokumentoch (Partizánske, Slovakia: Vyd-vo G-print, 1994); Katrína Hradská, “Deportácie slovenských Židov v rokoch 1944–1945 so zreteľom na trasporty do Terezína,” Hcb 45:3 (1997): 455–471; Yeshayahu Jelínek, Židia na Slovensku v 19. a 20. storočí (Bratislava: Slovenské národné múzeum, 1999); Martin Lacko, Slovenská Republika 1939–1945 (Bratislava: Perfekt, 2008); Ján Mlynárik, Dejiny židů na Slovensku, trans. Milan Pokorný (Prague: Academia, 2005); Peter Salner, Mozaika židovskej Bratislavy (Bratislava: Albert Marencin Vydavateľstvo, 2007); Peter Salner, Prežili Holokaust (Bratislava: Veda, 1997); and Lenka Šindelářová, Finale der Vernichtung: Die Einsatzgruppe H in der Slowakei 1944/1945 (Darmstadt: WBG, 2013).

Works that deal with particular labor, concentration, or transit camps include Igor Baka, Židovský Tábor v Novákoch (Bratislava: Zing Print, 2001); Marek Danko, “Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary,” (Košice, Slovakia: Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, 2010) available at www.saske.sk/cas/public/media/5813/201001_03_danko.pdf; Ján Hlavinka and Eduard Nižňanský, Pracovný a koncentračný tábor v Seredi 1941–1945 (Bratislava: Dokumentačné stredisko holokaustu, 2009); Mauro M. Langfelder, Žilina: Il vino e il sangue (Milan: Terziaria, 2003); Eduard Nižňanský and Lucia Könözyová, eds., “Židovské pracovné stredisko v Degeši: v dokumentoch,” SHN 10 (2002): 219–236; Karen Spira, “Memories of Youth: Slovak Jewish Holocaust Survivors and the Nováky Labor Camp” (unpub. MA thesis, Brandeis University, 2011); Jana Stráska, “Koncentračné stredisko v Žiline,” AFHUMBW 3:4 (2010): 88–95; Alexander von Plato, Almut Leh, and Christoph Thonfeld, eds., Hitler’s Slaves: Life Stories of Forced Labourers in Nazi-Occupied Europe (New York: Berghahn Books, 2010); and Milena Balcová, “Šiesty robotný prápor Pracovného zboru Národnej obrany a jeho činnosť v rokoch 1941–1944,” VH 2 (2012): 79–97.

Before 1989, the Holocaust was not addressed in many historical studies. Despite the topic’s controversial nature, Ivan Kamenec, Ladislav Lipscher, Livia Rothkirchen, and Ctibor Nečas explored Slovakia’s collaboration with Nazi Germany, but many of their manuscripts were not published until after 1991. See Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: Archa, 1991) or translated into English as On the Trail of Tragedy: The Holocaust in Slovakia, trans. Martin C. Styan (Bratislava: H & H, 2007); Ladislav Lipscher, Židia v slovenskom štáte 1939–1945, trans. Irma Knezlová and Magdalena Pechová (Bratislava: Printservis, 1992); and Livia Rothkirchen, Hurban Yahadut Slovakiah: te’ur histori bi-te’udot (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1961); idem, “The Dual Role of the ‘Jewish Center’ in Slovakia,” in Patterns of Jewish Leadership in Nazi Europe 1933–1945 (Proceedings of the 3rd Yad Vashem International Historical Conference) (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1979), pp. 219–227. More recent works on the Holocaust in Slovakia include Waclaw Długoborski, The Tragedy of the Jews of Slovakia: 1938–1945: Slovakia and the “Final Solution of the Jewish Question” (Oświęcim, Poland: Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum, 2002); Peter Sokolovič, ed., Perzekúcie na Slovensku v rokoch 1938–1945: Slovenská Republika 1939–1945 očami mladých historikov VII (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2008); and Jozef Vicen, “K problematike Zaisťovacieho tábora v Ilave v rokoch 1939–1945,” in Slovenská republika 1939–1945 očami mladých historikov IV. Zborník, eds. Michal Šmigel’ and Peter Mičko (Banská Bystrica, Slovakia: Ústav pamäti národa, 2005), pp. 135–143.

Although the majority of the works focus on Jewish victims, some authors have also written about non-Jewish victims, particularly the Roma and others deemed “asocials.” Such works include Karola Fings, Herbert Heuss, and Frank Sparing, eds., In the Shadow of the Swastika: The Gypsies during the Second World War, 3 vols., trans. Donald Kenrick (Hatfield, UK: University of Hertfordshire Press, 1999–2006); Karol Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2010); Karol Janas, Zabudnuté Tábory (Trenčín, Slovakia: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); and Július Tancoš and Rene Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002). For the Roma, see Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Rómové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova Univerzita, 1994); and Milena Hübschmannová, “Po Židoch Cigáni”: Svědectví Romů ze Slovenska, 1939–1945 (Prague: Triada, 2005).

Primary documents on the Holocaust and camps in Slovakia can be divided into edited volumes, archival materials, memoirs, and oral history. The most comprehensive edited volumes were written by Eduard Nižňanský. These crucial works not only include the most important documents, organized thematically, but also place them within the proper historical context. The volumes most used for this chapter were Eduard Nižňanský and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 2: Prezident, vláda, Snem SR a Štátna rada o židovskej otázke (1939–1945) (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2003); Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie anatomie (6.10.1938–14.3.1939) (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2001); Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004); and Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: Deportácie v roku 1942 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2005). In addition to the Holokaust na Slovensku series, there are primary source compilations in the following works: Katarína Hradská, Listy Gisely Fleischmannovej (1942–1944): snaby Pracovnej skupiny o záchranu slovenských a európskych židov: Dokumenty (Zvolen, Slovakia: Klemo, 2003); Ladislav Hubenák, ed., Riešenie židovskej otázky na Slovensku 1939–1945: Dokumenty (Bratislava: Slovenské národné múzeum, 1994); Milena Hübschmannová, “Po Židoch Cigáni” svědectví Romů ze Slovenska, 1939–1945 (Prague: Triada, 2005); and Ústredný svaz židovských náboženských obcí na Slovensku, ed., Tragédia slovenských židov: fotografie a dokumenty (Bratislava: The Centre, 1993). The Treaty of Protection can be found in NCA.

USHMMA holds more than 3,200 items regarding the Holocaust in Slovakia. Specifically, it holds 15 collections from SNA and various local archives in Slovakia. The most comprehensive collection, RG-57.001M (Slovak Documents related to the Holocaust), contains more than 1,500 reels of documentation from various Slovak ministries, local administrations, applications for exemption from deportation, Aryanization records, and more. In addition, USHMMA holds collections from ÚPN, the Conference for Jewish Material Claims against Germany, ŠOA-B, ŠOA-N, VHÚ, and VHA. The archival records of the International Tracing Service (ITS) are also a valuable source.

The number of published testimonies has grown exponentially since 1989. The following list is only a fraction of the published memoirs; as one can see, they deal with various experiences including labor camps and concentration camps. Perhaps the best-known memoir was written by Rudolf Vrba, I Cannot Forgive, ed. Alan Bestic (1964; Vancouver: Regent College Publishers, 1997). Others include Edith Ernst-Drori, Des Lebensrechts beraubt: Drei Jahre im Untergrund. Jüdische Schicksale in der Slowakei 1942–1945 (Konstanz: Hartung-Gorre, 2000); Abraham-Aba Frieder, Z Denníka mladého rabína, ed. Emanuel Frieder (Bratislava: Edícia Judaica Slovaca, 1993); Alexander Hochhäuser, Zufällig überlebt: Als deutscher Jude in der Slowakei (Berlin: Metropol, 1992); Marie Magdaléna Hornáková-Jodasová, Neobyčajný život (Prague: Nakl. Jaroslava Poberova, 2005); Hilda Hrabovecká, Arm with Tattooed Number (Bratislava: PT, 2002); David Huban, Bol som mladý a chcel som žiť (Bratislava: Múzeum Židovskej Kultúry, 2004); Hani Kehat, My Nitra: A Family's Struggle to Survive in Slovakia (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 2015); Ján Gál Podd'umbierský, Z kalicha utrpenia: Rozpomienky na zážitky v koncentračnom tábore v Ilave (Komárno, Slovakia: Pravda, 1947); Elo Sándor, Ilava: Zázitky z policajného lapáku a z koncentračného tábora z čias, keď sa rodila naša sloboda (Brno: Mir, 1947); Harold Saunders, Zeugnis geben: Von Bratislava durch Auschwitz-Birkenau ins Lager Gleiwitz I und zurück. Jüdische Schicksale in der Slowakei 1938–1945 (Konstanz: Hartung-Gorre, 2001); Juraj Spitzer, Nebcel som byť Žid (Bratislava: Kalligram, 1994); and Juraj Spitzer, Svitá, až keď je celkom tma (Bratislava: Kalligram, 1996).

Vanda Rajcan, Madeline Vadkerty and Ján Hlavinka

NOTES

1. Vladimír Srb, Obyvateľstvo Slovenska 1918–1938, available at www.infostat.sk/vdc/pdf/slov1918.pdf, 10; Akiva Nir, “The Zionist Organizations, Youth Movements and Emigration to Palestine in 1918–1945,” in The Tragedy of the Jews of Slovakia, eds. Waclaw Długoborski et al. (Oswiecim, Banská Bystrica: Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum, 2002), 37; Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6.

2. Michal Barnovský, ed., Dokumenty slovenskej národnej identity a štátnosti, vol. II (Bratislava: Národné literárne centrum, 1998), p. 178.

3. Treaty of Protection concluded between the German Reich and the State of Slovakia, March 23, 1939, 1439-PS, NCA, 4:19.

4. Ctibor Nečas, “Pronásledování Cikánů v období slovenského státu,” in Rómovia a druhá svetová vojna, eds. Ingrid Vagačová and Martin Fotta (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku), p. 41.

5. Ibid.

6. Ibid.

7. Ibid.

8. Ibid., p. 42.

9. Ibid.

10. Ward, “The First Vienna Award and the Holocaust in Slovakia,” pp. 76, 84, 92.

11. Eduard Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku medzi československou parlamentnou demokraciou a Slovenským štátom v stredoeurópskom kontexte (Prešov: Universum, 1999), pp. 40, 54.

12. Ibid.

13. Nižňanský and Kamenec, Holokaust na Slovensku, 2: 25–26.

14. Decree No. 63/1939 Sl.z., Slovenský zákonník, 1939, p. 77.

15. Law No. 113/1939 Sl.z., Slovenský zákonník, 1939, pp. 166–170.

16. Fatranová, Boj o prežitie, p. 40.

17. Constitutional Law No. 210/1940 Sl.z. Slovenský zákonník, 1940, p. 343.

18. Gila Fatranová, “Pracovná skupina: pokus o záchranu,” in Aktivity ilegálnej židovskej Pracovnej skupiny počas holokaustu na Slovensku. Zborník príspevkov zo seminára (Bratislava: Dokumentačné stredisko holokaustu, 2007), pp. 6–7.

19. Decree No. 257/1940 Sl.z. Slovenský zákonník, 1940, p. 407.

20. Ibid., p. 429.

21. Decree No. 271/1940 Sl.z., Slovenský zákonník, p. 262; Ján Hlavinka and Martina Fiamová, “Arizácia židovského majetku,” in Slovenský štát 1939–1945: predstavy a realita, eds. Martina Fiamová, Ján Hlavinka, and Michal Schvarc (Bratislava: Historický ústav SAV, 2014), 263.

22. Ľudovít Hallon, “Arizácia na Slovensku 1939–1945,” Acta Oeconomica Pragensia 7 (2007).

23. Ján Hlavinka, “‘Kapitál má slúžiť národu . . .’ Korupcia v arizácii podnikového majetku na Slovensku,” in Korupcia, eds. Peter Šoltés and László Vörös (Historický ústav SAV Veda, 2015).

24. Ján Korček, “Vojensky organizované pracovné formácie v pôsobnosti MNO a MV Slovenskej republiky 1942–1945,” in Pracovné jednotky a útvary slovenskej armády 1939–1945. VI. Robotný prápor., ed. Dezider Tóth (Bratislava: Zing Print, 1996), pp. 43–92.

25. Kamenec, On the Trail of Tragedy, p. 157.

26. Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 11.

27. Decree 198/1941 Sl.z., Slovenský zákonník, 1941, p. 643.

28. Ibid.

29. Ibid.

30. Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 113.

31. Ján Hlavinka and Eduard Nižňanský, Pracovný a koncentračný tábor v Sereďi 1941–1945 (Bratislava: Dokumentačné stredisko holokaustu, 2009), p. 20.

32. Zápisnica o III. zasadnutí Štátnej rady. SNA, fond Úrad predsedníctva vlády, box 242.

33. Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 13.

34. Ibid., 6: 14–15.

35. Zápisnica o III. zasadnutí Štátnej rady. SNA, fond Úrad predsedníctva vlády, box 242.

36. Ward, Priest, Politician, Collaborator, p. 231.

37. Ibid., p. 227.

38. SNA, fond MV, box 227, file 1.

39. Letter of the Ministry of Interior No. 12361/42. SNA, fond MV, box 262.

40. Jehošua Róbert Büchler, "Deportácie Židov zo Slovenska do oblasti Lublin v Poľsku v roku 1942," in Acta Judaica Slovaca, ed. Pavol Mešťan (Bratislava: Slovenské národné múzeum - MŽK, 2002).
41. Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 59–61.
42. Kamenec, On the Trail of Tragedy, p. 157.
43. Tiso speech reproduced in ibid., p. 206.
44. USHMMA, RG-57.004M, 59/101–102.
45. Yehuda Bauer, Jews for Sale? Nazi-Jewish Negotiations, 1933–1945 (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1994), pp. 91–101.
46. The Vrba-Wetzler Report is available at <http://german-historydocs.ghi-dc.org/pdf/eng/English45.pdf>.
47. Igor Baka et al., Slovensko a Slováci vo víre druhej svetovej vojny (Bratislava: Pro Militaria Historia), p. 98.
48. Ibid., pp. 104–108.
49. Dušan Halaj et al. Fašistické represálie na Slovensku (Banská Bystrica: ÚV SZPB, Múzeum Slovenského národného povstania), p. 145.
50. Ibid., p. 6.
51. Kamenec, On the Trail of Tragedy, p. 337.

Camps in Slovakia

BOJKOVÁ

Bojková is located just over 53 kilometers (33 miles) northeast of Bratislava. In 1942, the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV), Department 53, created the Educational Asylum for Women (Ženský výchovný ústav) on the premises of the state-owned agricultural project. MV issued the asylum's internal order on June 20, 1942. It was intended for "asocial" women, particularly prostitutes. Women were sent to the asylum by the chief of the Police Directorate in Bratislava (Policačné riaditeľstvo v Bratislave). In Bojková they lived in housing that the MV provided and were cared for by civilian authorities or nuns.¹ MV's Department 53 administered the center and made administrative and personnel decisions.

The facility had the capacity to hold up to 150 women, but initially housed 35.² Dr. Straka, the head of Department 53, considered expanding the center to hold up to 250 people later in 1943. It is known that at one point more than 94 women labeled as "asocial and morally defective" were in the camp.³ A medical doctor provided health care on the premises. Women kept in the asylum worked at their own farm as well as other farms in the vicinity. During bad weather and off-season they performed tailoring or laundered underwear for state asylums. On May 31, 1943, Dr. Straka asked his superiors in the MV for permission to open a "similar asylum for Jewish females" by building two additional barracks with a total capacity of 200 persons.⁴ There is no evidence that this request was approved. It is also not known when the camp was liquidated.

SOURCES Very little is known about this site. Primary sources can be found in SNA, box 549, and in USHMMA in the SNA collection (RG-57.001M), reel 176.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. "Pracovné útvary pre asociálne osoby ženského pohlavia," March 16, 1943, Slovak National Archives (SNA), fond MV, box 549, file D-1109/43 (549/D-1109/43).

2. SNA, fond MV, box 577, file 1228/44.

3. "Pánu presidiálnemu šéfovi," n.d., SNA, fond MV, 549/D-1117.

4. SNA, fond MV, box 577, file 1228/44.

BRATISLAVA/PATRÓNKA

The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) created the Patrónka concentration camp (officially called Koncentračné stredisko Židov Bratislava-Patrónka) on March 5, 1942. The camp was established in buildings belonging to the Asylum for Disabled Persons¹ (Ústav pre zmrzačených), which was situated in an old abandoned ammunition factory in Patrónka, a suburb of Bratislava named for its manufacturing of weaponry (patróny). Much as Poprad served as a concentration and transit camp for Jews living in eastern Slovakia, Patrónka housed Jews from Bratislava and western Slovakia. As with the Poprad transit camp, Patrónka initially served as a camp for women between the ages of 16 to 45; however, over time, men and families were also detained there.²

While the Jews from Bratislava were escorted to the Patrónka camp under the supervision of the police directorate in Bratislava and the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG), Jews from other western Slovakian towns and districts (such as Trnava, Myjava, and so on) were escorted to the camp by the gendarmerie, together with HG and Freiwillige Schutzstaffel (FS).³ First women from western Slovakian towns were brought to the Červený Most train station, which was less central than Bratislava's main train station, where the camp's guards then escorted them to the Patrónka camp, a distance of one kilometer (0.6 miles).⁴ The internees were allowed to bring up to 50 kilograms (110 pounds) of personal belongings in their suitcases, including food and clothing. The deputy commandant, Július Pavlík, conducted personal searches for valuables as soon as the young women arrived in Patrónka. Confiscated items included gold, watches, and pens; these property lists are available in the archives.⁵ Three guards were arrested for stealing Jewish property in Patrónka after missing property was found in their houses. They were incarcerated in the Ilava prison.⁶

The Patrónka camp consisted of three buildings. In Building I (the "good building"), wooden planks without pallets, arranged in two tiers, served as beds. It could house up to 700 Jews. Building II, which was labeled as "damaged," held 70 metal double beds that could accommodate 140 Jews; additional deportees slept on wooden planks. Building III, which was located between the two other buildings, was divided into two parts. One half housed the HG, and the other half of the building provided the necessary office space for the camp commandant. In addition to the three buildings, the Jews built a wooden shed that served as a storage space for the deportees' luggage.⁷

Depending on the part of the camp where they were located, the prisoners slept either on their own belongings or on wooden planks, which could accommodate three people. Some of these wooden planks were found on the floor of the factory, and the Slovak Red Cross provided additional planks from an as-yet unidentified repatriation camp.⁸ Some hay was available to use as bedding, which the women spread out and then swept up in the morning. The prisoners were not given any blankets, but used personal belongings brought from home to cover themselves while sleeping. Some women also slept in the factory's offices. The military kitchen supplied food to the camp: for breakfast, the detainees received black coffee and a piece of bread, whereas soup was served for either lunch or dinner.⁹

Camp discipline was strict, and the Jews offered no resistance. The HG was responsible for guarding the camp, which was surrounded by an electrified barbed-wire fence. The camp commandant was Imrich Vašina, who had been in charge of the warehouse; he later became the commandant of Sered' in 1942.¹⁰ During his trial at the Slovak National Court, Vašina admitted that he had to fire 12 to 16 members of the HG for their harsh treatment of Jews in Patrónka.¹¹ In addition, court records indicate that Vašina accepted at least 50,000 Slovak crowns (Ks) in bribes, as well as alcohol, from individuals and the Jewish Organization (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ), by which they hoped to avoid deportation.¹²

Deportations occurred once the quota of one thousand persons was achieved in the camp. The first transport, comprising 1,002 young female prisoners, left Patrónka for Auschwitz on March 27, 1942.¹³ Transports totaling approximately 7,500 persons left the camp under Vašina's command.¹⁴ Some transports that departed from Patrónka went through the Žilina camp, where more prisoners were added to the train to fulfill the quota of 1,000 persons per transport. Other, so-called supplementary transports brought Jews from Patrónka to the Žilina and Sered' camps, where they were later put into the transports departing for German-occupied Poland.¹⁵

Once selected, the deportees marched 3.3 kilometers (just over 2 miles) through the fields to Lamač where the trains were already waiting. The marches took place at night so the local population would not see the deportees. The trains left Lamač at 6:55 P.M., arriving in Čadca for the transfer of the guards at 4:28 A.M.¹⁶

When the Patrónka camp closed in late August 1942, Vašina was transferred to command the Sered' labor camp. The Slovak National Court sentenced him to thirty years of imprisonment on March 27, 1947.¹⁷ He died in 1954.

SOURCES Patrónka is briefly mentioned in numerous secondary sources, including Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: Deportácie v roku 1942 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2005); Ladislav Lipscher, Židia v Slovenskom štáte 1939–1945 (Bratislava: Printservis, 1992); and Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: Archa, 1991).

Primary sources that document the camp at Patrónka can be found in SNA; they are copied in microfilm to USHMMA as RG-57.001M (Slovak Documents Related to the Holocaust) and are in digital form as RG-57.004M (selected records of trials of the National Court of Slovakia, including the Jozef Tiso trial). In RG-57.001M, Patrónka files include reel 17, box 226, file 17; and reel 28, box 215, file 969. Additional documents can be found throughout the collection. RG-57.004M includes the Vašina trial. VHA has 31 testimonies from Patrónka survivors.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. Martina Fiamová, "Koncentračné stredisko Bratislava–Patrónka," in Matej Medvecký, ed., Fenomén Bratislava (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2011), p. 234.

2. VHA #27295, Blanka Broch testimony, February 2, 1997; VHA #1079, Jeannette Nagel testimony, February 20, 1995.

3. Fiamová, "Koncentračné stredisko Bratislava–Patrónka," p. 237.

4. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 7, box 205, file 612 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/7/205/612).

5. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/17/226/17.

6. USHMMA, RG-57.004M, SNA, folder 10, file 1, pp. 9–10 (USHMMA, RG-57.004M//10/1, with pages).

7. "Hlásenie č. 1," March 7, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 205, 609/1942, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 121–122 (Doc. 22).

8. Ibid., 6: 121 (Doc. 22).

9. "Ministerstvo vnútra," March 12, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 206, 638/42; and fond MV, kartón 287, 406-560-13, reprinted in ibid., 6: 142 (Doc. 37).

10. USHMMA, RG-57.004M/10/1, pp. 9–10.

11. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/28/215/969; VHA #29893, Verona Javorová interview, May 29, 1997.

12. USHMMA, RG-57.004M/10/1, pp. 9–10.

13. "Eskorty pre trasporty Židov," March 12, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 207/14, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 136 (Doc. 35).

14. USHMMA, RG-57.004M/10/1, pp. 9–10.

15. Fiamová, "Koncentračné stredisko Bratislava–Patrónka," p. 248.

16. "Preprava zaradencov Židov," March 11, 1942, SNA, fond NS, Dr. A. Vašek, Tnlud, 17/46–65, kartón 110, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 128 (Doc. 29).

17. Ibid., 6: 9–10.

BYSTRÉ

Bystré is located 341 kilometers (212 miles) east-northeast of Bratislava. The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) created the camp there on July 1, 1942.¹ It was a subcamp of the Hanušovce nad Topľou camp, and it consisted of nine wooden barracks that could accommodate 900 forced laborers. Barracks were built in Hlibovec, Habeš, and Čierne. In addition, a barrack located near the quarry in Hermanovce belonged to the camp. One barrack was set aside to house the camp commander and the gendarmes who were guarding the camp. Approximately two-thirds of the forced laborers were Roma (also referred to as Gypsies, Cigáni), and the remaining third consisted of persons labeled "Aryan asocials." The number of inmates fluctuated between 300 and 900.

The Ing. Lozovský and Štefanec construction firm was responsible for building a railway from Vyšný Žipov to Rybníky as a part of the strategic railway line between Prešov and Strážske. The work unit (pracovný útvar, PÚ) used mostly unemployed Roma men between the ages of 18 and 50. The barracks were located only about 100 meters (328 feet) from a forest, which led to a high number of desertions. Of the initial 640 workers in Bystré, approximately 200 escaped, mostly to escape the poor housing conditions. Local police arrested some of the deserters and brought them back to the main camp.

The forced laborers were subdivided into two groups, according to their ability to work. Those who could not keep up with the pace either had to stay on the job longer or received deductions from their pay. Some laborers in the camp barely made enough money to pay for their own food. On September 26, 1942, the firm turned away 50 people because they were too weak to work. In addition to decreases in pay for working at a slow rate, deductions were also made for food, social insurance, housing, and the rental of equipment. For example, a worker could make between 93 Slovak crowns (Ks) and 300 Ks every two weeks without deductions; with deductions that amount could be as low as 75 Ks per pay period.

According to the contract with the MV, the contracting firm was responsible for providing adequate housing. However, the housing in Bystré was substandard and a source of frequent complaints among the forced laborers. Lice, insects, and rodents were found throughout the barracks; even the representatives from MV Department 16, the department responsible for the “asocials,” deemed the barracks unsuitable during inspections. At the end of July 1942, two-thirds of the 860 forced laborers did not have blankets or sufficient clothing and slept on insect- and flea-infested wooden boards. One-third of the workers did not have shoes.

The camp commander, Engleman, maintained strict discipline. At first, 14 gendarmes guarded the camp; however, that number increased to 20 on March 15, 1943.² The camp commander complained on several occasions that monthly payments were not made to the gendarmes: the MV did not pay the gendarmes' salaries for the months of March, April, and May 1943. On April 15, 1943, 509 laborers (168 asocials and 341 Roma) worked in the camp, and the camp commander complained to the MV that the reeducation lectures could not occur due to a lack of space. He requested that the firm provide larger barracks or rooms for these presentations and for church masses in case of inclement weather. He argued that the laborers could not attend religious worship services in the town because they did not have sufficient clothing. He contended that the high desertion rates were directly correlated with the lack of reeducation presentations. The laborers did not work on Saturday afternoons and used that time to clean their barracks, shower, and wash clothes. They attended church functions on Sunday mornings, but according to Engleman that did not provide sufficient time for training and reeducation. In fact, he requested that the laborers stay in their barracks two Saturdays a month to continue with these vital cultural and reeducation campaigns, an idea that the MV quickly dismissed.

The worst food conditions and frequent complaints came from the camps in Bystré and Hanušovce nad Topľou, over a kilometer away. The camp commander mentioned the insufficient rations in his reports; however, the contracting firm refused to increase food portions. The workers were charged 10 Ks per day for food, even though the rations were very meager. Those who worked in the kitchen often stole food. For example, when the camp's command inventoried the food supply on January 17, 1943, they found that 12 kilograms (26.7 pounds) of 73 kilograms (160 pounds) of food was missing. When the food arrived in the camp, a gendarme signed for it, and the camp commander locked the food away to prevent theft and other questionable dealings. In addition, Engleman fired Jan Sabol, the camp's cook, who stole food and made soap at night that he later sold. Engleman even started criminal proceedings against him in the district court in Giraltovce. He also fired Vojtech Krupa for failing to prove himself to be an adequate cook.

The camp commander frequently communicated to the MV about the camp's conditions; he was particularly concerned about the lack of gloves and appropriate winter shoes during the cold months; however, nothing came of his complaints.

At first, the laborers traveled to Hanušovce nad Topľou to see a doctor; however, eventually a medic treated the laborers on site so they did not lose a whole day of work in transit. A high percentage of laborers did not work in November and December, mostly because of the severe weather and illness. Among those who did not work, doctors reported 411 injuries and 1,209 cases of illness, particularly ear, eye, respiratory tract and lungs, gastrointestinal, and cardiac conditions. Work was also suspended around Christmas; instead, the workers attended training and reeducation lessons given by the local priest or the camp command.

A typhus outbreak occurred in February and March 1943, and a strict quarantine was enforced for 14 subsequent days. Dr. Róbert Pollák, the camp doctor for the Bystré and Hanušovce camps, concluded that there was a serious shortage of soap and documented the unsanitary conditions. An inspection by state health officials found 12 sick patients. The barracks were in horrible condition, and the officials proposed their disinfection.³ Because 200 additional laborers were scheduled to arrive on March 14, solving the hygiene situation was particularly important.⁴ Pollák and his colleagues recommended that these new workers be barred from the camp until the disinfection of the barracks was concluded.

The Ing. Lozovský and Štefanec company was accused of not cleaning and properly disinfecting the barracks, an accusation that the firm promptly denied; instead it blamed the camp leadership for the unhygienic conditions. After 6 people became ill with typhus, 50 gendarmes, health personnel, site supervisors, and others were vaccinated first, at 100 Ks per vaccination. Although some workers were deloused, the barracks were not properly dealt with, so the problem persisted despite the camp commander's continuing documentation and reporting.⁵

Unusually favorable weather conditions in March and April allowed the workers to finish most of the road construction. The firm requested the camp be closed between June 1 and 15, 1943,⁶ although it was not liquidated until July 22, 1943. One hundred and eighty forced laborers from the Bratislava and Trenčín regions were then moved to the Dubnica nad Váhom camp, 160 workers from the Nitra and Tatras regions were moved to the Ilava camp, and 57 workers from Šariš and Zemplín were moved to the Revúca camp. In addition, the Lanna firm, a firm responsible for another phase of the road construction, transported 44 workers to Lipníky to continue working on its project.⁷

SOURCES Additional information about Bystré can be found in Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brně, 1994); Ivan Kamenec, “Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovních táborů a středisk na Slovensku v letech 1942–1944,” in Nové obzory č. 8: Spoločensko-vedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38; Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); Július Táncoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002); and Marek Danko, “Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary” (Spoločensko-vedný ústav SAV, Košice), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/.

Primary sources documenting the Bystré camp can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA collection), reels 185–191; and in SNA, boxes 549–551. Published documents on the MV can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Simečku, 2004).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Pracovný útvar–Bystré,” March 15, 1943, SNA, fond MV, box 549, file 1087/43 (SNA, fond MV, 549/1087/43).
2. “Veliteľstvo pracovného útvaru Bystré,” March 15, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 549/D-1128/43.
3. “Pracovný útvar–Bystré,” March 3, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 549/1087/43.
4. “Bystré,” n.d., SNA, fond MV, 549/D-1109/43.
5. “Škvrnitý týfus medzi zaradencami tunajšieho útvaru,” February 25, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 549/D-1109/43.
6. “Zrušenie pracovného tábora v Bystrom,” May 17, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 550/D-1153/43.
7. Ibid.

DEGEŠ

Degeš (today: Rastislavice) is located 72 kilometers (45 miles) east of Bratislava. A forced labor camp for Jews was opened in Degeš in July 1942, when the construction firm, Centrolomy, petitioned the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) for the allocation of additional forced labor. The Nitra regional roads authority called on Government Commissar of Labor Camps, Július Pečúch, who was in charge of the MV's forced labor camps for Jews, to establish the Degeš labor camp for 80 workers to meet the project's goals—building roads between Ivánka, Urmín, Degeš, and Branč, totaling 28.2 kilometers (17.5 miles), and between Taraň and Urmín, amounting to 8.2 kilometers (5.1 miles).¹

On July 24, 1942, 30 Jewish forced laborers were deployed on the Ivánka-Urmín-Degeš road construction site. The Jews deployed at the camp in 1942 proved reliable and henceforth partially replaced non-Jewish, blue-collar workers on the site.²

On February 2, 1943, Pečúch granted the request of the Nitra regional roads authority, thus formally establishing the Degeš Jewish work center (Pracovné stredisko Židov). Effective March 3, 1943, the camp was assigned to construction work in the Nitra regional district, and 80 Jewish construction workers were assigned to Degeš.³ On March 1, 1943, 41 Jewish forced laborers were assigned to work on the 12-kilometer (7.5-mile) Branč-Taraň-Pol'ný Kešov road segment, and construction began the following day. On temporary assignment, the remaining 39 Jews worked on the Ružový Dvor farm until March 25, 1943.

The Jews were housed in a separate building in Degeš. Altogether there were 75 Jewish laborers and their 133 family members. The laborers were not allowed to leave their labor assignment and accommodations. Wearing the yellow star at work was obligatory. Their earnings not only had to cover their personal living expenses but also support family members. They worked 10 hours a day in summer, 9 hours a day in October, and 8 hours a day in November and December. Jewish workers were paid 3.75 Slovak crowns (Ks) per hour. MV reported that 98,325 hours of forced labor were performed at the camp in 1943, or 1,229 hours per person.⁴

Overseeing the forced labor were foremen Ján Klesken, Štefan Hadzo, and František Hrivniak, as well as labor supervisor Štefan Obranec. Alexander Freund, a Jewish doctor, was in charge of the mandatory weekly medical check-ups.⁵

The Degeš work center ceased to function on September 7, 1944, during the initial and very tumultuous period of the Slovak National Uprising (Slovenské národné povstanie, SNP). By means of violence and threats, three gendarmes and five to six members of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) removed the Jews from the camp. It is not clear where the Jews were taken after the camp was dissolved.⁶

SOURCES Information about the ŽPT at Degeš pri Nitre can be found in Marek Danko, “Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej Republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary,” available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/; Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: Archa, 1991); and Gila Fatranová, Boj o prežitie (Bratislava: Múzeum Židovskej Kultúry, 2007).

Unpublished primary sources on the Degeš pri Nitre forced labor camp for Jews can be found in ŠAN and AMNSP. Published primary documents can be found in Eduard Nižňanský and Lucia Kőnőzsyová, eds., “Židovské pracovné stredisko v Degeši,” SHN 10 (2002): 219–236; and Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Simečku, 2004).

Eduard Nižňanský and Vanda Rajcan
Trans. Marianna Kramarikova

NOTES

1. ŠAN, fond Župa nitrianska III, box 568, 1945/I-a/516.
2. ŠAN, fond Župa nitrianska III, box 24, 1132/1942 prez.
3. Ibid.
4. AMNSP, fond IX, S. 152/81.
5. “Pracovné stredisko Židov pri stavbe cesty v Degeši,” February 3, 1943, ŠAN Nitra, fond Župa Nitrianska III, box 568, 1945/Ia/516, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 195–198 (Doc. 97).
6. ŠAN, fond Župa nitrianska III, box 568, 516/1945.

DEVÍNSKA NOVÁ VES

Devínska Nová Ves is located approximately 13 kilometers (8 miles) northwest of Bratislava. Today, it is one of the capital city's suburbs. The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) signed an agreement with the Účastinárske Brickworks and Chemical Companies (Účastinárske tehelne a chemické podniky) in Hodonín, which had its offices in Devínska Nová Ves, on June 25, 1943, to establish a forced labor camp, called a work center for Jews (pracovné stredisko Židov) in that town. The camp opened on July 5, 1943.

The creation of the camp addressed a shortage of unskilled labor. The laborers not only worked in the brickyard but were also responsible for the construction of materials for state venues, including the Slovak National Bank (Slovenská národná banka).¹ Earlier, on May 31, 1943, the National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) had released 840 people from the Sixth Battalion—a battalion composed of Jewish, Roma and so called “asocial” forced laborers. Of these, 490 were moved to various forced labor camps for Jews, including 68 to Devínska Nová Ves.

The number of laborers fluctuated between 60 and 75. All of the workers were males born between 1917 and 1920. Sixty-seven of the forced laborers were labeled as “Israelites,” and four workers had been baptized.²

Very little is known about the living conditions in the camp. Although the MV handled the central management and supervision of all forced labor camps for Jews, the camp commander was responsible for daily maintenance and functioning. The forced laborers were subject to the organizational and behavioral rules governing the forced labor camps for Jews.³ The Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) provided the security in the camp, which was very strict. The MV enlisted the local gendarmes to assist the camp’s security forces, in particular with keeping peace at the camp and preventing desertions.

In addition, the camp commanders ensured that all laborers wore a yellow star in accordance with the Kódex (Židovský Kódex, ŽK). The MV also attempted to address the high desertion rates in the camp by no longer allowing the camp commanders to grant leaves of absence or vacations. Previously, such permits could be secured locally, but the new policy stipulated that only the MV could issue the required documentation.⁴

On July 15, 1943, the Slovak MV created the Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR) to assist the commander and the Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps (Ústredná kancelária pre pracovné tábory Židov) in Bratislava with daily administration of the camp. Karol Zinsenheimer, as head of the Jewish Council, was responsible for administrative and labor-related matters. Jozef Koth II addressed matters of materials and food rations. Ladislav Feldmann responded to health and social issues in the camp. The three-member ŽR conducted its work in accordance with and under the direction of the camp’s commander.⁵

On August 25, 1943, Karol Volár, the camp’s commander, wrote to the MV about the insufficient resources available for his workers and requested 33 pairs of shoes. He noted that the manual labor performed by the laborers in the brickyard was impossible without proper footwear and urged the MV to remedy the situation quickly.⁶

On September 4, 1944, the camp’s commander informed the Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps that 35 men had fled from the forced labor camp in Devínska Nová Ves and 21 remained on site.⁷ On December 15, 1943, the Transportation and Public Works Ministry (Ministerstvo dopravy a verejných prác, MDVP) and Účastinárske tebeľne a chemické podniky firm in Devínska Nová Ves agreed to release 20 to 30 forced laborers to construct Slovak railways. It is unclear when the camp was closed.

SOURCES Secondary sources that describe the Devínska Nová Ves camp are Marek Danko, “Internáčne Zariadenia v Slovenskej Republike (1939–1945) so Zreteľom na pracovné útvary,” available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813; Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: Archa, 1991); and Gila Fatranová, Boj o prežitie (Bratislava: Múzeum Židovskej Kultúry, 2007).

Primary sources about Devínska Nová Ves can be accessed in the SNA, MV collection, boxes 1152, 581, and 393; and USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA collection), in reels 178–181. Published primary sources can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Simečku, 2004).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Správa o židovských pracovných táboroch a strediskách,” October 5, 1943, SNA, fond MV, box 581, file 1818-7/43.
2. “Výročná správa Ministerstva vnútra o židovských pracovných táboroch za rok 1943,” n.d., AMSNP, fond IX, S 152/81, published in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 254–272 (Doc.117).
3. “Správa o židovských pracovných táboroch a strediskách,” October 5, 1943, SNA, fond MV, box 581, 1818-7/43.
4. “Pracovné tábory a strediská židov—zákaz cestovania a udeľovania dovoľení pre príslušníkov táborov a stredísk,” July 29, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 393 D-1041/43.
5. “Pracovné stredisko Židov v Dev. Novej Vsi—židovská rada—zriadenie,” June 15, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 581/1475.
6. “Vráťanie topánok,” August 25, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 393, D1041/43.
7. “Zbehnutie zaradencov, hlásenie,” September 6, 1944, SNA, fond MV, box 581, 1478/44.

DUBNICA NAD VÁHOM/ CONCENTRATION CAMP FOR ROMA

Dubnica nad Váhom (Dubnica), located 120 kilometers (74.5 miles) northeast of Bratislava, was the largest concentration camp for Roma (also referred to as Gypsies, Cigáni) in Slovakia during World War II. It played a key role in the persecution of the Roma in 1944. It was originally a labor camp with five wooden barracks, but when it became a concentration camp, the jurisdiction changed from the Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) to the National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO). The concentration camp for Roma officially opened on November 2, 1944, and the labor camp closed soon thereafter, on November 15.¹

The concentration camp was supposed to begin operation immediately after the work unit (pracovný útvar, PÚ) was liquidated, but the labor camp's closure proved to be difficult. The MNO ordered workers from the "white race," even those interned for their criminal past, to be released immediately and without further questions. The Roma workers were ordered to stay in the camp because detention was no longer based on putative asocial characteristics but on ethnicity. According to the memorandum, "in this camp, Gypsies will be concentrated here without consideration to age."² The labor camp gendarmes staffed the camp until MNO created its own units; part of the gendarmes' responsibility was to create a list of detainees and gather information about them. The detainees were divided by gender and age.³

Conditions for the Roma deteriorated once authority for the camp changed from the MV to the MNO, which was responsible for the provision of food. The barracks from the previous labor camp continued to be used. Some Roma were deployed to build fortifications and bomb shelters in the Piešťany region, whereas others continued working in the hydroelectric plants in Ilava and Dubnica. The number of detainees nearly doubled after the MNO took over: although its capacity was 300, the camp housed 729 Roma in December 1944. Each barrack had 16 rooms that were 5 × 8 meters (16.4 feet × 26 feet) and designed to hold 10 people. However, in December 1944, between 60 and 80 Roma occupied each room. Most slept on the ground on rags because of the shortage of beds and space. They did not have adequate food rations or clothing, and there was a shortage of drinking water. The camp also lacked showers and washrooms.

The extreme overcrowding created catastrophic hygienic and health conditions for the Roma. Within a few weeks, lice and scabies were prevalent. In response, the Roma were shaved and painted with a disinfectant solution. In addition to disease, a difficult winter also adversely affected the prisoners, particularly the children and the elderly. Given that the entire country suffered from a shortage of medical supplies, Wehlhart, the camp physician, had a particularly difficult task in the camp, lacking supplies to cure even the most basic diseases. Many children died of pneumonia, whereas the elderly died from heart attacks and typhus.⁴

A typhus outbreak occurred on December 14, 1944.⁵ The camp was quarantined almost immediately, and Roma deportations to the camp ceased. The typhus outbreak worried many in the surrounding area, Germans and Slovaks alike. The German authorities, fearing an outbreak among the workforce of their vital Škoda ammunition factory in Dubnica, sent a doctor into the camp, who confirmed the unhygienic conditions.⁶ The Germans agreed with Dubnica's mayor, Paskai, who demanded that the MV liquidate the camp or at least move it to a new location. However, the MV refused to finance the quarantine, arguing that because jurisdiction rested with the MNO, it was not in the MV's purview to deal with the situation. Because the measures against the typhus outbreak were insufficient, the disease still raged in the camp a month later, on January 17, 1945.⁷ At least 43 Roma had died of typhus by the middle of February.⁸

Tensions grew within the camp. The prolonged typhus outbreak caused unrest among the Roma. When one of the guards got sick with the disease, other soldiers refused to guard the camp. A few of the Roma took advantage of the situation and fled, which caused panic in Dubnica and its surroundings. The retreating German Army was already in the area, and given their concerns about the fate of the ammunition factory, as well as the weaponry in the area, they temporarily took charge of the camp, deploying troops to quash the unrest.⁹

When the Germans took over the camp from the Slovak military, they murdered all those infected as well as those suspected of being sick. On February 23, 1945, the director of the Dubnica arms factory, Sonnewend, allowed a mass grave to be built in the "Valley" (Údolie) near Dubnica. Despite the German claim that the sick were going to the Trenčín hospital, in reality, the German soldiers drove the trucks with 26 people to Údolie, murdered the prisoners, and dumped the bodies in the mass grave.¹⁰

The quarantine ended on February 24, 1945, and control reverted to the Slovak Army under Stotník Mikuláš Mickovic.¹¹ Although the command changed, the Slovaks were not able to improve camp conditions. The lack of food remained a problem; even though food was available in Ilava, there were no carts to bring the bread to the camp, so hunger prevailed.¹²

When the Germans returned to the camp, Mickovic relinquished command and left with most of the Slovak troops. The Germans wanted to liquidate the camp by shooting the Roma and pressed Poručík Jozef Krkoška for permission to do so on April 6, 1945.¹³ When he refused, they decided to move the camp to Moravia. Suspicious of the Germans' intentions, Krkoška tried to get permission from the civil authorities to liquidate the camp, a request that was quickly denied. He then went directly to the Roma and told them when the Slovak Army was leaving. Many did not even wait for the evacuation and fled immediately, after which the locals came to the camp and looted what they could.¹⁴

Because of the typhus outbreak, Slovak officials wanted to burn the buildings. The retreating German Army solved the problem when soldiers set most of the camp on fire. The construction firms Ing. Lozovský and Štefanec and Ing. Petri, which had originally used inmates of the labor camp, retrieved the remaining materials. The camp was then liquidated.

SOURCES Secondary sources on Dubnica include Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova Univerzita, 1994); Július Tancoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002); Karol Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2010); Karola Fings, Herbert Heuss, and Frank Sparing, eds., In the Shadow of the Swastika: The Gypsies during the Second World War, 3 vols., trans. Donald Kenrick (Hatfield, England: University of Hertfordshire Press, 1999–2006); and Alexander von Plato, Almut Leh, and Christoph Thonfeld, eds., Hitler's Slaves: Life Stories of Forced Labourers in Nazi-Occupied Europe (New York: Berghahn Books, 2010). An estimate on the number of prisoners in Dubnica can be found at www.dubnica.sk/historia/obdobie-ii-svetovej-vojny.

Primary sources include the SNA collection at USHMMA under RG-57.001M, in reels 187, 178, 290–300, 304, 310, and 502. There is also very limited and scattered information in the court records, Ludový Súd, available digitally in USHMMA, collection RG-57.004M. VHA holds one testimony on Dubnica by Petr Weber.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, MH, reel 304, box 43, file 1; USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 310/7/5; SNA, MH, box 69, 10349/1944.

2. ŠABY, f. Trenčianska župa, box 65/17311945, reprinted in Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945, p. 135.

3. AM V SR Levoča, f. E 5, sign 6, reprinted in Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej Republike, pp. 89–90.

4. ŠAPB, f. ONU Dubnica, box 23/591/1945, reprinted in Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945, p. 135.

5. ŠABY, f. Trenčianska župa, box 65/37/1943 prez., reprinted in Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej Republike, pp. 89–90.

6. ŠAPB, f. ONU Dubnica, box 22/7853/1944, reprinted in Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945, p. 137.

7. “Škrvný týf v cigánskom tábore v Dubnici nad Váhom,” January 17, 1945, ŠABY, f. Trenčianska župa, box 65/1731/1945 prez., reprinted in Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej Republike, p. 90.

8. AMV SR Levoča, f. E 5, sign 6, reprinted in ibid., p. 91.

9. ŠABY, f. VD Dubnica, box 15, 4/51-336-1945, reprinted in Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945, p. 138.

10. ŠAPB, f. ONU Dubnica, box 24, 2194/1945, reprinted in ibid., p. 138.

11. VHAT, f. PSS III, box 3, 489/Dov1945, reprinted in Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej Republike, p. 92.

12. Ibid.

13. AMV SR Levoča, f. E 5, sign 6, reprinted in ibid., p. 92.

14. Ibid.

DUBNICA NAD VÁHOM/WORK UNIT

Dubnica nad Váhom (Dubnica), located 120 kilometers (74.5 miles) northeast of Bratislava, was one of the most important work units (pracovný útvar, PÚ) for non-Jews deemed “asocials” (asociáli) in Slovakia during World War II. This category included Roma (referred to as Gypsies, Cigáni) as well as people accused of “avoiding work.”

The Dubnica nad Váhom labor camp was opened by the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) in September 1942, despite the opposition of the municipality as well as of officials of the local Škoda ammunition factory. The decision came about as a result of negotiations between MV and the building company Ing. Lozovský and Štefanec, which was constructing a hydroelectric plant in Dubnica nad Váhom. The PÚ was located at the outskirts of the town, between the railroad and the building site for the plant.

Between September 7 and September 14, 1942, the first 76 workers (zaradenci) were brought to the camp; from there, the number grew quickly. By the end of November 1942, there were already 342 workers in the camp.¹ The highest number was reached in the summer of 1943, when the camp housed

423 inmates (of whom 203 were Roma), but the number declined later and ranged between 203 and 286 in 1944.² According to Slovak historian Karol Janas, about 2,000 people went through the camp during the period of its existence.³

Similarly to other work units for so-called asocials, the work unit in Dubnica nad Váhom was guarded and commanded by gendarmes. While in February 1943 there were 8 gendarmes in the camp, at the turn of June and July 1944 there were 14.⁴ The gendarmerie unit responsible for guarding the camp was armed with rifles and a heavy machine gun.⁵

The living conditions in the camp were poor. The camp’s original capacity of 300 people was exceeded soon after the camp opened. The rooms of the five barracks were not heated and were full of bed bugs and lice. Hard manual work and poor-quality food made imprisonment in the unit very difficult. Inmates (workers) were often beaten by gendarmes, and according to preserved documents, even the official investigation of such incidents was conducted by the MV and military prosecutor in 1943.⁶ Despite various measures taken by the gendarmes as well as the staff of the building company, there were numerous attempts to escape from the camp, and the number of successful escapes was quite significant. According to the report of the District Gendarmerie Commander in Ilava (who was responsible for monitoring the security situation in the camp), in October 14, 1943, the total number of workers registered in the camp was 327, with as many as 50 workers registered as fugitives.⁷

To provide the inmates of the camp with basic medical treatment MV sent the Jewish doctor, Dr. Martoň, to the camp. Dr. Martoň was later relieved of his camp duties, and the regional state doctor from Ilava, Dr. Habaň, began visiting the camp regularly. This was just temporary, because Dr. Habaň was soon drafted into the army and the camp was left without any medical services in December 1943.⁸

In the summer of 1944, there were 260 workers at the unit, working in three shifts. Due to the terrible hygienic conditions, a typhoid epidemic broke out in the camp on June 20, 1944. As a result, one worker died, and several others were sent to the state hospital.⁹

After the beginning of the Slovak National Uprising (Slovenské národné povstanie, SNP) in August 1944 and the occupation of Slovakia, the camp became a concentration camp for Roma. All non-Roma workers were released. In November 1944, jurisdiction changed from the MV to the Ministry of National Defense (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) but the camp continued to operate as a concentration camp for Roma, including women and children.¹⁰

SOURCES Primary sources about this camp are scarce; what there is can be found in SNA, fond MV. Secondary sources about this camp can be found in Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brně, 1994); Ivan Kamenec, “Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovních táborov a stredísk na Slovensku v rokoch 1942–1944,” in Nové obzory č. 8: Spoločenskovedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38;

Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); Karol Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2010); Július Táncoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002); and Marek Danko, “Internáčné zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary” (Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, Košice), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/.

Ján Hlavinka

NOTES

1. Karol Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2010), p. 41.
2. Július Táncoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002), p. 78.
3. Soznam príslušníkov žandárstva zaradených u veliteľstva pracovného útvaru v Dubnici n/V., okres Ilava. SNA, fond MV, box 550, D-119/44.
4. Zápisnica o prehliadke Pracovného útvaru v Dubnici nad Váhom, vykonanej v čase od 30. júna 1944 do 6. júla 1944. SNA, fond MV, box 550, D-1128/1.
5. Pracovné útvary—vyzbrojenie guľometami. SNA, fond MV, box 551, D-1185/1.
6. Vyšetovanie žandárov v pracovných útvaroch. SNA, fond MV, box 551, D-1214/43.
7. Pracovné útvary v okrese Ilava, zpráva o prehliadkach. SNA, fond MV, box 550, 677/1943.
8. SNA, fond MV, box 550, D-1141/3.
9. Zápisnica o prehliadke pracovného útvaru v Dubnici nad Váhom. SNA, fond MV, box 551, 2075/44.
10. Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945), p. 44.

HANUŠOVCE NAD TOPLŤOU

Hanušovce nad Topľou is located 338 kilometers (210 miles) east-northeast of Bratislava. Department 16 of the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV), the office that dealt with the “asocial” question, first proposed the location of the camp on May 26, 1942. Most of the workers in Hanušovce nad Topľou were Roma men between 18 and 50 years old and were assigned to construct a part of the railway between Prešov and Strážske as part of a strategically important project of the Slovak state. The entire railway was more than 61 kilometers (38 miles) long; additional work sites (subcamps) existed in Petič, Bystré, and Nižný Hrabovec. The camp functioned from July 1, 1942, until November 8, 1943.

Some workers were housed in a small castle in Hanušovce; the castle’s capacity was 500 people. In addition, the castle also had rooms for the commander, management staff, a kitchen, and some storage space. Additional housing, consisting of eight wooden barracks, was built 500–2,500 meters (0.3–1.6 miles) from the castle. The barracks soon became infested with rodents and other vermin. The Ing. Lozovský and Štefanec firm was responsible for the provision of all equipment, beds, hay, housing, and food. Every forced laborer was supposed to arrive with a blanket and a food bowl, but that was not always the case. The workers slept either on bare wooden boards, or three people slept together on a straw bed.

The laborers awoke at 6 A.M. and, for the next hour showered, exercised, listened to daily orders and presentations, and ate breakfast. They worked from 7 A.M. until noon, ate lunch, and then worked from 1:30 P.M. until 5 P.M. The workers were subdivided into nine-member groups. The labor unit consisted of three to five of these groups, each of which had its own commander.

The MV determined the number of officers needed at each venue. The camp commander was also the head of the security force of seven gendarmes. This number of security personnel was insufficient for a project stretching 61 kilometers (38 miles), and therefore, the guards could not prevent laborers from escaping. Although physical punishment was officially forbidden, it was an everyday occurrence. Discipline in the camp was strict; infractions could earn laborers up to two weeks in solitary confinement. Given the nature of the work performed, a doctor was supposed to be on site to address medical issues. The hard labor, poor food, and unsatisfactory hygienic environment all contributed to poor health conditions and a very high rate of illness.¹

The forced workers earned very low wages for their labor and had to pay for food, housing, washing of their clothes, equipment rentals, and upkeep of the camp. The overwhelming majority of the workers were underdressed and lacked shoes, so they had to work almost half-naked and shoeless. Food consisted of a little black coffee and a part of a potato for breakfast, potato or beans for lunch, and, for dinner, potatoes and coffee. The rations were insufficient for the physically difficult labor and so greatly limited the workers’ productivity. Of all the labor camps in Slovakia, Hanušovce nad Topľou was reported to have the worst quality food. Conditions did not improve even after the Slovak president Jozef Tiso and Interior Minister Alexander Mach visited the site.

Seven hundred and fifty laborers worked in Hanušovce nad Topľou, of whom 95 percent were Roma. Of the 750 laborers, 90 percent were without underwear, 70 percent lacked shoes, and 50 percent were only partially clothed.² Despite these conditions, the workers met their quotas and completed the road-building project. The camp was closed on November 8, 1943.

SOURCES More information about the Hanušovce nad Topľou camp can be found in Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brně, 1994); Ivan Kameneč, “Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovných táborov a stredísk na Slovensku v rokoch 1942–1944,” in Nové obzory č. 8: Spoločenskovedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38; Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); and Július Táncoš, and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002).

Primary sources about Hanušovce nad Topľou can be found in SNA, folders 549–551, at USHMMA in RG-57.001M (SNA), reels 185–191. Published documents on MV can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. SNA, fond MV, odd 16, 1942, D-1102/42.
2. SNA, fond MV, odd 16, 1942, D-7369/42.

HIADEL'

The village of Hiadel' is located in the Banská Bystrica region of Slovakia, approximately 179 kilometers (111 miles) northeast of Bratislava. This area, which had belonged to Austria-Hungary, was formally ceded to Czechoslovakia with the 1920 Treaty of Trianon. Scarce evidence suggests that in 1941, Department 14 of the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV), which dealt with the "Jewish Question," created a work camp for Jews in Hiadel'. The Work Center in Hiadel' (Pracovné stredisko) was one of the first labor camps for Jews created by the Slovak Interior Ministry for a specific construction project and company. This labor camp was established based on the agreement between the MV and the Directorate of State Forests and Properties in Banská Bystrica (Riaditeľstvo štátnych lesov a majetkov v Banskej Bystrici). The task of Jewish workers detained in Hiadel' was to build the road from Hiadel' to Prašivá peak in the Low Tatras mountain range. All costs related to the opening and upkeep of the camp were covered by the MV.¹ Survivor testimony and other documentation suggest that Jewish forced laborers were registered at Hiadel' as early as July 1941.²

Survivor Alex Hochhäuser, who was born in 1912 to a Jewish family in Breslau, completed a brief period of forced labor in Hiadel' after his transfer from a forced labor camp in Žilina. At Hiadel', Hochhäuser and approximately 500 young Jewish men initially lived in tents while they built the barracks. The men completed various heavy labor projects, including forest clearing, road construction, and excavation. Hochhäuser, who was a physical education teacher by training, organized regular group exercises for the inmates to help them build their stamina and strength. He remembered that conditions in the camp were difficult. However, the guards became friendlier and more permissive as time wore on. According to him, the labor camp at Hiadel' closed after the ground froze in the fall and earthwork had to be suspended. Hochhäuser was then transferred to the Nováky forced labor camp.³

The fate of the other inmates is not clear, but according to the Central Name Index (CNI) of the International Tracing Service (ITS), other Hiadel' inmates were dispatched to the Slovak-run camps at Svätý Jur and Sered'.⁴

There is a possibility that the Hiadel' labor camp reopened in 1942.⁵

SOURCES For secondary information on the Hiadel' labor camp, see Ivan Kamenec, On the Trail of Tragedy: The Holocaust in Slovakia, trans. Martin Styan (Bratislava: H&H, 2007).

Primary documentation can be found in Slovak National Archives, fond MV, box 411 as well as the following collections of USHMMA: three VHA testimonies are indexed for Hiadel', including the testimony of former forced laborer Alex Hochhäuser, April 19, 1996 (#13716); see also Gertrud Friedman, August 25, 1995 (#4355) and Itzhac Stern-Shavit, February 12, 1997 (#25783). The CNI of the ITS contains inquiries about several, mostly Jewish, camp inmates registered at Hiadel'. These cards suggest that forced laborers were stationed here in 1941 and possibly in 1942. The cards are available in digital form at USHMMA.

Alexandra Lohse, Ján Hlavinka

NOTES

1. Výkaz hospodárenia "Fondu pre podporu vyst'ahovania Židov," SNA, fond MV, box 411, 1498/1943, 200/375/19.
2. ITS, 0.1, CNI cards for Alexander Hochhäuser, Doc. No. 52034702; and Bartholomew Klug, Doc. No. 53204970.
3. VHA #13716, Alex Hochhäuser testimony, April 19, 1996.
4. ITS, 0.1, CNI cards for Salomon Schmucl Tibor Givoni, Doc. 52857977; and Adolf Allen Elefant, Doc. No. 52670226.
5. ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Larry Alter, Doc. No. 52830111.

ILAVA/DETENTION CENTER

The sixteenth-century castle in the town of Ilava, located 126 kilometers (78 miles) northeast of Bratislava, was historically used as a jail and began to be used as a detention facility in October 1938. On March 24, 1939, the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) issued an order "concerning the imprisonment of the enemies of the Slovak State." It authorized the Interior Minister to "arrange for the jailing of persons whose past and present activities give reason to fear that they would continue to obstruct the building of the Slovak State."¹ Ilava prison became the detention site for Slovak democrats—authors, priests, teachers, journalists, and statesmen—as well as simple farmers, workmen, students, and delinquents.

The penal camp in Ilava (Zaisťovací tábor v Ilave, ZTI) became a symbol of lawlessness, state control, and the suspension of civil rights. The camp's goal was to reeducate and reform the individual. The state security regime actively persecuted political opponents, followers of democratic ideals, and people who could not prove their "Aryan" descent. Individuals were imprisoned in Ilava for numerous reasons, including participating in banned parties, publicizing or spreading inflammatory news, insulting the head of state, overcharging for goods, poaching, and assisting "non-Aryans."²

The camp's first phase, when it was under Slovak control, lasted from April 29, 1939, to September 1, 1944. During the second phase, mobile German security forces controlled Ilava from September 8, 1944, until Ilava's liberation by the Red Army on April 29, 1945. When the camp was under German control, conditions worsened dramatically.³

The jail comprised 190 cells, 2 of which were converted to closets (one for bread and one for prisoners' valuables). Each cell was originally designed to hold only one prisoner, but both the Slovak police and German authorities ignored spatial constraints and often placed two prisoners in each cell. Prisoners slept in the damp and dirty cells on straw mattresses and pillows. Lice, fleas, and other vermin were “part of the punishment.”⁴

The prisoners were banned from speaking to each other; harsher punishments, including solitary confinement and a ban on walks, were imposed on those who were caught even whispering. Prisoners were allowed to walk twice a day, eight paces between one another. Walks were supposed to be for one hour in the morning and one hour in the afternoon, but their duration was at the guards’ discretion. The local priest from Ilava or Púchov arrived every Saturday to celebrate Mass, despite the presence of numerous jailed clergymen. Afterward, the prisoners returned to wash the floors and walls in the blocks. Cleaning time occurred when the prisoners were allowed to leave their cells to throw out the dirty water in the washrooms and replace it with clean water.⁵

Breakfast consisted of a half-loaf of black bread split in three. One hour later, the prisoners were given two deciliters (6.75 ounces) of black coffee in unwashed mugs. The prisoners barely drank the coffee before the porter returned to retrieve the mugs for use by prisoners on other floors. The cell doors were opened after breakfast; every prisoner then emptied their waste buckets.

When the camp became overcrowded, only the strongest and healthiest were selected for work; the others remained in their cells. The “privilege” of leaving the cell and permission to send one letter per month were given only after a prisoner had spent a month in jail. Prisoners welcomed the chance to work outside because doing so also meant receiving increased food rations at the city hall or the priest’s house.⁶

The detainees were imprisoned without due process. Many communists (and those from other groups) were imprisoned based on denunciations or following arrests by state and local police officers. The State Security Headquarters (Ústredňa štátnej bezpečnosti, ÚŠB) imprisoned more than 500 former communists and communist sympathizers when the war against the Soviet Union began in June 1941.⁷ After the start of deportations in March 1942 targeting Slovak Jews, “Aryans” were imprisoned if they were deemed guilty of helping Jews cross borders or obtain false documents or if they were caught housing Jews. Many Catholic as well as Protestant and Orthodox priests were also imprisoned for baptizing Jews, particularly children, and failing to stop doing so after being warned by the police.⁸

Jews were imprisoned separately, and their punishment was more severe than that meted out to the political prisoners. Poručík Kokavec, on his own initiative, beat every Jew during their interrogations; he was later replaced as the commander by Pospíšil and the gendarmes Jerge and Faško. In 1941 and 1942, in addition to the sentences given according to prison rules, Jews were also subjected to physical punishment and beatings; dehumanization; bullying and torture during interrogations; bans on walks, correspondence, and food; and solitary confinement in a dark basement. When one person escaped the camp during a local labor assignment, the entire camp was collectively punished by being denied daily walks for between 10 and 14 days. A torture chamber existed in the church, and screams were frequently heard throughout the jail. This harsh treatment of prisoners continued under the tenure of Pospíšil and the gendarmes Jerge and Faško, whom the prisoners nicknamed “guardian angels” (“strážny anjeli”).⁹ In late 1943, when it became apparent that Nazi Germany was losing the war, Pospíšil allowed prisoners to receive packages from their families. However, when the packages arrived, he looted them first, after which the guards got a turn, and the prisoners received what was left.¹⁰

Beginning on February 14, 1944, people could be incarcerated only with written documentation from the MV, which was given on the recommendation of a three-member committee. This Bratislava-based commission also recommended whether people should be imprisoned or released in Ilava. The members of the commission were nominated by the ruling party; the only stipulation was that at least two of the members needed to possess law degrees. On May 27, 1944, the Hlinka Slovak People’s Party (Hlinkova slovenská ľudová strana, HSĽS) nominated Dr. Peter Starinský, Dr. Štefan Lucký, and Štefan Král to the commission. The commission served as Prime Minister Alexander Mach’s advisory council, and in most cases the Interior Minister followed its recommendations.¹¹

Conditions improved as the Red Army advanced. At times, the guards left cell doors open so prisoners could visit with friends. Some guards even illegally brought in newspapers or allowed prisoners to send correspondence home. Increased possibilities for communication led to the escape of some of the prisoners on September 1, 1944: when the cell doors opened for the morning walk, the prisoners coordinated a mass escape. By the time the German authorities were mobilized, it was too late.¹²

The ZTI’s second phase began when mobile German SS units arrived in Ilava on September 8, 1944. Although the Slovaks still retained some authority over the camp, the Germans assumed primary control. The German SS took advantage of the camp’s location (outside the partisan-controlled territories and close to the border) to accomplish two primary tasks: the concentration of prisoners and liquidation of the camp.¹³ Many escaped prisoners were recaptured and later deported to concentration camps.

Conditions worsened under German control. As indicated in later court testimony, “there are over 700 people in the concentration camp; there are not enough blankets and the reeducation center will not have enough food to feed them. The conditions are completely desolate, which does not even begin to describe it. It is crucial to fix the situation as soon as possible. Also, some of the newly imprisoned have lice.”¹⁴ Overcrowding led to a shortage of beds, and many slept on the bare ground without blankets.

Between December 1938 and August 1944, more than 3,000 people went through the camp—some for days, weeks, months, or even years.¹⁵ Among them were the famous humorist Elo Šándor, author Ján Gál Podd'umbierský, senators, actresses, and religious leaders. The camp was liberated on April 29, 1945.

SOURCES Secondary sources that mention the Ilava prison include Jozef Vicen, "K problematike Zaisťovacieho tábora v Ilave v rokoch 1939–1945," in Slovenská republika 1939–1945 očami mladých historikov IV. Zborník (Banská Bystrica: UPN, 2005); Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Simečku, 2004); Jozef Lettrich, History of Modern Slovakia (New York: Praeger, 1955); Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: Archa, 1991); Waclaw Długoborski, The Tragedy of the Jews of Slovakia: 1938–1945: Slovakia and the "Final Solution of the Jewish Question" (Oświęcim: Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum, 2002); Anton Spiesz, Dušan Čaplovič, and Ladislaus J. Bolchazy, Illustrated Slovak History: A Struggle for Sovereignty in Central Europe (Mundelein: Bolchazy-Carducci Publishers, 2004); and Jan Karel Coetzee, Lynda Gilfillan, and Otakar Hulec, Fallen Walls: Prisoners of Conscience in South Africa and Czechoslovakia (New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Publishers, 2004).

Primary sources on the Ilava camp can be found in SNA, with copies on microfilm at USHMMA, RG-57.001M. This collection holds files on individual prisoners as well as MV correspondence about perceived political enemies. Dr. Peter Starinský's trial records are available at USHMMA in the RG-57.004M (Serphos) collection, reels 5–8. VHA includes seven Ilava testimonies. Two published testimonies are Ján Gál Podd'umbierský, Z Kalicha utrpenia: Rozpomienky na zážitky v koncentračnom tábore v Ilave (Komárno: Pravda, 1947); and Elo Šándor, Ilava: Zážitky z policajného lapáku a z koncentračného tábora z čias, keď sa rodila naša sloboda (Prague: Naklatelství, 1947). The Czechoslovak National Council of America published several accounts of survivors of Ilava.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. SNA, fond PR, box 741, 443/26-2486, 154-13/12-34/43, February 14, 1944; Slovenský zákonník, March 24, 1939.

2. "Dodávanie Osôb do Zaisťovacieho Tábora v Ilave," Dr. Peter Starinský trial, USHMMA, RG-57.004 (Serphos collection), reel 6, pp. 80–82 (USHMMA, RG-57.004/6); SNA, fond Národný súd, A-872, TN lud 49/45.

3. AM SNP Banská Bystrica, fond XII, box 15, pri. No. S 38/89.

4. Podd'umbiersky, Z kalicha utrpenia, p. 111; Pravda, October 5, 1944.

5. Podd'umbiersky, Z kalicha utrpenia, pp. 111–113.

6. Ibid.

7. Dr. Peter Starinský trial, USHMMA, RG-57.004/7, pp. 121–125; SNA, fond Národný súd, A-872, TN lud 49/45.

8. Zaisťovací Tábor-Ilava, April 21, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 116, box 411, file 2.

9. As quoted in Kamenec, Organizácia perzekučného systému fašistickeho Slovenského štátu, p. 76.

10. Podd'umbiersky, Z kalicha utrpenia, p. 135.

11. Dr. Peter Starinský trial, USHMMA, RG-57.004/5, pp. 56–58, 64; SNA, fond Národný súd, A-872, TN lud 49/45, Starinský, No. 295-os/44.

12. Podd'umbiersky, Z kalicha utrpenia, 136.

13. ŠAPB, fond OU Ilava, box 13, oz spisu 2137/45.

14. Dr. Peter Starinský trial, USHMMA, RG-57.004/5, pp. 85–90.

15. Podd'umbiersky, Z kalicha utrpenia, Appendix A.

ILAVA/WORK CENTER FOR JEWS

This Work Center for Jews (pracovné stredisko) was located near the city of Ilava, 126 kilometers (78 miles) northeast of Bratislava, where the Slovak Construction Consortium (Slovenská Konštruktíva) built a hydroelectric plant on the Váh River.¹ The consortium consisted of the firms Konštruktíva, Engineer (Inžinier, Ing.) Freýer, Ing. Kruliš, and Ing. Dohnányi.

The first small group of Jews was sent to the building site of the Ilava hydroelectric plant on June 18, 1942, and the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) was assigned to guard them.² Jews were held in a small, fenced labor camp that consisted of three buildings. The first building was a barrack for Jewish workers, the second building held a kitchen and a canteen, and the third building consisted of a warehouse, a woodshed, one guard room, and two rooms for the accommodation of the HG.³

In January 1943, Ľudovít Zurian, originally from Banská Štiavnica, commanded the camp. Four additional HG members served as guards. On January 28, 1943, there were a total of 56 people in the camp, of whom 51 worked at the building site and 5 in the kitchen. The work lasted from seven to nine hours daily, and Jews worked on the same building projects as Roma and other people deemed "asocials" from the labor camp—the so-called work unit—in Ilava.⁴

On January 25, 1943, the building consortium petitioned the MV to declare this camp an official labor camp for Jews. The MV officially created the Work Center (pracovné stredisko) for Jews in Ilava on March 2, 1943, and declared it to be a "separate, closed unit" for Jews that would follow the same regulations as Jewish labor camps in Nováky, Sereď, and Vyhne.⁵ The local commander of the HG then became the commander of the work center in Ilava and served in that position throughout 1943.⁶ It is also evident that the card files for the workers were created only in late March 1943.⁷ On March 30, 1943, two of the four HG guards were reassigned, leaving the camp with "only two guardsmen."⁸

In March 1943, there were still 56 workers in the work center; they had originally lived in Bratislava, Trenčín, Nitra, Štubnianske Teplice, Humenné, Prešov, and other places. In July 1943, there were 69 workers, and by the end of the year the number rose to 71.⁹ During this time, the Ministry of Interior assigned a special role to the Work Center for Jews in Ilava: as a place for Jews from other labor camps who were married to non-Jews, as well as baptized inmates.¹⁰ Therefore, at the end of 1943, as many as 57 of the 71 workers living at the center were registered as “baptized,” 4 were declared as having no religion, and 10 were registered as “Israelites.”¹¹

There is no information available about the living conditions or treatment of the workers in the work center. The center’s history beyond 1943 and the date of its closing are also unknown.

The project that the Jews from the Ilava work center helped to build was only completed on December 21, 1944.¹² The completed work did not stand for very long, however, as the retreating German Army blew up most of the bridges across the Váh River and the canal of the hydroelectric plant.

SOURCES Primary sources on the Ilava work center can be found in SNA, fond MV, boxes 394, 419. Additional information is available in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004).

Ján Hlavinka

NOTES

1. “Hydrocentrála v Ilave a Dubnici. Nedostatok robotníctva, Barakové tábory,” August 31, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 37, box 242, file 9000 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/37/242/9000).

2. Doc. 14-1105-3/43. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

3. Plan of the camp. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

4. Soznam dozorných orgánov v pracovnom stredisku Židov v Ilave. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

5. Zriadenie pracovného strediska Židov v Ilave. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

6. Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5.

7. Kartotéková evidencia Židov—robotníkov zaradených do pracovného strediska v Ilave. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

8. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

9. Ibid.

10. Pracovné tábory a strediská Židov—správa o stave, organizačnej a pracovnej štruktúre. SNA, fond MV, box 419, 1818, 43.

11. SNA, fond MV, box 394, D-2-14-10636/42.

12. “Ilava, pracovný útvar,” n.d., ŠABY, f. VD Ilava, box 15/4/489-3525-1943, reprinted in Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008), p. 82.

ILAVA/WORK UNIT

The Ilava work unit was located just north of the city of Ilava, 126 kilometers (78 miles) northeast of Bratislava. The Ministry of Transportation and Public Works (Ministerstvo dopravy a verejných prác, MDVP) awarded the Slovak Construction Consortium (Slovenská Konštruktíva) a government contract to build a hydroelectric plant in Ilava on the Váh River.¹ The Slovenská Konštruktíva consisted of the firms Konštruktíva,

Engineer (Inžinier, Ing.) Freýer; Ing. Kruliš, and Ing. Dohnányi. The project suffered from labor shortages, so the companies asked the Slovak regime to establish a work unit (pracovný útvar, PÚ) at the end of 1942 for Roma (“Gypsies”) and other “asocials.” Because the firms were already able to provide housing for 240 workers, and it was not possible to work on this project in the winter, the government granted the consortium’s request in the spring of 1943. The work unit opened on March 22, 1943.²

The Ilava PÚ for Roma and other asocials was fenced in and located just above the waterway project.³ The inmates were males ages 18 to 45 who were capable of performing hard labor, particularly excavation. Their task was to finish the canals’ foundation, build canals on the river, and then erect a hydroelectric plant.

The gendarmerie (Žandárstvo) provided security. The commander, gendarmerie officer Štefan Ďurný, and nine subordinates guarded the work unit. Most were from the Orava region and were notorious for being brutal to the inmates. They did not allow the workers to go anywhere unescorted.

The two officials responsible for camp logistics were Pavol Makúch and Jozef Šimko. The latter spent two weeks in training at Dubnica in February 1943 before reporting to Ilava.⁴

The housing in Ilava was insufficient, and as numerous monitoring reports suggested, it was infested with vermin.⁵ Despite these shortcomings, the forced laborers had to pay 50 Slovak cents (1 US cent) per day for housing. Ten days after the camp opened, the firms reported to MV the need for more workers and six additional barracks were built to house them. The newly erected barracks contained planks with some hay, as well as pillows and blankets. The guards were housed in bigger barracks that also contained space for offices, storage, a shoemaker, and a tailor. The camp was fenced in, and a new administration building was built. Because the Bystré camp was closed around that time, its supplies and materials were moved to Ilava. One hundred and sixty inmates were moved from Bystré to Ilava on June 23, 1943. A new barrack was built for them, and it was finished the day they arrived in camp.⁶

Securing food for the forced laborers was problematic; the amount of the rations was not only inadequate but often the food arrived late. The first food shortage occurred shortly after the camp opened on March 24, 1943. The camp lacked potatoes, and both the camp commander and the Ilava district officer were unable to secure them. The MV sent 15 truckloads of goods to the area, but they were not labeled for the Ilava work unit and so were delivered elsewhere.⁷ The situation did not improve much in the following months, and the daily ration was lowered to 20 decagrams (7.05 ounces) per person. The camp inmates did not receive dairy products and other fats, so the employers had to provide them. The firms’ other workers resented this state of affairs, because the reallocation of foodstuffs came at the expense of their rations. The consortium asked MV to provide compensation for unanticipated expenses or at least to increase the rations, but the request was denied.⁸

Hunger and other difficult living conditions, including a lack of basic hygiene, worsened the prisoners' health.⁹ The state district physician, Dr. Križanová-Pivková, performed her camp physician duties solely as part of her wider responsibility, so she spent very little time on meeting the prisoners' health care needs. When Dr. Tomaschoff arrived on May 17, 1943, he built an infirmary within a month. The infirmary was so good that other PÚs sent their patients to him.

The Ilava work unit also experienced a financial scandal. The Ing. Petri and Ing. Danisovič firms awarded themselves unmerited bonuses and skimmed money. They were later investigated for these financial irregularities.¹⁰

The working hours were from 6:15 A.M. to 6:30 P.M. in summer and 7:15 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. in winter, including a 90-minute lunch break.¹¹ The forced laborers earned 3.75 Slovak crowns (Ks) per hour and a 1-Ks bonus per hour in the winter. In inclement weather, the forced laborers earned 10 Ks per day. Most of the inmates did not have sufficient supplies or clothing for the required labor. When the camp commander asked the MV for clothing and shoes, it sent 150 pairs of shoes and 500 pairs of undergarments on May 17, 1943. Despite the shipment, the inmates still lacked proper winter attire, which proved problematic during the fall of 1943. In addition, those who received the shoes lacked socks. The situation was further complicated by insufficient storage space for supplies.

Despite the obstacles, the PÚ was very productive, and the number of inmates regularly increased in 1943. Five hundred forced laborers were in Ilava at the end of June 1943. Approximately 1,000 persons went through the camp; the numbers peaked in the summer.

At Ilava, the release of inmates occurred infrequently: only 65 persons were released in the first four months, mostly for health reasons. The work groups operated along stretches 8 kilometers (4.7 miles) long, to which only one HG guard was assigned, which afforded many opportunities for escape. By July 31, 1943, 52 prisoners took advantage of inadequate fencing and security to escape, of whom 35 were later recaptured and returned to the camp. A new group of "asocial" forced laborers was formed from the recaptured escapees. They worked under the supervision of two HG guards, were housed separately from the other workers, and could go outside their barracks at night only in their nightshirts and under the room commander's supervision. These additional security measures drastically decreased the number of escapes.

The work was very difficult. Yet, despite not having sufficient tools or clothing, the Roma were classified as obedient and hard workers. Regardless of the harsh conditions, they continued with the work and, along with other inmates, achieved almost the impossible—both canals were built within a year, reinforced, and ready for finishing work. Although the MV wanted to close the camp before the winter of 1943, the project was only completed on December 21, 1944.¹² The completed work did not stand for very long, as the retreating German Army blew up most of the bridges built across the Váh River and the canal of the hydroelectric plant.

SOURCES Secondary sources about the Ilava work unit can be found in Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovensští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brně, 1994); Ivan Kamenec, "Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovních táborů a středisk na Slovensku v letech 1942–1944," in Nové obzory č. 8: Spoločenskovedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38; Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); Július Táncoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002); and Marek Danko, "Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary" (Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, Košice), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/.

Primary sources on the Ilava work unit can be found at SNA, available at USHMMA as RG-57.001M. The records are scattered; however, most documents can be found in reels 37, 114, 116, 178, and 187. Additional documents can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holo-kaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA contains seven testimonies with references to Ilava.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. "Hydrocentrála v Ilave a Dubnici. Nedostatok robotníctva, Barakové tábory," August 31, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 37, box 242, file 9000 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/37/242/9000).
2. Ibid.
3. "Pracovný útvar Ilava," n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M/178/551/2.
4. ŠABY, f. Trenčianska župa, box 65/37/1943.
5. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/37/242/9000.
6. Ibid.
7. "Pracovné stredisko Ilava," n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M/187/575/11, SNA, fond MV, 2441/1106/1944.
8. "Ilava," n.d., SNA, fond MV, 2441/D-1043/1944, reprinted in Janas, Zabudnuté tábory, pp. 81–82.
9. AMV SR Levoča, f. E 5, sign 6, reprinted in ibid., pp. 81–82.
10. ŠABY, f. VD Ilava, box 14, 5/2020/1943.
11. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/37/242/9000.
12. "Ilava, pracovný útvar," n.d., ŠABY, f. VD Ilava, box 15/4/489-3525-1943, reprinted in Janas, Zabudnuté tábory, p. 82.

IVÁNKA PRI DUNAJI

Ivánka pri Dunaji is located almost 13 kilometers (8 miles) northeast of Bratislava. The Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative (Slovenské dolnomoravské vodné družstvo, Moravod) in Malacky signed an agreement with the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) to create a labor camp, called a Work Center (pracovné stredisko) to address a labor shortage for one of the firm's projects. On December 12, 1941, 26 Jews were arrested and escorted to the labor camp, where they were forced to dig dikes and construct the canal in Ivánka pri Dunaji.¹ The laborers traveled by bus, which was paid for by the Jewish Center (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ).²

Not much is known about the daily lives of the forced laborers. The Jews lived in military barracks and ate in the communal kitchen. The Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) was responsible for camp security, along with the camp commander. The camp was under the same strict rules and regulations as the forced labor camps for Jews at Nováky, Sered', and Vyhne. On February 10, 1942, 10 Jews were released from the PÚ on a doctor's recommendation, who assessed them as being unable to perform physically intensive labor.³

At the end of 1943, 66 male laborers worked in Ivánka pri Dunaji. All but one were single. Forty-seven of the workers were classified as "Israelites," and 19 were baptized. In total, they worked 83,176 hours for 480,649.13 Slovak crowns (Ks).⁴

On January 4, 1944, the Šúrskej Basin State Building Office requested eight Jewish forced laborers, all men born between 1919 and 1921, for the damming of mountain streams near Ivánka pri Dunaji. The project suffered from a lack of technical experts, and the additional laborers were required for the completion of their project. Two days later, the MV denied the request, because the men were "fully utilized in the labor force."⁵

It is not clear when the camp was closed.

SOURCES Primary sources documenting the Ivánka pri Dunaji forced labor camp for Jews can be found in SNA, fond MV, boxes 178 and 392. This documentation is available at USHMMA as RG-57.001M. Selected documents about the camp can also be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. "Židia, zaradení do pracovného strediska," February 10, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 178, box 11, folder 342.
2. "Soznam robotníkov židov," December 12, 1941, SNA, fond MV, box 178, folder 104/42.
3. "Ivánka pri Dunaji, pracov. stredisko, zoznam eskortovaných Židov do práce," February 10, 1942, SNA, fond MV, box 178, folder 106/42.
4. "Výročná správa Ministerstva vnútra o židovských pracovných táboroch za rok 1943," n.d., reproduced in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 254–272 (Doc. 117).
5. "Ivánka pri Dunaji, o prepustenie Židov z prac. stred. a prikázanie do prac.," January 4, 1944, SNA, fond MV, box 392, folder 1013/44.

JABLONICA

Jablonica (Bratislava District) is located approximately 32 kilometers (20 miles) northeast of Bratislava. On August 19, 1944, the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) ordered the commander of Kostolná to transfer its forced laborers to the newly created forced labor camp for Jews at Jablonica. The forced laborers were responsible for the second phase of rail construction between Jablonica and Plavecký Svätý Mikuláš (located approximately 31 kilometers [19 miles] north of Bratislava), a segment of a rail line that was almost 23 kilometers (14 miles) in length.

After the Bratislava Construction Company (Bratislavská stavebná spoločnosť) signed an agreement with the MV, the camp was created on August 16, 1944, only days before the Slovak National Uprising (Slovenské národné povstanie, SNP). Of the 87 people assigned to Jablonica, 8 were sick, so only 79 were able to work. A member of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG), Valenta, liquidated the camp on September 5, 1944. The prisoners fled quickly, most of them leaving their belongings behind in the barracks. The property was listed with the local police station in Cirova. The command at the police took possession of these items, as well as the keys to the barracks and storage facilities.¹

SOURCE A primary source documenting the Jablonica camp can be found in SNA, fond MV.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTE

1. Prevedenie odsunu, August 19, 1944, SNA, fond MV, box 581, file 1441/44.

JARABÁ

A forced labor camp, called a work unit (pracovný útvar, PÚ), for Roma (also referred to as Gypsies, Cigáni) and people deemed "asocials," was established in Jarabá, a central Slovak village located 207 kilometers (129 miles) northeast of Bratislava. In June 1942, the Ladislav Hits engineering company petitioned the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) to create a labor camp for "asocials" in Jarabá, the workers to be deployed in the construction of an 18.4-kilometer (11.4-mile) state road through the mountain pass from Čertovica to Mýto pod Dumbierom.

The housing in Jarabá consisted of three old wooden barracks built on cement foundations on the slope of the Čertovica Mountain, just north of Jarabá village. Each barrack housed up to 100 people, but the camp never reached full capacity. The barracks included wooden boards and some straw for bedding, and the company charged each forced laborer 0.50 Slovak crowns (Ks) for accommodations.

Although the forced laborers were paid a meager sum, they had to pay not only for their accommodations but also for their food and the tools used on the road project. The company purchased bowls and spoons and brought them to the PÚ, but the forced laborers paid fees for their use. The camp commander ensured that there was a washing machine near the PÚ, but the inmates had to pay to have their few clothes washed. Because some forced laborers did not earn enough money to cover their housing and food costs, the company expected the rest of the laborers to make up the difference.

Starting on July 3, 1942, six gendarmes guarded the camp.¹ Shortly thereafter, two transports of workers arrived in Jarabá: 25 forced laborers arrived on August 9, and 48 more on August 18, 1942. Problems arose for the camp commander immediately after the arrival of the first group, because the forced laborers only had the clothes on their backs, which were insufficient for the mountainous terrain and climate. Many were shoeless, some had lice, and others were too sick to work. Moreover, the PÚ did not have food for the newly arrived forced laborers or for upcoming transports.

The camp commander immediately wrote to MV asking for more clothing and shoes, citing the weather conditions, and requested additional food rations. More than 73 workers were sick and still performed manual labor. The barracks were missing utensils, beds, furniture, and heaters.

The camp was also located far from the work site: the workers had to travel 6 to 9 kilometers (3.72 to 5.6 miles) to the site each day on taxing treks over rocky terrain. For the shoeless, this ordeal was very painful, and those who had shoes quickly wore them out.

Members of the second transport, just as those in the first one, lacked sufficient clothing, had lice, and some were even very sick. Six people were released because they were not able to work at all. Constant food shortages forced the camp commander to inform the MV and the Ladislav Hits engineering company once again that half the people were starving. Forced laborers in the third transport also arrived without adequate clothing, shoes, and blankets; they slept on hay in the extreme cold. Altogether, the living conditions in the Jarabá camp significantly hindered productivity and jeopardized the forced laborers' health.

Reveille was at 4 A.M. and curfew at 9 P.M. The camp commander repeatedly requested healthy laborers—not those with contagious diseases, such as scabies, or long-term illnesses, such as lupus—be sent to the camp. There was a medical doctor assigned to the PÚ from the village of Jarabá, but he did not make a single visit to the camp. The camp commander was worried that disease would spread among workers and, more importantly, the gendarmes.

Because of disease, inability to work, and escapes, the number of workers decreased to 38, leading the Ladislav Hits engineering company to request 50 more able-bodied workers from the MV on September 9, 1942. The MV agreed and sent more forced laborers from the Bánovce nad Bebravou, Prievidza, and Topoľčany districts.

The district offices continued to ask MV for more forced laborers, because many of Jarabá's inmates were sick and in need of hospitalization. The camp was liquidated on November 21, 1942. Most of the forced laborers were released to their residences, and it is unclear how much of the road-building project was ever completed.

SOURCES Very little is written about the Jarabá camp. Brief mentions can be found in Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brne, 1994); Ivan Kamenec, “Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovních táborů a středisk na Slovensku v letech 1942–1944,” in Nové obzory č. 8. Spoločenskovedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38; Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory: (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); and Július Tancoš and René Lužica Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002). It is also mentioned in www.multikulti.sk/dok/kapitola-3.pdf.

Primary documents can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), particularly in reels 176–180.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTE

1. “Zápisnica,” July 25, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 176, box 547, file 18.

KOSTOLNÁ

Kostolná (also referred to in some sources as Kostolná pri Trenčíne) is located 104 kilometers (64 miles) northeast of Bratislava. On January 17, 1944, the Tatra construction company in Bratislava and the Tatranská construction company in Poprad requested that the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) establish a forced labor camp for Jews near Kostolná.¹ The agreement was finalized between the MV Department 14, which oversaw the “Jewish Question” in Slovakia, and the firms on February 3, 1944.

The labor camp, also referred to as a work center (pracovné stredisko), was located just outside the village, but its inmates had no contact with the town's residents.² The workers were responsible for constructing the canal and other waterway projects on the Váh River near Kostolná. Many of the forced laborers arrived from work centers at Svätý Jur, Láb, and Zohor. The number of laborers fluctuated between 100 and 200.³ On February 3, 1944, the camp commander wrote to the MV regarding the adverse effect that inclement weather was having on his forced laborers. With the worsening of the weather over the previous several months, at least 10 people were unable to work, and 12 more were in the hospital. He also noted that one forced laborer was in a prison in Bratislava.⁴

The construction companies were responsible for building the isolated barracks as well as washrooms, toilets, a kitchen, a communal dining room, a dispensary, storage space, offices for the commander and the Jewish Council, and housing for the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG). The laborers slept on hay pallets and were responsible for the work center's upkeep. The companies provided work supplies; if something was damaged, either the worker had to pay for the machinery or the center had to provide alternative supplies. The communal kitchen functioned at camp expense; fees for food were deducted from forced laborers' salaries every two weeks.⁵

Jewish laborers (Židia-robotníci) were paid 2.50 Slovak crowns (Ks) per day and received this payment every two weeks.⁶ Because they were not covered under national health insurance, each worker had to pay for his health care, or else the entire camp forced labor population had to cover that cost. In emergency situations, the forced laborers were transported to the Jewish hospital in Sered'.

The camp followed all the rules set out by the MV for forced labor camps for Jews and was under military discipline. The number of inmates fluctuated only with the MV's written consent. The forced laborers were guarded by three members of the HG and their commander Jozef Kotlárík. The single guards were paid 50 Ks per day and the married ones 70 Ks per day. The camp commander received 400 Ks more per month than the guards. According to the MV agreement, the company was required to reimburse the center for any security- and disciplinary-related expenses. The members of the HG attended anti-Jewish presentations that dealt with the treatment of Jews. A number of the guards drank heavily and disclosed privileged information to the camp laborers.⁷

The camp's Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR), consisting of three members, was created by the MV on March 24, 1943. Ján Engel was its head, Ladislav Müller dealt with labor and social matters, and Oskar Löwy oversaw medical and health concerns. These men were forced to serve on the ŽR, functioning as an advisory council for the camp commander, as well as the Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps (Ústredná kancelária pre pracovné tábory Židov) in Bratislava.⁸

In July 1944, the Ministry of Transportation and Public Works (Ministerstvo dopravy a verejných prác, MDVP) requested the transfer of 50 workers to the Dubnica nad Váhom labor camp. This group was transported by the HG at the new employer's expense and then isolated from the non-Jewish workers already working at Dubnica. The rest of the workers were transferred to the Jablonica forced labor camp on August 3, 1944.⁹ On August 19, 1944, the barracks were returned in good condition, as attested to in a document signed by the head of the ŽR, Ján Engel, and the two firms in Poprad and Bratislava.

SOURCES Primary sources are available at USHMMA, collection RG-57.001M (SNA), particularly in reels 187 to 190. Published primary sources can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA contains three testimonies that include references to Kostolná.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. "Zmluva," February 3, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 188, file 575, box 22 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 188/575/22),

2. VHA #1743, Dov Golan testimony, March 29, 1995.

3. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 188/575/22.

4. "Veliteľstvo prac. strediska Židov—Kostolná pri Trenčíne," February 3, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 187/574/32.

5. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 188/575/22.

6. VHA #33686, Walter Polák testimony, July 4, 1997.

7. Ibid.

8. "Pracovné stredisko Židov v Kostolnej," May 17, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 187/574/25.

9. "Veliteľstvo prac. strediska v Jablonci," August 19, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 190/581/28.

KRALOVANY

Kral'ovany is located 186 kilometers (116 miles) northeast of Bratislava, at the confluence of the Váh and Orava Rivers. On February 3, 1944, the engineering firm, Tatranská stavebná účasťná spoločnosť, signed a labor agreement with the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) to open a forced labor camp for Jews at Kral'ovany. The Jewish forced laborers were deployed to lay concrete for a second rail track near Kral'ovany, to link to a two-track railroad tunnel being built in Poprad. The 100 workers lived in makeshift housing that, according to the camp commander, was sufficient for the short term.¹ The forced laborers were ineligible for national health insurance, so the company was responsible for paying their social insurance fees and providing medical care. In case of emergency, the Jewish forced laborers were to be sent to the Jewish hospital in Sered' at the Kral'ovany camp's expense.

On January 4, 1944, the MV gave orders to relocate the Jewish forced laborers and the camp directorate from the Ivánka pri Dunaji labor camp. On January 5, 1944, the Jewish inmates left on a passenger train at 5:06 A.M. to Bratislava and then took a 6:05 A.M. train from Bratislava to Kral'ovany. The camp commander enforced strict discipline during the transport; freight cars were reserved for the forced laborers. The inmates paid for their transportation and were told they would be reimbursed later; however, it is unclear whether they actually received any compensation.

Mikuláš Letko was the camp commander of Kral'ovany. The warden and deputy commander was Viliam Bolgáč of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG). The MV also created a three-member Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR), consisting of Ladislav Kurtag, the head of the council; Erich Grünwald, the deputy and accountant; and Armin Bermann.² Their main assignment was to assist the camp directorate and the Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps in Bratislava (Ústredná kancelária pre pracovné tábory Židov v Bratislave).

The workers were paid at the end of each month. In addition, the Central Jewish Office (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ) sent money to the camp to augment the laborers' food supply. In 1944, 2,915 Slovak crowns (Ks) were given to the camp from funds raised by the ÚŽ.³

The German Army transported heavy machinery on the railroad, and the train stopped at Kral'ovany where weapons were unloaded. Slovak partisans who operated in the area seized some of the weapons, and empty trains continued eastward.⁴

It is unclear when the camp was liquidated; however, the forced laborers were moved to the Banská Belá labor center, 77 kilometers (48 miles) southwest under HG supervision. On February 18, 1945, German troops occupied the village and, in early April, destroyed almost all railway tracks, bridges, and tunnels.

SOURCES Primary documentation on the Kral'ovany camp can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), in particular reels 187 and 188. Published primary sources can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na

Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA holds three testimonies that mention the camp.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Hlásenie o prevedení odsunu pracovného strediska Židov v Ivanke pri Dunaji do Kráľovan,” January 7, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 188, box 575, file 26 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 188/575/26).

2. “Návrh na vymenovanie židovskej rady v prac. strediskách,” April 19, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 187/574/25.

3. “Pre žid. prac. tábory—zpráva o použití,” August 29, 1944, SNA, fond ÚHU, box 344, III/A-1731 reprinted in Nižňanský et al., eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 290–292 (Doc. 126).

4. VHA #19687, Leo Elias testimony, September 10, 1996.

LÁB

Láb is located about 26 kilometers (16 miles) northwest of Bratislava. In early June 1943, the Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative (Slovenské dolnomoravské vodné družstvo, Moravod) approached the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) about creating a camp in Láb to provide forced laborers for one of its projects. The two parties signed a contract to create a work center (pracovné stredisko) at Láb on June 19, 1943. The forced laborers were tasked with regulating the Malina Stream by building a canal.¹

From June 1, 1943, jurisdiction over the Sixth Labor Battalion (Šiesty robotný prápor, ŠP) was transferred from the National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) to the MV. When the center was created, it was subject to the same organizational rules as Sered', Nováky, and Vyhne, the three main Slovak forced labor camps.

The forced laborers lived in barracks and ate in communal kitchens. Initially, 60 people of a total of 814 laborers were assigned to Láb, but the number grew to 139 and fluctuated throughout the camp's existence.² In 1943, 105 Jewish forced laborers worked in Láb, comprising 3 percent of such workers in Slovakia in 1943. A report for the year 1943 provided demographic information about the labor force. Only 1 of the 105 workers was married, 93 were considered “Israelites,” and 12 were baptized. In 1943, the Jewish laborers worked 98,691 hours. On December 31, the number of workers rose to 200.

The commander of the camp was Tomáš Vlček, and members of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) provided security. The MV paid the guards 50 Slovak crowns (Ks) if they were single and 70 Ks if they were married, per day. It also provided housing and social insurance for them. In addition to camp security, the Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR) participated in the camp's administration. Ladislav Muller was the head of the ŽR in Láb, Villiam Rosenberg was his deputy, and Oscar Lövy dealt with health concerns.³

On December 10, 1943, the MV ordered the transfer of more than 200 forced laborers from Láb and Svätý Jur to Kostolná, another work center in northwest Slovakia. The Hlinka Guard transported all the internees to Kostolná on December 15, and the camp was closed.

SOURCES Primary documents about the Láb forced labor camp for Jews can be found in SNA, fond MV, which is available in microform at USHMMA as RG-57.001M, reels 185–191. Published primary sources can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA holds three testimonies from survivors who had been interned at Láb.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Pracovné stredisko židov v Lábe—zradenie,” July 6, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 185.

2. SNA, fond MV, box 395, file 19651/1943.

3. “Pracovné stredisko židov v Lábe—židovská rada—zriadenie,” July 15, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, reel 185.

LIPNÍKY

Lipníky is approximately 332 kilometers (206 miles) northeast of Bratislava. In connection with the construction of the Prešov-Vranov nad Topľou railway line, the Slovak authorities opened a forced labor camp in the village of Lipníky (Prešov district). Under police guard, the forced laborers reported to the Lanna construction firm (in one document, it is spelled Lamma). The camp had an average population of 180, 90 percent of whom were not Jewish. It opened in the beginning of July 1941 and temporarily closed on December 10, 1941, because of epidemics among the inmates. The Lanna firm then requested an additional 225 Jews from Prešov, but it is not clear where they were quartered.¹

The camp reopened in the spring of 1942 as a penal camp, amid the deportations of Jews from Slovakia. However, the forced laborers remained on the railway construction project until its completion in mid-1943. As many as 600 prisoners were held in Lipníky. After its closure, the inmates were moved to the forced labor camp at Petič near Chmel'ov (Giraltovce district), more than three kilometers (two miles) northeast of Lipníky. According to historian Marek Danko, the camp conditions improved during Lipníky's second year of operation.

SOURCES Secondary sources describing the Lipníky camp are Marek Danko, “Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary” (Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, Košice), available at www.saske.sk/cas; Encyklopedie válečného zajetí a internace (Prague: EVZI Estranky.cz, 2010), available at www.evzi.estranky.cz; and Růžena Bubeníčková, Ludmila Kubátová, and Irena Malá, Tábory utrpení a smrti (Prague: Svoboda, 1969).

Primary sources involving the Lipníky camp can be found in ŠAPO (USHMMA holds parts of this collection under RG-57.011). As cited by Danko, a report on the Lipníky camp can be found in ŠAPO, pobočka Prešov, F ONV PO 1945–1948, inv. č. 62, k. 32, č.s. 17.702/1947.

Vanda Rajcan and Joseph Robert White

NOTE

1. Židovský pracovný tábor fy Lamma, October 3, 1941, USHMMMA, RG-57.011 (ŠAPr), file 2721/1941.

MARIANKA

Marianka (German: Mariatal) is located about 12 kilometers (7 miles) north of Bratislava. In the autumn of 1944 it became a place of confinement for those citizens of the United States and other American countries who were of Jewish origin but were so far granted various exceptions from the local anti-Jewish legislation. On September 5, 1944, only a few days after the beginning of the German occupation of Slovakia, a group of 75 such foreigners sent a delegation to the Slovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Ministerstvo zahraničných vecí, MZV), to ask for protection. An official of the Ministry informed the delegation, which Milton Haar led, that the protection would take the form of “confinement to a certain place.” They would receive additional information after the MZV had settled matters with various other competent ministries.

On September 19, 1944, the Head of Slovak State Security Headquarters (Ústredňa štátnej bezpečnosti, ÚŠB) informed the Regional Gendarmerie Headquarters in Bratislava that the above-mentioned Jews were to be confined in the old manor house in Marianka, and he asked that the regional headquarters send two gendarmes to this “camp for American state citizens” as soon as possible. According to the document, the confinement originally differed from internment by definition (the internees could provide for themselves) and the concentration of Jews in Marianka was already ongoing. The requested gendarmes were supposed to provide the camp with “necessary protection” and “order.”

Living conditions and the details on the management of the camp are unknown. From the documents of the German Einsatzgruppe H der Sipo und des SD, which organized the German security and persecution operations in Western and Central Slovakia, it is clear that the German security apparatus followed the activities of Slovak officials related to the Marianka camp closely. It is also clear that the number of Jews confined in Marianka rose. On October 11, 1944, German security forces raided the manor house in Marianka, and SS-Hauptsturmführer Alois Brunner arrested 187 Jews there.¹ On October 17, 1944, the Einsatzgruppe-H staff was informed that the Jews they had arrested had been deported to Auschwitz through the camp in Sered', except for three American citizens who were left behind, but remained under strict supervision.² There is no further information on the identity or fate of these people.

SOURCES Secondary sources on Marianka include Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: Archa, 1991) as well as Ján Hlavinka and Eduard Nižňanský, Pracovný a koncentračný tábor v Seredi 1941–1945 (Bratislava: Dokumentačné stredisko holokaustu, 2009).

Primary sources on Marianka can be found in National Archives and Records Administration, Records of the Reich Leader of the SS and Chief of the German Police, Microcopy T 175, Roll R641.

Ján Hlavinka

NOTES

1. “Judenversteck in Mariatal bei Pressburg,” NARA, Microcopy No. T 175, Roll R641, 000447.

2. Vermerk, NARA, Microcopy No. T 175, Roll R641, 000429.

MILOSLAVOV

Miloslavov is located about 15 kilometers (9 miles) southeast of Bratislava and is sometimes referred to as Alžbetín dvor and in the military context as Kolónia Alžbeta (Mischdorf in German and Annamajor in Hungarian). Together with Veľký Kýr near Nitra, the camp established in Miloslavov was part of the Slovak government’s first attempt to expel Jews from Slovak territory in early November 1938, less than one month after the promulgation of Slovak autonomy on October 6, 1938.

On November 1, 1938, a day before the announcement of the First Vienna Award in which Germany and Italy decided on new Czechoslovak-Hungarian borders, a pro-Hungarian demonstration took place in Bratislava. Local police arrested several Jews at this demonstration. When the decision of the convening powers, signed on November 2, became known, several radical Ludáks members decided to blame and punish the Jews. On the very next day, they met at the Carlton Hotel in Bratislava to discuss the “Jewish Question” with SS-Obersturmführer Adolf Eichmann, who had traveled from Vienna. HSEs member and lawyer Jozef Faláth, as well as the Chief of the Academic Hlinka Guard (Akademická Hlinkova garda) Jozef Kirschbaum and the head of Deutsche Partei Franz Karmasin, were present at the meeting.¹ It resulted in a proposal to deport Jews living in Slovakia to the surrendered territory, which was to become Hungarian. Faláth and Eichmann discussed the matter with Prime Minister Jozef Tiso on November 4, 1938. After Tiso approved the proposal, he instructed Faláth on its implementation. Faláth went to the Police Directorate in Bratislava (Policajné riaditeľstvo v Bratislave) and established a telephone connection with district offices all around Slovakia. On behalf of the Center for the Solution of the Jewish Problem in Slovakia (Centrála pre riešenie židovského problému na Slovensku), which had just been created, Faláth ordered district offices to cooperate with the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) and to arrest all Jews “without material means” and “push them,” by midnight of the same day, over the new border.² Jews with property worth more than 500,000 Czechoslovak crowns (Kč) were to be arrested in order to prevent their emigration with their property.³

The deportation started immediately; thousands of Jews were rounded up on November 4, 1938, by the gendarmerie and HG and forcibly transported over the new borders. A few hours after the action began, the original order was changed, and Jews of foreign citizenship became the target of deportation. The deportation policy was stopped by Tiso's order of November 7, 1938, but by then, about 7,500 people had already been deported from Slovakia.⁴ The deported Jews were left in a temporary "no man's land" between Hungary and Czechoslovakia with almost no money (50 Kč per person) and in cold weather.

Miloslavov became one of the places where these deportees were concentrated. The camp in Miloslavov was situated some 250 meters (821 feet) from the Slovak-Hungarian border and was located on the dirt road near Štvrtek na Ostrove.⁵ Neither country claimed responsibility for the camp; both blamed each other for its existence.

The camp was set up in an open space and unguarded. The situation of people in the camp was terrible, and Jewish organizations in Slovakia started to take care of them.

The Central Office of the Autonomous Orthodox Jewish Religious Communities (Ústředná kancelária autonómnych ortodoxných židovských náboženských obcí) designated Heinrich Schwartz to negotiate with the state authorities in Bratislava about the fate of the Jews in Miloslavov. The Slovak Army allowed Schwartz to visit the camp on November 24, 1938.

On November 27, Marie Schmolka, the manager of HICEM Prague, visited the camp in Miloslavov (to which she referred as "Mischdorf"). In her report, she wrote the following on the situation in the camp:

More than 300 refugees found themselves in an open field for one week, in a temperature which went as low as 2 degrees below zero during the daytime and 5 degrees below zero at night. They built scanty huts and roofs from maize stalks and dug pits in which they placed their children (some of these children are only a few months old). Only the self-sacrificing assistance of the Jews of Bratislava saved them from certain death by starvation and freezing. . . . During the last week (the refugees now find themselves 14 days near Mischdorf), the Jews were able to provide four furniture vans in which those who are very ill could be bedded on straw and, for the others, low tents were erected, each tent accommodating 20 people, while others are still in the shelters formed of maize stalks. Until now they had to fetch water from a distance of about one kilometer, and only now a pump has been erected.⁶

Jews who have been expelled from Slovakia await their fate in the Miloslavov tent camp (Mischdorf in German) in no man's land on the border between Slovakia and Hungary, December 1938.

USHMM WS# 81325, COURTESY OF THE WIENER LIBRARY FOR THE STUDY OF THE HOLOCAUST & GENOCIDE.

On November 29, 1938, the president of the Orthodox Jewish Religious Communities wrote to Prime Minister Tiso regarding the camps in Miloslavov and Vel'ký Kýr, describing in detail the horrid conditions that the detainees were experiencing. According to his letter, more than 300 persons were being held in the Miloslavov camp at the end of November; there were 120 men, 77 women, and 105 children of various ages, including many infants. Of these detainees, 17 were Slovak citizens, 30 from Subcarpathian Rus', 28 from local territory, 22 from Poland, 38 from Germany, and 197 were without state citizenship. Many of those without state citizenship had lived in Slovak territory for decades. A good number of the detainees were old and sick. Many were in poor physical condition due to malnutrition, substandard housing, and the lack of hygiene.⁷

The letter also suggested ways to improve conditions in the camp, with these modifications to be funded by the Jewish community, and not the local or national government. For example, all Jews unable to return to their homes could be taken to individual buildings owned by Jewish organizations under Slovak police control. The organization promised to take care of housing, food, and any necessary medical assistance for the detainees. For those holding Slovak citizenship, the president of the Orthodox Jewish Religious Communities asked for permission for them to return to the cities in which they had lived. For those without Slovak citizenship, he asked that they be given time to liquidate their property and tie up other matters before departing Slovakia; the organization would provide financial assistance for those returning to Subcarpathian Rus' or Poland.⁸ He assured the prime minister that every phase of this plan would be implemented and paid for by the Jewish organization and that the detainees would not cause any trouble. In addition, the Jewish community would serve as a liaison with foreign offices and foreign nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) to facilitate emigration. The old Jewish hospital in Bratislava was to be used to hold Jews who could not return to their homes or could not stay with family members.

Jewish organizations in Bratislava provided help and supplies to the camp inmates, but living conditions worsened drastically after a period of heavy rains and cold temperatures. Local officials were afraid the camp would become a security risk and warned against the possibility of epidemics, which threatened the surrounding villages and guards in the camp.

Starting on November 30, 1938, all contact with the camp was forbidden, which also included the provision of organizational help from Bratislava. The Hungarian border police began to furnish supplies for building barracks. Local officials continued to plead with the national government to liquidate the camp for fear of potential epidemics, as well as the security threat. They argued that the number of Hungarian Jews was growing, and there was the possibility that the demarcation line could move, effectively placing the camp in Slovak territory and making it a Slovak problem.⁹

On December 8, 1938, the Slovak Country Office (Krajinský úrad, KÚ) allowed the Jews who lived in camps in Veľký Kýr and Miloslavov to return to the Slovak territory of Czechoslovakia. Jews who had a legal domicile on Slovak territory could return to their home towns and villages and were to be brought there by their “home” district authorities (district offices).¹⁰

However, Jews from the Czech lands, Subcarpathian Rus', and Poland were deported to those territories.

On December 19, 1938, 118 Jews, including 56 children, were allowed to leave Miloslavov and to return to Slovak territory. According to a document of January 1939, they obtained certificates and emigrated.¹¹ Those who remained were taken by security personnel in the middle of the night and transported to Hungary. The whole action was planned to take place in secret, so as not to cause a stir among the populace.¹²

SOURCES Brief mention of the Miloslavov camp can be found in Ivan Kamenec, On the Trail of Tragedy: The Holocaust in Slovakia (Bratislava: H & H, 2007); Ladislav Lipscher, Židia v slovenskom štáte, 1939–1945 (Bratislava: Printservis, 1992); Gila Fatranová, Boj o Prežitie (Bratislava: Múzeum Židovskej Kultúry, 2007); and Tomáš Gerboc, “Štát proti Židom,” available at www.impulzrevue.sk/article.php?816.

Primary documents on the Miloslavov camp can be found in SNA, available in microform at USHMMA as RG-57.001M, reels 26 and 178. Published primary sources on the camp can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie (6.10.1938–14.3 1939) (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2001).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. Eduard Nižňanský, Židovská komunita medzi československou parlamentnou demokraciou a slovenským štátom v stredoeurópskom kontexte (Prešov: Universum, 1999), 39.

2. Ibid., 40.

3. Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, pp. 228–229 (Doc. 110).

4. Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku medzi, 54.

5. “Hlásenie styčného dôstojníka úseku Bratislave,” November 30, 1938, ŠOKA Pezinok, fond Styčný dôstojník Bratislava 1938–1938, box 1, 64, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, pp. 254–255 (Doc. 127).

6. Marie Schmolka, “Report by Marie Schmolka on her visit to the refugee camp in Mischdorf, on November 27, 1938, and other expulsions of Jews,” EHRI Documents, accessed April 6, 2017, <https://visualisations.ehri-project.eu/items/show/1>.

7. Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 250–251. “Židia vykázaní z Maďarska—žiadost' o úpravu,” December 6, 1938, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 26, box 206, file 638 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/26/206/638); SNA, fond KÚ-P, box 309, 70.414/38.

8. “Umiestnenie vyhostených židov, nachadzajúcich sa na hraniciach pri Mischdorfe a pri Nitre,” November 29, 1938, SNA, fond KÚ-Presidium, box 309, bez čísla, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 250–252 (Doc. 125).

9. Ibid., pp. 252–254.

10. Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku medzi, 62.

11. Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, p. 258, n71.

12. “Židovská otázka na Slovensku,” n.d., SNA, fond KÚ, box 309/77581/1938, reprinted in ibid., pp. 258–259 (Doc. 130).

MOST NA OSTROVE

Most na Ostrove (today: Most pri Bratislave) is located over 12 kilometers (7 miles) east of Bratislava. The first work units (pracovné útvary, PÚ) were created in Most na Ostrove and Očová for Aryan “asocials” in Slovakia as early as 1941 to address labor shortages in various state projects. Records show that Roma (referred to as Gypsies, Cigáni) were held in such camps as well.¹ The Most camp opened on June 10, 1941, under the auspices of Law 129/41 (forced labor). It held 40 forced laborers, who constructed the nearby state road. The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) was responsible for handling the camp’s personnel issues—including command of the gendarmes—whereas the rest of the camp’s administration fell to agencies of the Bratislava župa.²

The Most camp was liquidated on December 10, 1941, and the forced laborers were sent home. On their arrival, they had to register with their hometown’s office, which was charged with observing their behavior. Road construction was supposed to resume in 1942, but according to an MV communication, it did not.³

SOURCES Very little has been published about the early Slovak work camps. Some information can be found in Peter Sokolovič, ed., Perzekúcie na Slovensku v rokoch 1938–1945: Slovenská republika 1939–1945 očami mladých historikov VII (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2008); and Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008).

Primary sources can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), particularly reel 116.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. Karol Janas, Perzekúcie Rómov v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa), 35.

2. “Výkaz hospodarenia,” March 22, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 116, folder 411, box 2 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/116/411/2).

3. “Pracovné útvary,” March 19, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/116/411/2.

NIŽNÝ HRABOVEC

The village of Nižný Hrabovec is located north of the Slovak-Hungarian border (as set by the First Vienna Award of 1938), approximately 352 kilometers (219 miles) east and slightly north of Bratislava. It is situated about 28 kilometers (17 miles) southeast of Hanušovce nad Topľou, which was the site of a forced labor camp between July 1, 1942, and November 8, 1943. Roma and others whom Department 16 of the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) deemed to be “asocial” were detained there.¹ Nižný Hrabovec was a subcamp of Hanušovce nad Topľou camp. The inmates were likely forced to participate in construction of the rail line between Prešov and Strážske. Like the workers housed at Hanušovce nad Topľou, the forced laborers stationed at Nižný Hrabovec also had to endure catastrophic conditions and abuse. The inmate population at Nižný Hrabovec likely mirrored that at Hanušovce nad Topľou.

SOURCES For secondary information on the Nižný Hrabovec camp, see Michael Zimmermann, Rassenutopie und Genozid: Die nationalsozialistische “Lösung der Zigeunerfrage” (Hamburg: Christians, 1996); and Marek Danko, “Internáčné zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary,” Čas 1 (2010), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/.

Primary documentation about the Nižný Hrabovec camp is scarce. The CNI of the ITS contains a few inquiries about individuals detained at Nižný Hrabovec. This documentation is available in digital form at USHMMA.

Alexandra Lohse

NOTE

1. For an example of a non-Roma “asocial” held in the camp, see ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Stefan Ferenc, Doc. No. 52961030.

NOVÁKY

The village of Nováky is located in the Upper Nitra Valley, 124 kilometers (77 miles) northeast of Bratislava. As in Sered', in the summer of 1941, the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) decided to build a large labor camp for Jews in Nováky, at the premises of the former military storehouses. MV took over these storehouses from the Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) on October 2, 1941.¹ By the end of November 1941, 386 Jewish workers were already deployed at the site tearing down the old storehouses and constructing new buildings.

In early 1942, while the camp in Nováky was still under construction, the Slovak government started to organize the deportation of Jews from Slovakia. As in the case of Sered', MV decided to use the Nováky camp as a concentration and transit camp (Koncentračné stredisko Židov).

The section used as the concentration camp was built on the premises of the first complex, located closest to the road near the railroad station. The storehouses for ammunition were converted into housing for deported Jews. The first complex also housed the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) and a canteen set up by the Jewish Center (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ). Except for the state building office, the premises were nearly vacant until March 1942.

Mikuláš Polhora, a former employee of the Propaganda Office (Úrad propagandy), became the camp's commandant on March 3, 1942. On March 18, MV allocated 301,000 Slovak crowns (Ks) for the camp's operation.²

The guards for the camp were supplied by the HG. At the beginning of April, 1942, there were 68 guards at the camp; however, that number increased to 120 in August, 1942.³ Several of these guards committed atrocities against Jews.⁴ On March 28, 1942, in correspondence with the MV, Polhora inquired whether deportations should include children under age 18 and people over 45 and received an affirmative answer to both queries.⁵

In the beginning, Jews who arrived in Nováky to join one of the transports stayed there for only a short period of time, usually around 5 to 10 days, with a small amount of luggage (limited to 50 kilograms [110 pounds]). They lived in horrible physical conditions, but even that paled in comparison to the stress that their uncertain future produced.⁶

During the camp's existence, three transports left Nováky for the Lublin region in German-occupied Poland; the first one left at 7:15 p.m. on March 30, 1942.⁷ The HG Chief of Staff, Otomar Kubala, visited the concentration camp the day before the transport and was happy with the camp's operation, as well as with the anticipated deportation. At that time, 1,200 Jews were in Nováky, of whom 1,000 were dispatched on that first transport to Lublin. Another transport of 1,000 people left Nováky for the Lublin region on June 11, 1942.⁸ The transports were meticulously timed to ensure arrival in Čadca, a town on the Slovak-Polish border 190 kilometers (118 miles) from Bratislava, at 4:28 a.m. It was in Čadca that the Slovak HG transferred control of the transport to the German authorities; German guards then escorted the Jewish transports to a predetermined camp.⁹

Several smaller transports were sent from Nováky to a concentration camp in Žilina, where the prisoners were put into the transport departing for German-occupied Poland. Although the exact number of people deported remains unknown, the estimate is that the number is between 4,000 and 5,000.¹⁰

Furthermore, the Reich sent SS-Oberscharführer Ernst Brückler, referred to as “a German friend” and consultant in documents, to ensure the camp's efficient operation. Brückler quartered with Nováky's HG unit, and the camp covered his daily food expenses.¹¹

In addition to the people brought to Nováky for deportation, other Jews built the labor camp in Nováky. Beginning on April 22, 1942, the families of Jewish workers were brought to Nováky as the workers continued to expand the camp.¹² Once the deportations ended in October 1942, the camp was expanded to hold more Jews for forced labor. Slovak fascists then operated it as a self-sufficient labor camp.

Jewish workers were employed in 22 workshops.¹³ Production increased significantly once the deportations ceased. The

HG supervised the workers, who worked 10 hours a day in the summer months and 9 hours in the winter; no one was allowed to remain in the barracks during work hours; sick people were sent to the infirmary.¹⁴

Tailors dominated camp manufacturing, producing men's and women's clothing, undergarments, and backpacks for the Ružomberok textile company.¹⁵ In addition to manufacturing various goods, Nováky prisoners also worked in agriculture with the purpose of making the camp self-sufficient. Among other things, they raised cows and angora rabbits.¹⁶

The prisoners lived in three wooden barracks housing 80 to 100 people each: those with families lived together in barracks designated for families, and those who were single lived in barracks for individuals.¹⁷ Each barrack was assigned a team of Jewish guards comprised of one commander and three other men, responsible for camp security and sounding an alarm in case of an emergency.¹⁸ Each barrack also adhered to police regulations by storing ladders, four buckets of water, and four boxes filled with sand for emergencies.¹⁹ The prisoners slept on plank beds and straw; however, sewers, water pipes, and lavatories with cold and hot water were built to improve the poor hygienic standards.²⁰ One of the buildings housed an infirmary, including a dentist's office, which handled less serious cases of illness; the more complicated cases were sent to the Jewish hospital at Sered'.²¹ The population was forbidden from leaving the camp without permission from the camp commandant; permission was also needed for any outsiders to enter the camp.

Under the leadership of Dr. Oskar Neumann, the Jewish Center (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ) played a significant role in the camp's operation. Just as in the labor camp in Sered', with the ÚŽ providing funds and bribing the relevant officials, the Interior Ministry established schools in Nováky in January 1943, including a kindergarten and a nursery, so that mothers could work as well.²² Moreover, the students served as apprentices in the camp's workshops. Children's homes were later established in the camp.²³

A Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR) headed by Dr. Otto Mandler helped run the labor camp in Nováky. It had five official members and four who assisted. It did everything possible to improve the living conditions in the camp.²⁴

Although Jews lived in overcrowded conditions, they tried to live as normal a life as possible, creating cultural, educational, and sports activities in the camp. In a very short time, theatrical and folk song performances took place. The education committee organized various courses, including courses in the Slovak language, history, and geography, in which many people participated. A library also existed, thanks to donations by Jews outside the camp.²⁵ Some Jews played sports, including volleyball, table tennis, and soccer. Religious services were held in the camp, mainly for baptized Jewish Christians.

Jewish prisoners at forced labor in the Nováky labor camp, circa 1942–1944. USHMM WS #83089, COURTESY OF THE SLOVENSKY NARODNY ARCHIV.

Despite all of these improvements, the food did not contain sufficient calories, and because its nutritional value was very low, gastrointestinal illness became a common problem.²⁶ In addition, heart disease and traumas were widespread as a result of the suffering sustained by people living in such close proximity and under psychological stress. Diseases resulting from exhaustion were an everyday occurrence as well.²⁷

In July 1943, 1,530 Jewish forced laborers—849 men and 681 women—were in the Nováky camp, as well as 171 children under 14 years of age. In July 1944, just before the camp was dissolved, the number of forced laborers grew to 1,679 people.²⁸

In 1942, the Jews did not receive any wages, working only for room and board. From 1943 on, they received 4 Kč per person a day, which was increased after the introduction of the so-called bonus system.²⁹ This new approach immediately resulted in much greater productivity. In 1943, the volume of transactions reached 15 million Kč and grew over time due to an increase in the number of workers and their efficiency.³⁰

In February 1943, Mikuláš Polhora was accused of showing compassion for the Jews. He was recalled from his post and replaced by Jozef Švitler, a noncommissioned officer of the gendarmes, who arrived directly from Department 14 of the MV.³¹ The HG controlled the camp, but the number of guards declined after the deportations. In total, 19 members of the HG resided there at the beginning of 1943.³² Their number decreased gradually until they were replaced by gendarmes in the spring of 1944. The gendarmes were both better qualified and more responsible than the members of the HG.³³

The Jews in Nováky were well aware of the danger around them, so some decided to flee to Hungary, others organized underground movements and smuggled weapons into the camp, and still others decided to cooperate with the illegal communist party in Nováky.³⁴ The camp was dissolved on the second day of the Slovak National Uprising on August 29, 1944. A number of the Jews formed their own partisan unit and joined the uprising.³⁵

SOURCES Of the Slovak camps, Nováky, together with Sered' and Vyhne, is mentioned in the greatest number of secondary sources. These books offer extensive documentation: Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku 2004); Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: Deportácie v roku 1942 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2005); Igor Baka, Židovský tábor v Novákoch 1941–1944 (Bratislava: Zing Print, 2001); and Waclaw Długoborski et al., The Tragedy of the Jews of Slovakia: 1938–1945: Slovakia and the “Final Solution of the Jewish Question” (Oświęcim: Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum, 2002).

Primary sources dealing with the camp include the SNA MV collection microcopied to USHMMA as RG-57.001M and the Anton Vašek trial records, digitized in USHMMA as RG-57.004M, folders 10–12. Additionally, Nováky's organizational chart is available in USHMMA's "Slovakian Jewish Labor Camps collection" in Acc. No. 1998.A.0303. Juraj Špitzer's memoir, Nechcel som byť žid (Bratislava: Kalligram, 1994); his collected essays, Svitá, až keď je celkom tma (Bratislava: Kalligram, 1996), and Koncentračný a pracovný tábor pre židov Nováky 1942–1944 (Nováky: N.P., 2000) trace his ordeal through numerous camps, including Nováky. VHA holds 77 testimonies of people who had a wartime experience in Nováky.

Eduard Nižňanský, Vanda Rajcan, and Ján Hlavinka

NOTES

1. ŠOKA-Pr so sídlom v Bojniciach, fond Okresný úrad Prievidza, box 69, 1668/41.
2. "Účtovanie v koncentračných strediskách Židov—smernice," March 18, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 267, 406-560-13, reprinted in ibid., p. 6: 158 (Doc. 57).
3. SNA, fond MV, carton 230, 1468/42; box 262, 12 509/42.
4. Špitzer, Nechcel som byť žid, 73; ŠOA-B, Okresný ľudový súd Prievidza, V. Kimlička 9/46; M. Vachále, 26/46.
5. Telefonogram, March 28, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 216, 1082/1942, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 208 (Doc. 123).
6. SNA, fond MV, box 206, 638/42.
7. "Hlásenie o stavu transportu v Novákoch," March 30, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 210, bez čísla, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 216 (Doc. 132).
8. SNA, fond Národný súd, Dr. Anton Vašek, Tn ľud 17/46; Baka, Židovský tábor v Novákoch 1941–1944, 44.
9. "Preprava zaradencov Židov do práce," March 11, 1942, SNA, fond Národný súd, Dr. Anton Vašek, Tn ľud 17/46 (box 110), reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 128 (Doc. 29).
10. Ibid.
11. "Nemecký poradcovia v koncentračných miestach," March 23, 1942, SNA, fond MV, box 214, 783/42; Baka, Židovský tábor v Novákoch 1941–1944, 40.
12. "Nováky," December 7, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 343, box, 223, file 19 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/343/223/19, p. 19).
13. "Návrh ubikačného poriadku pracovného tábora pre Židov v Novákoch," n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M/115/409/6, pp. 2–3.
14. Ibid., p. 8.
15. Ibid., pp. 8–10.
16. "Správa veliteľ'a Židovského tábora v Novákoch," SNA, PR, 2231/b.č., reproduced in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 163 (Doc. 83); Nováky, December 7, 1942, p. 2.
17. "Nováky," December 7, 1942, pp. 5–7.
18. "Návrh ubikačného poriadku pracovného tábora pre Židov v Novákoch," n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M/115/409/6.
19. Ibid.
20. SNA, fond MV, 580/1392/44; "Zápisnica," May 10, 1943, YVA, fond m-5/81, reproduced in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 229 (Doc. 109); SNA, fond MV, 207/700/42; SNA, fond Národný súd, Dr. Anton Vašek, Tn ľud 17/46; Špitzer, Nechcel som byť žid, p. 73.

21. "Zápisnica," May 10, 1943, p. 229; SNA, fond MV, 419/1481/43, and 580/1392/44.
22. SNA, fond ÚHU, box 434, I II/A 1731/44.
23. SNA, fond MV, 420/1958/43; 411/1498/43.
24. Baka, Židovský tábor v Novákoch 1941–1944, p. 76.
25. SNA, fond MV, 574/1031/44; 421, b.č.
26. SNA, fond MV, 580/1392/44; "Zápisnica," May 10, 1943, p. 2; "Zápisnica," October 27, 1943, reproduced in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 248 (Doc. 116); "Referát MUDr. Jakuba Špíru zo Židovského pracovného tábora v Novákoch," January 20, 1944, reproduced in ibid., 5: 272–275 (Doc. 118); SNA, fond MV 421, b.č.; 395, 1134/43.
27. "Zápisnica," October 27, 1943, reproduced in ibid., 5: 248 (Doc. 116); "Referát MUDr. Jakuba Špíru zo Židovského pracovného tábora v Novákoch," January 20, 1944, pp. 272–275.
28. SNA, fond MV, 421, b.č.
29. Stavebné Oddelenie," n.d., SNA, fond MV, 263/13666-1/42, reproduced in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 164 (Doc. 85); SNA, fond MV, 411/1498/43; fond Povereníctvo vnútra—pracovné tábory, kartón 9, D-1196-1/44.
30. SNA, fond MV, 411/1498/43; kartón 419, 1838-1-6/43; carton 578, D 1260-1-8-1.
31. SNA, fond MV, 395/1140/43; kartón 409, 1443/43.
32. SNA, fond MV, 394/1051/43; kartón 579, D-1300-4/44.
33. "Pracovné tábory Židov—dozorná," April 11, 1944, SNA, fond MV, reproduced in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 282–284 (Doc. 121).
34. Špitzer, Nechcel som byť žid, pp. 247–289; Hela Volanská, Hrdinky bez páťosu (Bratislava: Vydavateľstvo politickej literatúry, 1967), pp. 132–134.
35. Špitzer, Nechcel som byť žid, pp. 247–248.

NOVÉ MESTO NAD VÁHOM

Nové Mesto nad Váhom (German: Neustadt an der Waag) is located 83 kilometers (52 miles) northeast of Bratislava. Before the war, it was home to one of the largest Jewish communities in Slovakia. On June 9, 1939, in a ceremony in its decorated courtyard, the Baidersdorf Old Age Home was repurposed to aid any Jew suffering hardship. Rabbi Armin Frieder became the chairman of the Ohel David Home and Shelter. Moreover, a local committee of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee was established under his leadership and participated in the maintenance of the institution. In 1941, 230 Jewish seniors were cared for at the shelter.

The Slovak Interior Ministry's (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) Department 14, which dealt with the "Jewish Question," created a temporary camp for Jews in Nové Mesto nad Váhom on February 12, 1943.¹ This camp was supposed to be moved to the Nováky labor camp, but the temporary site became permanent. The camp was officially called the "Central Jewish Old People's Camp Home in Nováky with transitional headquarters in Nové Mesto nad Váhom" (Ústredný židovský taborový starobinec v Novákoch v prechodnom sídle v Nové Mesto nad Váhom). The MV ruled that the elderly were taking up resources in the labor camps at Vyhne, Nováky, and Sered' and needed to be moved elsewhere so that working Jews could take their place.

Nové Mesto nad Váhom maintained the Jewish community home, which was completely furnished and not a financial burden to the labor camps.

Shortly after the camp's establishment, a female prisoner cut through the barbed wire fence and escaped with her two children. To prevent further escapes, brick walls and additional rows of barbed wire were built to encircle the site.² Administratively, the prisoners in the Nové Mesto nad Váhom camp were counted as part of the labor camps' population, despite their being held in a separate place.³ The Nové Mesto nad Váhom district office supervised the camp.⁴ The number of prisoners varied, as did the demographics, though there were several hundred in the camp at any given time. The Slovak Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) was responsible for camp security. The camp was administered by Jewish leaders, including Armin Frieder.

Anton Vašek's report to Slovak Interior Minister Alexander Mach on August 2, 1944, documented the conditions of the six barracks built in the large garden and courtyard of the home for the aged. The wooden barracks were built by the General Construction Cooperative (Všeobecné stavebné družstvo) in Bratislava and by workers in the Sered' labor camp. The first barrack was designed for married couples. The second barrack, termed the "patient pavilion," housed the doctor, nurses, medical rooms, and prisoner patients. One room was designed for male patients and another room for female patients. The third barrack contained 18 rooms, each housing four people. One large room was designated as the common dining room. The fourth and fifth barracks served, respectively, as collective housing and housing for individual families. The sixth barrack, which was designed similarly to the fourth one, contained 18 rooms. Because many people, sick and healthy alike, went through the camp, sanitation was very important, as was discipline.⁵

Resources, including pillows and blankets, were taken from the previously Jewish-owned Ples Hotel for camp use. Despite that, more blankets, food and supplies were needed to keep up with the constantly increasing number of inmates. Dr. Irena Baumová, a local doctor, served as camp physician and frequently requested additional medical supplies from the MV.⁶

After the German takeover of Nové Mesto nad Váhom on September 2, 1944, all remaining Jews were slated for deportation. Despite the efforts by Armin Frieder to organize hiding, on October 17, 1944, 920 Jews, including Rabbi Frieder's parents and Gizi Fleischmann, a prominent leader of the Slovak Working Group (Pracovná skupina), were deported to Auschwitz via Sered'. The Jews were marched to the Stúpava train station under heavy guard by the Nazi SS. It is unclear exactly when the camp was officially liquidated.

SOURCES A brief history of the camp can be found at Nové Mesto nad Váhom's history website, available at http://nmmv.sk/historia/zidia_stavby_ohel.html.

Primary sources can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA) collection, particularly in reels 186, 190, and 191. Published documents can be found in Eduard Nižňanský ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: Deportácie v roku 1942 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2005). VHA contains 11 testimonies that reference the camp. A published testimony was written by Emanuel Frieder, Z Denníka mladého rabína (Bratislava: Edícia Judaica Slovaca, 1993); see also Emanuel Frieder, To Deliver Their Souls: The Struggle of a Young Rabbi during the Holocaust (New York: Holocaust Library, 1991).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Správa o Ústrednom židovskom táborovom starobinci v Novom Meste nad Váhom,” August 1, 1944, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 190, box 581, file 4 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 190/581/4).

2. VHA #676, Gloria Ungar testimony, January 18, 1995.

3. “Pracovné tábory židov—zriadenie ústredného táborového starobinca,” February 2, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 186/573/3.

4. Ibid.

5. Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 289–290.

6. “Židovský taborový starobinec,” March 23, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 186/573/4.

OČOVÁ

Očová is located 169 kilometers (105 miles) east-northeast of Bratislava. The first work units (pracovný útvar, PÚ) in Slovakia were created as early as 1941 to hold non-Jews deemed “asocials” and address the labor shortages in various state projects. Records show that Roma (Gypsies) were also imprisoned in such camps. Camps of this type existed in Očová (Lazy Trnavy; Horárňa—Lazy Trnavy) and Most na Ostrove. The very small PÚ in Očová was created on May 26, 1941. Twenty forced laborers worked for the Directorate of State Forests, Žarnovica (Riaditeľstvo štátnych lesov Žarnovica) in Očová. The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) was responsible for supplying and supervising the personnel administering the Očová camp, which was liquidated on November 20, 1941. The forced laborers were sent home, where they were required to register with the local office and their behavior was monitored.¹

SOURCES Very little has been published about the early Slovak camps. Some information can be found in Peter Sokolovič, ed., Perzekúcie na Slovensku v rokoch 1938–1945: Slovenská republika 1939–1945 očami mladých historikov VII (Bratislava: Ústav pamäti národa, 2008); and Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008).

Primary sources can be found in USHMMA RG-57.001M (SNA), particularly reel 116.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTE

1. “Výkaz hospodarenia,” March 22, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 116, folder 411, box 2.

PETIČ

Petič is a mountain or mountain pass between Lipníky and Medzianky, located north of the Slovak-Hungarian border (as set by the First Vienna Award of 1938) and approximately 330 kilometers (250 miles) east and slightly north of Bratislava. It is situated about 30 kilometers (18.6 miles) northwest of Hanušovce nad Topľou, which was the site of a forced labor camp that operated between July 1, 1942, and November 8, 1943. Roma and others deemed “asocials” according to the Interior Ministry’s (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) Department 16 were detained there. MV opened this work unit (pracovný útvar, PÚ) for the construction company, Lanna, one of the companies building the strategic Prešov–Strážske railway. Roma and others were detained for the construction of the railway section from Petič to Kapušany.¹ A total of 320 inmates were in the PÚ in Petič in the middle of August 1942.²

The barracks of the Petič PÚ were situated between Petič and Megeš.³ There is also evidence that Jewish forced laborers were registered at the site. However, many of the Jewish inmates likely spent only a brief time at Petič before they were transferred to other labor camps.⁴

SOURCES For secondary information about Roma inmates at the Petič camp see Michael Zimmermann, Rassenutopie und Genozid: Die nationalsozialistische “Lösung der Zigeunerfrage” (Hamburg: Christians, 1996); Marek Danko, “Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary,” Čas 1 (2010), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/; and Ctibor Nečas, “Pracovní útvary tzv. asociálů a Cikánů na východním Slovensku v roce 1942,” in Rómovia a druhá svetová vojna, eds. Ingrid Vagačová and Martin Fotta (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku), pp. 58–67.

Primary documentation is scarce. The CNI of the ITS contains several inquiries about individuals detained at Petič. Most of them were Jewish forced laborers.

Alexandra Lohse

NOTES

1. Nečas, “Pracovní útvary tzv.,” p. 58.

2. Ibid., p. 65, n34.

3. Ibid., p. 61.

4. ITS, 0.1, CNI card for Danilov Moschcovitch, Doc. No. 52818771; also CNI card for Rafila Fuchs, Doc. No. 53038225.

POPRAĐ

Poprad is located 256 kilometers (159 miles) east-northeast of Bratislava. On March 19, 1942, the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) established a transit and concentration camp (called Koncentračné stredisko Židov) in the military complex, Pod Gerlachom, located in an isolated area near Poprad. The camp initially housed Jewish women between the ages 16 and 45 from eastern and central Slovakia. Over time entire families, including children were transported to the camp.¹ The camp commandant, Jozef Petřík, received 151,000 Slovak crowns (Ks) from the MV to pay for security, emergency supplies, and office supplies to ensure the camp's functioning.²

The head of MV's Department 14, Gejza Konka, who made an agreement with the Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) that it evacuate the premises, planned for the transit camp to be operational by the middle of March 1942. As part of the site's reconfiguration from military facility to transit camp, the beds were removed and replaced with hay, and the toilets were replaced by latrines; no showers were installed. The camp was surrounded by barbed wire and held separate water and electricity meters to measure usage. The camp was overcrowded, and the size of its population varied widely. The facility provided housing for approximately 1,500 civilians in wooden barracks and stables; the camp's architects estimated that the housing would be temporary to accommodate a widely fluctuating number of inmates.³

The camp was under the supervision of Jozef Petřík and his deputy Jozef Bohuška. Petřík was a young and energetic army officer (the only army officer to serve as a camp commandant), and therefore, discipline was strict.⁴ The Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) which guarded the camp interacted with the commandant with respect, and Petřík's authority in the camp was unquestioned. He also employed two Jewish orderlies who were responsible for maintaining cleanliness and order.⁵

After the camp was repurposed, Petřík requested beds for the guards in his correspondence with the MV on April 13, 1942. In subsequent correspondence, Petřík inquired about heating in the camp. Poprad is located at the base of the Tatra Mountains, and March and April are still considered wintertime; therefore, the lack of heating in the camp was problematic, particularly at night.⁶ In addition to Petřík, a German officer was also sent to Poprad to ensure that the camp would operate efficiently and that the preparations for deportation would run smoothly. MV ordered Petřík to provide "the German friend" with adequate housing (a room) and food in the city.⁷

Unlike in other concentration camps in Slovakia, the inmates in the Poprad camp did not work, but spent their entire days in the camp awaiting further instructions. Some witnesses say that the HG treated the women in the camp relatively well while others reported frequent beatings of men, particularly of doctors.⁸

In addition to holding Jews in the former military barracks, the camp also housed Jewish physicians from Šariš-Zemplín county (Šarišsko-zemplínska župa), located in eastern Slovakia, in two large rooms in the stables. Although there was some straw on the ground, the floors were bare. According to survivors, the doctors had to eat the food they brought with them because they were not fed for the first two to three days. The doctors were kept separately from the young women and were responsible for manual labor around the camp, particularly cleaning the latrines.⁹

The first Slovak transport of 1,000 young women left Poprad on March 25, 1942, shortly after the camp opened. On their arrival at Auschwitz, the girls received tattoo numbers

1,000 to 1,998. Only a few of them survived.¹⁰ When the number of deportees in the camp reached 1,000 in number, a transport would depart Poprad, either for Auschwitz or the Lublin district. The inmates were transported by rail cars for days. The HG accompanied them to Čadca, a town located on the Slovak-Polish border and 118 kilometers (just over 73 miles) from Poprad, where the Nazi SS took over. All transports were scheduled to leave the Poprad train station at 8:10 p.m. and arrive in Čadca at 4:28 a.m.¹¹ The number of persons who passed through the transit camp reached 7,000: three transports (March 25, April 2, April 22) went to Auschwitz and four (May 24, May 29, May 30, June 12) to the Lublin district.¹²

The camp was disbanded at the beginning of October 1942, and Department 14, the ministry responsible for Jewish affairs, returned the site to the MNO on October 8, 1942. After most of the Jews had been transported to killing centers in German-occupied Poland, a few construction specialists stayed behind to repair the buildings. These Jews worked from the beginning of October until the end of November 1942, and when their work was completed, they were transferred to the Slovak concentration camp in Nováky.¹³

In addition to the transit camp outside the city, the old Jewish school in Poprad was also used as a detention site for females. The women slept on the ground and used their possessions as blankets. They also relied on their own food supplies because they were not given food in the school.¹⁴

SOURCES The secondary literature for Poprad is sparse. Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: Deportácie v roku 1942 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2005), provides some documentation about the camp as well as Petřík's correspondence with MV. In addition, Ivan Chalupecký and Ivan Bohuš, Dejiny Popradu (Košice: Oriens, 1998), mention the transit camp in two short paragraphs and lists the transports to German killing centers. On the 60th anniversary, a plaque was placed on the Poprad train station in 2002 to commemorate the first transport of young women who perished in Auschwitz; see www.slovak-jewish-heritage.org.

Primary documentation for the Poprad transit camp can be found in SNA and copied in microfilm to USHMMA as RG-57.001M (Slovak Documents Related to the Holocaust). In RG-57.001M, Poprad files include reels 112, box 394, file 55; reel 17, box 207, file 14; and reel 7, box 205, file 564. Additional documents can be found throughout the collection. VHA contains 31 testimonies from survivors who were in various Poprad detention sites.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 17, box 207, folder 14 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/17/207/14).
2. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/7/205/564.
3. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/17/207/14.
4. "St'ahujeme Židov zo Slovenska," Gardista, May 31, 1942, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 376–378 (Doc. 294).

5. Ibid.
6. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/24/230/1885.
7. "Soznamy Židov," March 29, 1942, SNA, fond MV, kartón 207/4, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 214–215 (Doc. 130).
8. VHA #19588, Naphtali Bleich testimony, September 5, 1996; VHA #20034, Lea Ganik interview, September 25, 1996.
9. VHA #33798, Eugene Schnitzer testimony, September 5, 1997.
10. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/18/177/1.
11. "Preprava zaradencov Židov do práce," March 11, 1942, SNA, fond NS, Dr. A. Vašek, Tnlud 17/46-65 (kartón 110), reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 127–128 (Doc. 29).
12. D.I.5705. Moreshet Archives Givat Haviva.
13. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/112/394/55.
14. VHA #18638, Blanka Feder testimony, July 30, 1996; VHA #25341, Gizela Sokolov testimony, January 30, 1997.

REVÚCA

In early 1943, the Ladislav Hits construction company asked the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) to establish a work unit (pracovný útvar, PÚ) for 150 persons deemed "asocials" in Revúca, a town located 230 kilometers (143 miles) east and slightly north of Bratislava. The company had plans to construct railway lines from Slavošovce to Chyžňan Voda (today part of Lubeník), a distance of 30 kilometers (19 miles), and from Revúca to Tisovec, a distance of 20 kilometers (12 miles). The MV accepted the application and signed a contract with the company on March 1, 1943. The camp was officially established on March 8, and the MV promised to send 150 to 200 forced laborers to the camp between March 15 and April 15, 1943.¹ The camp population included Roma ("Gypsies"), as well as others deemed "asocial" by the Tiso regime.

The firm arranged housing for 100 to 120 forced laborers outside Revúca and for 80 to 100 people in Muránska Dlhá Lúka, a village located 4 kilometers (2.5 miles) from Revúca. The forced laborers arose at 4 A.M. and arrived by train at Revúca at 5:13 A.M. They worked from 6:00 A.M. until noon and from 1 P.M. to 6 P.M., returning to their quarters around 7:00 P.M.

The forced laborers lived in two wooden barracks, built from unsanded boards and only partly insulated. The quarters were infested with vermin. Often two forced laborers slept on each bed. The construction company was supposed to provide the workers with clothing and blankets, but failed to do so. The forced laborers arrived shoeless at the camp, and the shoe shortage remained a perennial problem: in June 1943, 10 people worked without shoes, in July that number doubled, and in August the number grew to 50.

The barracks housed between 80 and 100 workers, and toilets were behind the barracks. The camp commander's barrack was built first; it also had two rooms for forced laborers and the tailor and shoemaker workshops. The second was built in the spring of 1943 and housed more laborers. About 100 additional workers were housed in the former Klein house on Štefánikova Street about 1 kilometer (0.6 miles) from the camp.

It was an older house with many rooms and a sizable garden. However, even the Klein residence was infested with vermin. Eight gendarmes and one supervisor were housed in a complex called "Stará Máša," located 150 meters (492 feet) from the camp.² They were all housed in a small room, 6.3 meters long, 5.04 meters wide, and 3.2 meters high (20.7 feet by 16.5 feet by 10.5 feet).

Slovak government reports indicated that the housing was insufficient; the lack of space was problematic for both the gendarmes and workers. On June 30, 1943, the firm tried to disinfect the forced laborers' rooms by applying hot steam to the beds.³

The camp commander first divided the forced laborers into two groups—the Roma and the others—and then subdivided each into three groups: the first consisted of people deemed intelligent, obedient, and hardworking; the second were inmates with a checkered past, but who were not considered incorrigible; the third comprised "lifelong criminals" viewed as undisciplined, lazy, and dangerous. Group placement mattered because the first group had priority in clothing, received the highest wages, and had the privilege of leaving the camp for family visits. Members of the third group endured the strictest security, received the lowest wages, and had no privileges. They were also deployed on the worst, most difficult assignments; the guards often beat them and forced them to work to exhaustion. Their daily working hours were constantly prolonged. During what should have been their normal "breaks," their tasks included obtaining water and cleaning toilets.

On March 10, 1943, the Police General Command sent 10 gendarmes to the camp. The camp commander, also the commander of the gendarmes, was František Krasňanský; he oversaw organization, security, training, and discipline, and Ján Znamenák served as his deputy.⁴ The gendarmes were armed and authorized to use deadly force as necessary. When disciplinary problems arose, the forced laborers' detention was lengthened, or they were threatened with transport to the Ilava penal camp as enemies of the state.

The forced laborers worked in teams comprised of nine members and a leader. Three to five teams worked in a squad. They were paid a token wage of 10 Slovak crowns (Ks) per day (before deductions) that was so low that it did not even cover the costs of food and housing (11 Ks per day). In addition, the Ladislav Hits firm withheld money from the prisoners' wages to cover social insurance, equipment rental, and camp maintenance fees. After all these deductions, only 2 Ks remained per day. Ladislav Hits applied to the Ministry of Transportation and Public Works (Ministerstvo dopravy a verejných prác, MDVP) for reimbursement for the wages it paid to the prisoners, but this request was denied.⁵

At the Revúca camp, food and medical attention were substandard. Not much is known about the camp diet, other than that the rations were very small and drew frequent complaints. The inmates received coffee or soup in the morning and then only one course each for lunch and dinner. Dr. Ludovít Herald, the district doctor, was the physician responsible for health care at the camp, but visited infrequently. Because he was very busy in his clinic in the village, the gendarmes took the sick workers there.

The horrible working conditions and very low wages prompted a large number of escapes. The camp commander justified this high escape rate to the MV by explaining that he had only 10 gendarmes to guard the laborers working on the railway line, which was 7 kilometers (4.35 miles) in length and was surrounded by forests. In 1944, the inmates had to turn in their shoes and clothes at night to minimize escapes.⁶

Despite the harsh conditions, the inmates were able to engage in some supervised religious and cultural activities. Each Sunday, the Revúca priest celebrated Mass at 8 A.M. at the camp. There were movies shown in the camp as well. In addition, the workers formed a soccer team and played against the Revúca club.

A representative from the Interior Ministry, Ján Huban, visited the camp on December 14, 1943. He saw that the inmates were housed in one barrack, which was not insulated and had gaps in the walls and roof. On December 11, 1943, the inmates were moved to a wooden house across from the wooden barrack.⁷

On September 1, 1943, 130 “asocials” and 154 Roma were working at Revúca. At the beginning of the summer of 1944, 49 “asocials” and 51 Gypsies remained in the camp. The MV liquidated the camp on June 10, 1944. Some of the “asocials” were released, others were transported to the camp at Dubnica nad Váhom, and still others fled.

SOURCES Information about the Revúca camp can be found in Ctibor Nečas, českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brně, 1994); Ivan Kamenec, “Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovních táborů a středisk na Slovensku v letech 1942–1944,” in Nové obzory č. 8: Spoločenskovedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38; Karol Janas, Zabudnuté Tábor (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); Július Táncoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002); and Marek Danko, “Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary” (Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, Košice), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/.

Primary sources on the Revúca camp can be found at SNA, available at USHMMA as RG-57.001M, mainly in reels 177, 187, and 188. PÚs are also briefly mentioned in postwar collaborator trials. Published documents on the MV can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA contains seven testimonies that mention the Revúca camp.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Revúca-zriadenie pracovného útvaru,” March 4, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), reel 177, box 550, file 5 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/550/5).

2. “Zápisnica,” December 14, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/549/3.

3. “Pracovný útvar v Revúcej—vykonanie prehliadky,” July 2, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/549/3.

4. “Revúca—zriadenie pracovného tábora,” November 7, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/549/3.

5. Ibid.; “Pracovný útvar,” November 5, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/549/3.

6. “Revúca, pracovný útvar—neprístojnost, šetrenie,” October 7, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/549/3.

7. “Pracovný útvar,” November 5, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/177/549/3.

SERED'

Sered' (in some sources referred to as Sered' nad Váhom) is located 49 kilometers (30 miles) east-northeast of Bratislava. On September 18, 1941, on the orders of the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV), the construction of the labor camp for Jews started in Sered'. Jewish workers reconstructed the former military storehouses and built new barracks in the town.¹ The camp, which was supposed to hold 3,000 people, never reached this capacity, but served as a transit camp, labor camp, and, finally, from September 1944 to March 1945, a Nazi SS-run detention and penal camp.

Several months after the start of construction, the Slovak government began to organize deportations of Jews from Slovakia to German-occupied Poland. As in the case of the camp in Nováky, MV had decided to use the camp in Sered' as the transit and concentration camp: the official name of the camp was Concentration Center for Jews in Sered' (Koncentračné stredisko Židov in Sered'). On March 2, 1942, Jozef Vozár, a 34-year old member of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) and former locksmith, became the camp's commander. Surrounded by barbed wire, it was guarded by 56 HG members who committed violent crimes against Jews prior to their deportation.² Three full transports and five smaller transports carrying 4,463 people departed Sered' by the end of September 1942. Full transports with the requested quota of 1,000 people departed on March 28, April 12, and April 21, 1942.³ Smaller, so-called supplementary transports headed to the Žilina concentration center where the prisoners were placed temporarily. The value of the confiscated Jewish property was estimated to be at least 200,000 Slovak crowns (Ks).⁴

During the period of these deportations, inmates of the camp were divided into two categories: inmates (zaištenci) and forced laborers (zaradenci). The first workshops started to operate at this time.

Imrich Vašina, the former commander of the Bratislava-Patrónka camp, replaced Vozár on September 1, 1942. Described as a cruel man, who once beat up a Jewish girl during a roll call until she fainted, Vašina took advantage of his authority, which eventually led to his dismissal.⁵

From the end of September 1942, Sered' became a labor camp, whose revenues were progressively generated by a wide range of profitable workshops, as well as gardening and farming. The difficult living conditions improved slightly during the labor camp phase. Prisoners slept on two-tiered wooden bunks and worked in various workshops throughout the day. The most important and surprisingly well-equipped facility was the woodworking workshop. It produced various products, from furniture and wooden interiors to stairs and windows. Workers in Sered' produced very high-quality goods; even Slovak Interior Minister Alexander Mach had his furniture built in Sered'.⁶ Toys, clothes, hats, luggage, knitwear, and lace items were also produced in various workshops by Jewish men, women, and children. Angora rabbits were raised for their fur. Cardboard, concrete tubes, and various chemicals were also produced.⁷ Although the labor camp only began production in 1942, in 1943 its turnover was 17 million Ks and its profit about 2 million Ks, greater than that generated by the Nováky and Vyhne labor camps.⁸

An eight-member Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR), headed by Alexander Pressburger, helped run the labor camp.⁹ Many Jews participated in cultural and physical activities outside of work. The physical training department was created in September 1942, when the commander allowed the prisoners to play soccer in the camp yard. The theater department arranged its first performances on December 5 and 6, 1942, which generated such interest that performances became a regular occurrence. Indoor games, including table tennis, chess, and dominos, were popular. As at Nováky, Jews were allowed to participate in numerous educational courses outside of working hours, and a library was established in November 1942.¹⁰ Religious services took place, but the Jewish converts to Christianity were privileged in this respect.¹¹

A children's school opened officially in Sered' in January 1943, but it had existed unofficially since November 1942. Originally two and then, in October 1943, three teachers were appointed for the two classes.¹² Apprenticeships in camp workshops brought the students into the production process. Summer holidays for children were organized in the same way as at Nováky: they could leave the camp to stay with Jewish families, at their expense. A nursery and a children's home were available for the youngest children.¹³

Living quarters at the Sered' labor camp, early 1940s.
USHMM WS #83095, COURTESY OF THE SLOVENSKY NARODNY ARCHIV.

The camp in Sered' was unique in one respect: the Jewish hospital in Bratislava (Židovská nemocnica v Bratislave) was moved from Bratislava to the Sered' camp on July 17, 1942. It consisted of 22 rooms—accommodating 120 to 150 patients—on one level of a former military warehouse.¹⁴ There were 6 physicians and 10 certified nurses working in the hospital. Originally it was not subordinated to the commander of the camp and struggled with financial problems, however, because its budget relied on patient fees.¹⁵ In May 1943, the hospital was converted into a hospital for Jews from all over Slovakia. Jews living outside the camps had to pay for any medical treatment received.¹⁶ It mainly served the Jewish inmates of labor camps and labor centers.

From the medical viewpoint, the situation in the camp was comparatively tolerable. Many people were overworked; mental disorders were common. Despite inoculations, there were cases of typhoid, diphtheria, and whooping cough. Most of the diseases were caused by unsanitary conditions. The Jewish hospital often nursed the victims of HG beatings.

The size of the HG force gradually decreased. By the end of March 1944, only six members of the HG remained, and eventually all were replaced by gendarmes.¹⁷ At that time the camp also received a new commander, Jozef Pilník; however, in May he was replaced by Jozef Juraj Matuščin, who held this post until the camp's dissolution.¹⁸ All these changes helped slightly improve the very harsh conditions for the Jews.

In 1944, the number of escapes from the camp increased. In expectation of an armed uprising, some prisoners organized an underground movement, but its scope and preparation were not as extensive as at Nováky. Communication between the Sered' group and the partisans was hindered by the camp's strategically unfavorable location. However, despite the great risk, three illegal organizations operated inside the camp: the Communist Party of Slovakia (Komunistická strana Slovenska, KSS), Hashomer Hacair, and Makabi Hacair, the latter two left-leaning Zionist youth organizations.

After the outbreak of the Slovak National Uprising on August 29, 1944, the camp fences were breached, and many inmates escaped. Some then participated in the revolt. However, the town of Sered' was soon occupied by German units, and the camp was robbed by German soldiers. On September 12, 1944, the Einsatzgruppe H der Sipo und des SD, which established its headquarters in Bratislava, sent 33 members of the SS into the Sered' camp, which then became a detention and penal camp.¹⁹ During the next two weeks, units subordinated to Einsatzgruppe H, including the Slovak HG units and other security bodies, brought hundreds of Jews, whom they had arrested during their advance, into the Sered' camp. The camp became overcrowded with Jewish prisoners very soon, reaching a population of about 3,000 inmates.²⁰ This was more than double the camp's maximum capacity. During these two weeks Jews were not deported from Sered', but numerous cases of harassment, rape, and murder occurred.²¹

In the last few days of September 1944 (the exact date is unknown), SS-Hauptsturmführer Alois Brunner, Adolf Eich-mann's right-hand man, took over the camp and started to organize transports of Jews. Brunner organized 11 transports of approximately 11,500 people from Sered' to Auschwitz II-Birkenau, Sachsenhausen, Bergen-Belsen, and Terezín between September 30, 1944, and March 31, 1945.²² During Brunner's tenure at Sered', Emanuel Kolm, originally from Vienna, was the Judenälteste of the camp, and several workshops were in operation. For some period of time, hundreds of partisans and people suspected of supporting the uprising were held in Sered' in a separate block.²³ At least 44 Jewish and non-Jewish prisoners were shot during that period.

The Red Army liberated the camp on April 1, 1945.

SOURCES Sered' is mentioned in numerous secondary sources about wartime Slovakia. This essay builds on the introduction in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004), which also reproduces primary documents about the camp. The most comprehensive book about the camp is by Ján Hlavinka and Eduard Nižňanský, Pracovný a koncentračný tábor v Seredi 1941–1945 (Bratislava: Dokumentačné stredisko holokaustu, 2009). Scholarly articles that mention Sered' include Katarína Hradská, "Deportácie slovenských Židov v rokoch 1944–45 so zreteľom na transporty do Terezína," Hč 45: 3 (1997): 455–471; Gila Fatran, "Die Deportation der Juden aus der Slowakei 1944–1945," Bohemia 37:1 (1996): 99–119; and Vlasta Kládiová, "Osudy židovských transportů ze Slovenska do Osvětimi," in Dezider Tóth, ed., Tragédia slovenských Židov: materiály z medzinárodného sympózia, Banská Bystrica 25–27 marca 1992 (Banská Bystrica: Datei, 1992), pp. 139–166. A memorial website about the camp's history is available at www.edah.sk/zidia/snm—mzk—muzeum-holokaustu-sered.

Primary sources on Sered' can be found at USHMMA, which holds microform copies of documentation from SNA under RG-57.001M, reels 21, 47, and 190; and SNA's Slovakian Jewish Labor Camps collection (Acc. No. 1998.A.0303). At USHMMA, personal collections include the Peter O. Vlcko papers (RG-20.015*01); Hana Kovanic photographs (Acc. No. 2003.416.1); Elizabeth Kardos Langelder Kux collection (Acc. No. 2007.224); Michael A. Diamond papers (RG-10.404); and the Avraham Abba Frieder collection, including Z denníka mladého rabína (Bratislava: Slovenské Národné Múzeum, 1993). VHA holds 227 testimonies that include information on Sered'.

Eduard Nižňanský, Vanda Rajcan, and Ján Hlavinka
Trans. Marianna Kramarikova

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA fond MV, reel 21, box 227, file 6 (unpaginated) (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/21/227/6); SNA, 61/42, 1258/44.
2. SNA, fond MV, 1464/43.
3. Hlavinka and Nižňanský, Pracovný a koncentračný tábor v Seredi 1941–1945, pp. 3–36.
4. "Priloha," n.d., SNA, fond MV, 21/227/6.
5. VHA #41802, Shari Shayo testimony, March 10, 1998.
6. "Hlásenie veliteľ'a žid. strediska, Sered', I. Vašinu," September 8, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/42/259/11643; SNA, fond MV, 1358/43.

7. "Hlásenie veliteľ'a žid. strediska, Sered', I. Vašinu"; SNA, fond MV, 01/42; 421/43; 1498/43; 1586/43; 1370/43; 1498/43.

8. SNA, fond MV, box 578, 1249/44.

9. "Pracovné tábory a strediská," July 20, 1943, SNA, fond MV, box 478, 406-545-12, 1483/44, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 244–245 (Doc. 112).

10. USHMMA, RG-57.0010M, SNA, 119/419/8; SNA, fond MV, 421/43, 12 817/42; and fond ÚHÚ, II A-173/44.

11. SNA, fond MV, 1958/43; 1666/43; 13569/42, 1498/43; 1306/44.

12. SNA, fond MV, 1958/43, 1833/43; 1958/43; 1442/44; 13533/42; 421/43; 11655/42; 1409/44; 1267/43; Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 149; Hlavinka and Nižňanský, Pracovný a koncentračný tábor v Seredi 1941–1945, pp. 88–89.

13. "Zriadenie jasiel-praktické vyučovanie," October 14, 1942, SNA, fond MV, box 262, 11269/42, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 154 (Doc. 81).

14. "Správa o Židovskej Nemocnici v Seredi," n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M/47/271/19.

15. Ibid.

16. Ibid.

17. USHMMA, RG-57.001M/190/579/39.

18. Ibid.

19. Archiv bezpečnostních složek (ABS), Prague, fond 325, 325-165-1.

20. Testimony of Alexander Gregor, Archív Ústavu pamäti národa (AUPN), Bratislava, f. BA-S, S-98.

21. Testimony of Vojtech Kvetňanský, Yad Vashem Archives, YVA, M.48/940; ABS, fond 325, 325-90-7; ABS, fond 319, 319-13-4.

22. YVA, M.48/940; Gila Fatran, "Die Deportation der Juden aus der Slowakei 1944–1945," Bohemia. Zeitschrift für Geschichte und Kultur der böhmischen Länder 37 (1996): 118.

23. Testimonies of Juraj Roth, Alexander Gregor (Weiss), and Ján Lachký, YVA, M.48/940.

SVÄTÝ JUR

The village of Svätý Jur is located about 14 kilometers (9 miles) northeast of Bratislava. On June 19, 1943, the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) and the waterway company, Slovenské dolnomoravské vodné družstvo (Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative; Moravod), signed an agreement to create a forced labor camp for Jews—sometimes referred to as a work center (pracovné stredisko, PS)—to construct a canal on the Šúr River. The camp was created on July 3, 1943, just outside the village, and held 133 forced laborers.¹

The Svätý Jur camp prisoners were former military personnel from the Sixth Labor Battalion (Šiesty robotný prápor, ŠP) who were released by the Slovak National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) on June 1, 1943, and placed under MV jurisdiction. At the end of 1943, 99 men remained in the camp. All of them were single, and 87 were classified as Jewish.²

The forced laborers lived in barracks and animal sheds just outside of the village and were prohibited from entering Svätý Jur.

The Slovak Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) was responsible for security in the camp and at the work site. The camp commander was Jozef Kotlárík. The camp was required to adhere to laws from the “Rules of the Jewish Labor Camps” (“Poriadok židovských pracovných táborov”).³

According to the agreed-on contract with Moravod, the employer was responsible for paying small monthly wages and providing housing to both forced laborers and HG personnel, as well as office space for the HG. The Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR) assisted with the camp’s administration. Ján Engel headed the ŽR, and Ľudovít Schulz was his deputy, Alazár Kosenfeld was charged with taking care of health issues, and Ladislav Kardoš was responsible for social services.⁴

On November 18, 1943, Moravod suggested that the camp be liquidated because there was not enough work to justify its continued existence. When the camp was closed on December 13, 1943, the forced laborers were moved to the Kostolná or Kral’ovany camps, and the barracks were returned to Moravod.⁵

SOURCES Limited secondary information on the Svätý Jur forced labor camp can be found in Marek Danko, Internáčne zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné úvarty (Košice: Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, 2010); Ružena Bubeníčková, Ludmila Kubaltová, and Irena Malá, Tábory utrpení a smrti (Prague: Svoboda, 1969); and Vladimír Vavrinský, Tábory nútenej práce na Slovensku v rokoch 1941–1953 (Banská Bystrica: Univerzita Mateja Bela, 2004).

Primary sources documenting the Svätý Jur forced labor camp can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), reels 158, 185, 187, and 190. Published primary sources can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA holds 15 testimonies that mention Svätý Jur.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Pracovné stredisko židov pri stavbe obvodného kanálu “Šúr” v Sv. Jure sriadenie,” July 3, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 185, box 571, file 14 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 185/571/14).

2. “Štatút pre židovské tábory a strediská,” n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 190/581/2.

3. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 185/571/14.

4. “Pracovné stredisko židov vo Svätom Jure—židovská rada zriadenie,” July 15, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 185/571/15.

5. “Odsunovací plan prac. Stredísk,” December 10, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 187/574/25.

ÚSTIE NAD ORAVOU

Ústie nad Oravou is located 227 kilometers (141 miles) east-northeast of Bratislava. Negotiations to create a labor camp there began in the summer of 1942, when the engineering firm of Bugan and Danišovič requested 400 laborers for the construction of the Orava dam, for which it had a state contract. However, because the firm could not provide housing for these laborers, the negotiations were tabled until 1943. On August 20, 1943, Peter Starinský, director of the Slovak State Security Headquarters (Ústredňa štátnej bezpečnosti, ÚŠB), wrote a memo to the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) about the need to establish a camp for arrested Ukrainian civilians, to eliminate potential state security breaches.^{1,2} The MV agreed and created the Ústie nad Oravou forced labor camp on August 28, 1943.³

Before the camp was created, work on the Orava dam was progressing slowly because of the small workforce; in fact, only 70 people were working on the project at that time. When the MV approved the camp, the Bugan and Danišovič firm built two wooden barracks for the newly acquired workforce, with a capacity of up to 300 people. The barracks were built on concrete foundations and were in adequate shape. Inside the barracks were three-tiered bunks with pillows and blankets, and heating was provided by boilers. The firm provided food in consultation with the camp’s commander. It also supplied the required silverware, plates, and glasses.

In addition to the two barracks, another building housed a communal kitchen, three additional rooms, and storage space. The camp also included a potable water source as well as 10 toilets, showers, hot water, and sinks.⁴ The barracks were surrounded by a wooden fence, and the firm had plans to further secure the camp site. A Jewish doctor provided health care. Women also worked in the labor camp and were housed separately from the men.

The forced laborers, all born between 1917 and 1922, worked 8- to 11-hour shifts. They were awakened at 5 A.M. daily and worked from 6 A.M. until noon and then from 1:30 P.M. until 6:30 P.M. On September 29, 1943, 34 Ukrainians, both men and women, worked in the camp and earned 55 Slovak crowns (Ks) per day, but of this amount 16 Ks were paid for rations and housing.

The camp commander was Eduard Koseček, and his deputy was Štefan Kamenský. Six additional gendarmes were responsible for the camp’s security. The district gendarmes office provided food and accommodations for them.⁵ The MV had requested eight energetic and trustworthy gendarmes, at least two with previous camp experience and at least two who spoke Ukrainian.⁶

Koseček’s reports suggest that conditions were relatively good during the camp’s first several months: they did not list any complaints from the camp’s workers, which was remarkable for a forced labor camp.⁷ The camp commander encountered a few issues with the cooks, however. He fired Vincenc Tomášek because, according to the report, he mismanaged food rations.⁸ In addition, the commander continuously noted the lack of clothing and shoes of the workers and asked the MV to provide sufficient footwear. In fact, many workers did not have any shoes and wore only scraps of clothing while working on the site.⁹

The number of workers in the camp fluctuated. Conditions worsened for laborers when Slovak Roma (also referred to as Gypsies, Cigáni, in Slovak police reports) were brought to the camp to augment the insufficient workforce. Between 100 and 300 additional workers, mostly Roma, arrived at the camp in September 1943; many were in poor health and lacked adequate clothing. The firm was obligated to provide shoes, clothing, and a sufficient number of gendarmes for the site. However, not only were the Roma's requests for clothing and proper shoes denied but also the camp commander told the gendarmes to beat them.¹⁰ Some of the workers who did receive clothing found that they were infested with lice. The food—both the size of the rations and their quality—worsened. The MV directed the camp leaders to house the Roma in separate barracks from the Ukrainians and to limit their interactions.¹¹

On October 5, 1943, the camp commander addressed the poor clothing conditions once again in a report to the MV. He argued that the laborers were not dressed properly, and because the Upper Moravia climate was particularly harsh, they could not work.¹² On November 2, 1943, the camp commander sent workers to the project in -7° C degrees Celsius (19° Fahrenheit). Four workers were shoeless. Some laborers attempted to flee the site, and others refused to work in the subzero temperatures of the following week.

On November 12, 1943, in a military order, the MV issued stricter guidelines for the administration of the camp. The orders prohibited card playing and all walks. It also created an emergency prison for laborers who misbehaved. The order restricted movement to and from the camp to staff and only to those who had special permission from the camp commander.¹³ Ten laborers fled, but were recaptured by local police forces and returned to the camp. The firm did not request additional laborers after November due to harsh weather.

The camp was liquidated on December 31, 1944, when the non-Roma laborers were freed and the Roma laborers were moved to the Dubnica nad Váhom camp. The dam was completed and still functions.

SOURCES Information about this camp can be found in Ctibor Nečas, Českoslovenští Romové v letech 1938–1945 (Brno: Masarykova univerzita v Brně, 1994); Ivan Kamenec, “Vznik a vývoj židovských pracovních táborů a středisk na Slovensku v letech 1942–1944,” in Nové obzory č. 8: Spoločenskovedný zborník východného Slovenska (Košice: Múzeum Slovenskej republiky rád v Prešove, 1966), pp. 15–38; Karol Janas, Zabudnuté tábory (Trenčín: Trenčianska univerzita Alexandra Dubčeka v Trenčíne, 2008); Július Tancoš and René Lužica, Zatratení a zabudnutí (Bratislava: Iris, 2002); and Marek Danko, “Internáčné zariadenia v Slovenskej republike (1939–1945) so zreteľom na pracovné útvary” (Spoločenskovedný ústav SAV, Košice), available at www.saske.sk/cas/zoznam-rocnikov/2010/1/5813/.

Primary sources on the Ústie nad Oravou camp can be found at SNA, available at USHMMA as RG-57.001M, mainly in reels 177, 187, and 188. Additional documents can be accessed in the SNA, fond MV, boxes 549, 551, 1894, and 2440. Published documents can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Ukrajinskí robotníci—zaradenie do práce,” August, 20, 1943, SNA, fond MV, box 551, folder D1197, file 43 (SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43).

2. “Zápisnica,” August 20, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

3. “Pracovný útvar Ústie nad Oravou,” n.d., SNA, fond MV, 549/1087/43.

4. “Pracovný útvar v Ústí nad Or. zriadenie,” September 6, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

5. “Zriadenie pracovného útvaru v Ústí nad Oravou,” September 8, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

6. “Pracovný útvar v Ústí nad Or. zriadenie,” September 6, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

7. “Pracovný útvar Ústie nad Oravou,” n.d., SNA, fond MV, 549/1087/43.

8. Ibid.

9. Ibid.

10. “Vodná nádrž na Orave,” November 4, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

11. “Pracovný útvar v Ústí nad Oravou—postupné dodávanie asociálnych osôb,” October 4, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

12. “Pracovný tábor ukrajinských útečencov v Ústí nad Oravou,” October 5, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1197/43.

13. “Zápisnica,” November 12, 1943, SNA, fond MV, 551/D1198/43.

VELKÝ KÝR

Located 78 kilometers (49 miles) east of Bratislava, Veľký Kýr, which is near the city of Nitra (Hungarian: Nagy-Kér and later Nyitraagykér), was the second camp created near the demarcation line established between Slovakia and Hungary after the First Vienna Award of November 2, 1938. Together with Miloslavov, the establishment of Veľký Kýr was part of the Slovak government's first attempt to expel Jews from Slovak territory in late 1938, less than one month after the promulgation of Slovak autonomy on October 6, 1938.

A day before the First Vienna Award was announced, a pro-Hungarian demonstration took place in Bratislava, at which local police arrested several Jews. Once the decision made by the high powers about the new borders with Hungary was known, Ludáks blamed the Jews for it. At the Carlton Hotel in Bratislava, on November 3, 1938, a meeting of several Ludáks members took place to discuss the “Jewish Question.” Among the conferees were SS-Obersturmführer Adolf Eichmann, who had arrived from Vienna; radical HSEŠ member and lawyer Jozef Faláth, Chief of the Academic Hlinka Guard (Akademická Hlinkova garda); and Jozef Kirschbaum, as well as the head of the Deutsche Partei Franz Karmasin.¹ The deportation of Jews to the Hungarian occupied territories was proposed at the meeting, and the proposal was submitted to Prime Minister Jozef Tiso on November 4.² After Tiso approved the proposal, he instructed Faláth to take charge of its implementation. On the very same day, Faláth established the Center for the Solution of the Jewish Problem in Slovakia (Centrála pre riešenie židovského problému na Slovensku) at the Police Directorate in Bratislava and instructed the district offices all around Slovakia to arrest Jews “without material sources” and to “push them” to the surrendered territory by midnight of the same day. Jews owning property worth more than 500,000 Czechoslovak crowns (Kč) were to be arrested in order to prevent them from emigrating.³

Deportations began immediately: the HG and gendarmes rounded up Jews and drove them to southern Slovakia, to territory that would soon be Hungarian, and left them in open lands with just 50 Kč per person. A few hours later, the original order was changed, and instead of Jews without property, Jews of foreign citizenship became the target of deportation.⁴

As soon as Hungarian police rounded up these Jews, it returned them to the temporary “no man’s land” between Hungary and Slovakia, where the camps at Miloslavov and Veľký Kýr had been created in early November. Neither country claimed responsibility for these camps, and each blamed the other for their existence. The demarcation line included a 3-kilometer (1.86-mile) neutral zone and another 1.5-kilometer (0.9-mile) zone that the Slovak Army was not supposed to cross. The returned Jews were beaten, tortured, and denied food.

The deportation was stopped on November 7, 1938, based on Tiso’s order. However, about 7,500 Jews had already been deported from all over Slovakia to various places in that “no man’s land.”⁵ Conditions in the Veľký Kýr camp were inhumane; there was no shelter, and the interned Jews had brought very little food along with them. The elderly and the children, in particular, became sick in the cold and rainy November weather.

On November 26, 1938, Slovak and Hungarian authorities met in Veľký Kýr to discuss the “Jewish Question.” The agreement that they signed allowed those Jews who could prove their Czechoslovak citizenship to enter Slovak territory. The Slovak Country Office (Krajinský úrad, KÚ) affirmed this agreement on December 1, 1938, but added that for each Czechoslovak citizen, one Hungarian citizen would be sent to Hungary.⁶ Therefore, while the agreement remained in force, implementation was slow, and hundreds of people languished in the Veľký Kýr and Miloslavov camps in desolate conditions. The lack of food, shelter, and hygiene created serious health problems, which proved risky to the border police and villagers as well.

As the situation in the camp reached a critical state, Jewish organizations in Bratislava attempted to intervene. On November 29, 1938, the president of the Orthodox Religious Communities wrote to Slovak prime minister Jozef Tiso regarding the camps in Miloslavov and Veľký Kýr, outlining the horrid conditions experienced by the detainees. According to his letter of November 29, 1938, there were 344 people interned at Veľký Kýr: 132 men, 73 women, and 139 children of various ages.⁷ The Jewish organization suggested ways to improve their conditions at the Jewish community’s expense, and not that of the local or national government. For example, all Jews unable to return to their homes or who could not be taken in by family members could be housed in buildings owned by Jewish organizations under Slovak police control, such as the old Jewish hospital in Bratislava. The organization promised to take care of the Jews’ housing, food, and medical care. For those holding Slovak citizenship, the president of the organization asked for permission for their return to specific cities. For those not allowed to return, he asked for a respite before deportation to allow them to liquidate their property and other matters before departing Slovakia. He assured the prime minister that every phase of this plan would be implemented and paid for by Jewish organizations and that the detainees would not be in anyone’s way. In addition, the Jewish community would serve as a liaison with foreign offices and foreign non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to facilitate immigration. The organization offered to provide financial assistance for those returning to Subcarpathian Rus’ or Poland.⁸

Even though the Jewish organizations in Bratislava provided help and supplies to those in the camp, their living conditions worsened drastically after heavy rains and cold temperatures. Local officials were afraid the camp would become a security risk and warned against the possibility of epidemics, which threatened the surrounding villages and guards in the camp.

On December 8, 1938, KÚ allowed the Jews who lived in Veľký Kýr and Miloslavov to return to the Slovak territory of Czechoslovakia. Jews who had legal domiciles in Slovak territory could return to their home towns and villages and were to be brought there by their “home” district authorities (district offices).⁹

On December 12, 1938, the KÚ informed the districts that they were able to transport home local Jews on Tuesdays and Fridays. They were required to bring police escort and a truck, and all expenses were to be paid by the Jewish religious community.¹⁰ Thus, for example, Móric Silberberg, his wife Berta, and daughter Aranka were transported from the Veľký Kýr camp to Bánovce nad Bebravou on December 16, 1938. They were disinfected in the county hospital in Nitra and temporarily housed in the Jewish poorhouse at the Jewish community’s expense.¹¹

Those Jews whose official domicile before deportation from Slovakia was in Czech lands, Subcarpathian Rus, or Poland, were sent there. Some were interned again in camps in Patrónka (Bratislava), Nitra, and Zlaté Moravce under gendarme and HG control.

A group of 158 Jews who arrived in Veľký Kýr on November 4, 1938, was taken back to Slovakia on February 21, 1939. It is unclear, however, when the camp was liquidated and under what conditions.¹²

SOURCES Very little information exists about Veľký Kýr. Brief mention of the camp can be found in Ivan Kamenec, Po stopách tragédie (Bratislava: H & H, 2007); Ladislav Lipscher, Židia v slovenskom štáte, 1939–1945 (Bratislava: Printservis, 1992); and Eduard Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku medzi československou parlamentnou demokraciou a Slovenským štátom v stredoeurópskom kontexte (Prešov: Universum, 1999), Primary documents about the camp can be found in SNA, available in microform at USHMM as RG-57.001M, reels 26 and 178. Published primary sources on the camp can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie (6.10.1938–14.3.1939) (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2001).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku, p. 39.
2. Ibid., 40.
3. Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, pp. 228–229 (Doc. 110).
4. “Úradný zoznam,” December 4, 1946, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, p. 241 (Doc. 118).
5. Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku, p. 54.
6. Ibid., 60–61.
7. “Umiestnenie vyhostených židov, nachadzajúcich sa na hraniciach pri Mischdorfe a pri Nitre,” November 29, 1938, SNA, fond KÚ-Presidium, box 309, bez čísla, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, pp. 250–252 (Doc. 125).
8. Ibid., p. 252.
9. Nižňanský, Židovská komunita na Slovensku, p. 62.
10. Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku: Obdobie autonómie, pp. 234–237 (Doc. 116).
11. “Hlásenie,” December 17, 1938, ŠOKA Topolčany, fond Okresný Úrad v Bánovciach nad Bebravou, box 66, 522/41 prez., reprinted in ibid., 6: 259–290 (Doc. 134).
12. “Židovská otázka na Slovensku,” February 21, 1939, SNA, fond KÚ-Presidium, box 309, 77581/1938 prez., reprinted in ibid., 6: 258–259 (Doc. 131).

VYHNE

Located 140 kilometers (87 miles) northeast of Bratislava, Vyhne was the smallest of the three labor camps set up by the Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV). During the camp's first phase, from February 1940 to February 1942, the barracks housed 326 Jewish refugees from German territories who had been imprisoned in Sosnowiec, Poland. Under the so-called Nisko operation, one of the first deportations of Jews from Nazi Germany, a transport left Ostrava for Nisko, but got stuck in Sosnowiec on November 1, 1939, after a wooden bridge near Zarzecze collapsed.¹ On December 14, 1939, the Jewish Central Bureau (Židovská ústredná úradovňa, ŽÚÚ) lobbied the MV to provide temporary housing for these Jews prior to their immigration to Palestine, and the MV agreed to establish a camp at Vyhne.

The small spa town seemed suitable for a camp because the baths were no longer in use. Their owner, a Jewish woman, Dr. Alžbeta Forgáčová (neé Ungárova), lived in Budapest at the time. Not only was the spa isolated from the town of Vyhne but also the nearest railway station was in Bzenica, 7 kilometers (4.35 miles) away.² The camp consisted of the Old Bath House with 42 rooms, the New Bath House with 35 rooms, Hell's House with 42 rooms, and the Park House with 2 rooms. The Jews paid 2.50 Slovak crowns (Ks) for room and board and an additional 1.67 Ks per month for linen.³

The Vyhne camp was originally supervised by the District Office in Nová Baňa and the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) commander in Vyhne: Izidor Luptovský. Since the district office in Nová Baňa was located 27.8 kilometers (17.3 miles) southwest of Vyhne, Luptovský had broad powers, which included giving passes for Jews to leave the camp.⁴ The camp itself was established and financially supported by the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (AJJDC), which helped Jews from Germany immigrate to the United States. The MV agreed to house these Jews for a few months while the AJJDC, with direct cooperation from the ŽÚÚ, helped the Jews to immigrate.⁵ Many MV documents concern the activities of the Jews outside of the camp or the monitoring of their behavior in the camp. Although the camp was not encircled by barbed wire, contact with the local population was prohibited. There was a sign at the camp's entrance warning Aryans not to enter.⁶ Many baptized Jews, those with papers protecting them from deportation, and those who bribed HG were among those living in Vyhne.⁷

Changes occurred in Vyhne in early 1942. On February 14, 1942, the MV converted it to a labor camp similar to Sered' and Nováky. The next day, the HG High Command appointed Ján Gindl as camp commander.⁸ At that time, the deportation of Slovak Jewry was in preparation. Some Jews were deported to German-occupied Poland from Vyhne in March, April, and September 1942. Arguments arose between Luptovský, who was by then a government commissar, and Gindl, regarding the kind of work that Jews had to do. Gindl thought that renovating the spa and constructing a swimming pool would allow Jews to pay their debts to the Vyhne spa for their lodging.⁹ Gindl lived in a nearby villa with his wife and son while two gendarmes lived in a separate barrack in the camp.¹⁰

The camp averaged about 300 workers, an average of under 12 percent of the entire Slovakian labor camp population, making it by far the smallest of the three camps. Jews worked in Vyhne from 6 A.M. to 12 P.M. with a 15-minute break and then from 2 P.M. to 8 P.M., again with a 15-minute break. Men worked 53 hours per week and women worked 48 hours, excluding Sunday.¹¹ In 1942, most of the laborers worked at various construction sites at the spa, including building the swimming pool. Other Jews worked in one of the nine workshops in the camp, producing women's and men's clothing, gloves, and toys. In addition, many processed leather waste for use in shopping bags, wallets, and belts.¹² The workers were not paid, but received room and board, work clothes, and a very small sum of pocket money.¹³

The spa was set up like a hotel and included a number of rooms. Each family was allotted one room, which included four beds, a table, some chairs, and a wardrobe. Each Saturday, the HG made rounds to inspect the rooms. Everyone was lined up, and the guards turned violent if standards were not met. The camp included a large park.

Jewish prisoners building a pool at the Vyhne camp, circa 1942.
USHMM WS #83092, COURTESY OF THE SLOVENSKY NARODNY ARCHIV.

Security was not as tight as in other camps because conditions were relatively satisfactory in Vyhne.¹⁴ A four-member Jewish Council, under the direction of Jozef Safrany and Dr. Ulrich Einhorn, helped run the camp.¹⁵ The food was relatively good; Jewish cooks manned the communal kitchen and fed not only those in the camp but also the guards. Local farms supplied fruits and vegetables. On Saturday afternoons, children in the camp received milk. Jews possessed their own clothing; mail went in and out of the camp regularly, with goods arriving from families on the outside. Jews organized theater presentations, recited Hebrew readings, and played sports. The Vyhne soccer team played against the Nováky team and “beat them decisively.”¹⁶

Children could also leave the camp for summer vacations if they had family members who would take them in.¹⁷ As in other camps, the Jewish Center (Ústredna Židov, ÚŽ) created a school for the laborers’ children. One kindergarten teacher supervised 15 young children. A nine-hour compulsory school day was mandated for children under 10 year of age; those over 10 years old attended school for seven hours and worked an additional two hours in the camp.¹⁸

Two doctors served in the camp’s infirmary; one dentist was also on site. More serious cases were taken to Banská Štiavnica’s hospital 12 kilometers (7.5 miles) away.

Slovak gendarmes replaced the HG in Vyhne on April 1, 1944.¹⁹ Vyhne was liberated after the Slovak National Uprising erupted in late August 1944. By the time the partisans liberated the camp on September 1, 1944, the gendarmes had abandoned their posts. Many young inmates joined the revolt, whereas most others found refuge in areas of Slovakia already liberated by Slovak partisans. Some people remained in the camp because they had nowhere else to go. The camp was officially dissolved on September 21, 1944. At the end of the war, locals plundered the compound and set it on fire.²⁰

SOURCES Secondary sources that briefly describe the camp at Vyhne are Ivan Kamenec, On the Trail of Tragedy (Bratislava: H & H, 2007); Ladislav Lipscher, “Jewish Participation in the Slovak Resistance Movement,” SJA 7:2 (1997): 40–52; and Karen Spira, “Memories of Youth: Slovak Jewish Holocaust Survivors and the Nováky Labor Camp” (unpublished MA thesis, Brandeis University, 2011).

Primary sources on the Vyhne camp can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), reels 34, 112, and 290–300; for charts and maps, see RG-57.010, Slovakian Jewish Labor Camps collection; and for photos and personal collections, see USHMMPA (WS #83090–83092). Published primary documents gathered from ŠOKA and SNA can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Documentačné stredisko holokaustu, 2004). VHA has 12 testimonies that mention Vyhne.

Eduard Nižňanský and Vanda Rajcan
Trans. Marianna Kramarikova

NOTES

1. Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 23.
2. “Vyhne—koncentračný tábor Židov,” n.d. SNA, fond 209, ÚŠB, box 864/6, reprinted in ibid., 5: 102 (Doc. 47).
3. “Zápisnica,” February 5, 1942, SNA, fond MV, box 192, 14-D4-314/42.
4. ŠOKA, Žiar nad Hronom, fond OÚ Nová Baňa, box 27, 542/42; SNA, fond MV, box 192, 14-D4-314/42.
5. “Židovskí utecenci zo Sosnovic v Polsku, povolenie k pricestovaniu na Slovensko,” January 29, 1940, ŠOKA, Žiar nad Hronom, fond OÚ Nová Baňa, box 27, 542/42.
6. VHA #33112, Marta Weiss testimony, September 16, 1997.
7. “Židovský pracovný tabor—Vyhne, Vznik,” June 17, 1942; VHA #19559, Juliana Filová testimony, September 3, 1996.
8. SNA, fond MV, box 192, 14-D4-314/42.
9. “Využitie pracovných síl židov,” June 7, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 112, box 394, file 53 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/112/394/53).
10. ŠOKA, Žiar nad Hronom, fond Notársky úrad vo Vyhniach, box 143, 1306/42; VHA #31071, Zuzana Skácelova testimony, March 15, 1997; VHA #19559, Juliana Filová testimony, September 3, 1996.
11. “Koncentračný tábor cudzozemských Židov vo Vyhniach,” May 15, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/34/237/6384.
12. Ibid.; “Využitie pracovných síl židov,” June 7, 1943.
13. “Výročná správa Židovských táborov 1943,” n.d., AM-SNP, fond IX, S 152/81, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 254–272 (Doc. 117).
14. VHA #19559, Juliana Filová testimony, September 3, 1996.
15. SNA, fond MV, box 278, 406-545-12, 1483/44.
16. Ibid.
17. VHA #33112, Marta Weiss testimony, September 16, 1997.
18. “Výročná správa Židovských táborov 1943.”
19. “Pracovné tábory Židov—dozorná a strážna služba,” April 11, 1944, SNA, fond MV, 581,1472/44, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 282–284 (Doc. 121).
20. VHA #31071, Zuzana Skácelova testimony, March 15, 1997; VHA #19559, Juliana Filová testimony, September 3, 1996.

ŽILINA

Žilina is located 169 kilometers (105 miles) northeast of Bratislava. The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) created the Žilina concentration camp (Koncentračné stredisko Židov) on March 21, 1942, during the preparations for the deportation of Jewish people from Slovakia. The camp was created in the abandoned Štefaniková military barracks on Rajecká Road in Rudiny, in the north of Žilina. The Žilina city council, under the direction of Mayor Vojtech Tvrdý, vehemently opposed the camp's location, so the camp was moved into nearby military barracks, then under Defense Ministry control. Because of Žilina's location, every transport of Jews from Slovakia passed through the town on its way to camps in German-occupied Poland.

The camp initially consisted of six or seven wooden barracks from the abandoned military camp; most lacked flooring. To expand the camp's capacity to 2,900 people, there were plans to build emergency and temporary housing, with its construction expected to take one month. The number of those interned was expected to fluctuate based on the size and number of transports. The camp was surrounded by electrified barbed wire. Only one water source existed in the camp.¹

In addition to military barracks, at least 300 people were housed in the horse stables outside the military barracks. The stables reeked of chemicals and urine. There was some hay, but for the most part, prisoners just slept on the ground. As one survivor described it, "Sanitary conditions there were zero, there was nothing."²

Jews from the entire Slovak territory were concentrated in the camp; often, entire families—men, women, and children—were brought to the camp. The camp held 1,200 people at its peak and a minimum of 150.³ Jews were told they were going to Nazi Germany to work and were allowed to take 50 kilograms (110.2 pounds) of luggage with them. Prisoners slept on wooden boards or hay and used their own blankets. According to survivors, the camp was overcrowded; the people slept next to each other and often on their sides because there was no room to turn over. The men were taken out of the camp daily to work in the city (to clean the streets or perform other public works), while the women worked in and around the camp. The children were not forced to work; they spent their time waiting around or entertaining themselves in the camp.

On March 10, 1942, the MV appointed Rudolf Marček, a former teacher, as camp commander.⁴ Soon after, the MV gave Marček 151,000 Slovak crowns (Ks) for camp maintenance. Marček's deputies included Richter, Malý, and Mútnanský. Security was provided by the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG); the HG also managed the transports under the careful watch of a German advisor. Bullying, humiliation, and physical abuse were rampant. During postwar National Court hearings, Marček admitted that he had to fire 66 of the 75 members of HG because of their brutal treatment of the camp prisoners. Bribes were common in Žilina; Marček admitted that they ranged between 500 and 20,000 Ks. In the beginning, the HG guards were bribed with liquor to "close their eyes" to escape. However, even if bribes were effective in postponing deportation or facilitating escapes, other Jews were taken, in order to reach the transport quotas.

In addition to the HG, privileged Jews were used to control the population. Juraj Klein, nicknamed the "Jewish Commander," was the liaison between the Jewish Center (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ) and the camp command. When bribed he would alter the deportation lists. Soon, his actions were reported to Interior Minister Alexander Mach, and he was sentenced to confinement in the Ilava penal camp. He was hanged for his crimes after the war.

The prisoners were subjected to personal searches on entering the camp, and the HG profited from their charges' misery, stealing most of their valuables and taking bribes. Žilina survivor Alex Hochhäuser noted the poor conditions of the camp in his memoir: "Poverty, filth, and desperate faces of starving people. Very bad hygienic conditions and supply. Fleas and lice, and atrocities from the side of the HG were preconditions of hell in Auschwitz."⁵ The camp commander was responsible for providing food, but because the rations were so minimal, Jewish organizations supplemented them. The rations were given out in the camp corridor, and all the inmates had a clay mug for food. The HG restricted the output of water to barely a drop, so that in the summer people stood in line for hours to get some water.⁶ There was one latrine, and everyone cleaned themselves outside near the stone well.

According to the MV, 19 transports left Žilina, most to Auschwitz. Seven transports went to the Lublin region. The HG beat prisoners on their way to the train, and before boarding, they cut their rucksacks off their backs.⁷ Trains left Žilina at 3:20 A.M. and arrived in Čadca, a town on the Slovak-Polish border, an hour later, where the Jews were turned over to the German authorities.

The last transport from Žilina, and the last from Slovakia in 1942, left on October 20. Several scholars have noted differing number of Jews transported from Žilina. According to published records, 26,384 Jews passed through the camp. The MV liquidated the camp on October 24, 1942. Jews who remained were transferred to Sered' or Nováky; those living in the Žilina district went to Sered'.⁸

SOURCES Secondary literature on the Žilina concentration camp includes Peter Frankl and Pavel Frankl, Židia v Žiline (Žilina: Edis, 2009); Ladislav Lipscher, Židia v Slovenskom štáte 1939–1945 (Bratislava: Printservis, 1992); Waclaw Długoborski et al., eds., The Tragedy of the Jews of Slovakia, 1938–1945: Slovakia and the "Final Solution of the Jewish Question" (Oświęcim: Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum; Banská Bystrica: Museum of the Slovak National Uprising, 2002); Mauro M. Langfelder, Žilina: Il vino e il sangue (Milan: Terzaria, 2003); Vavro Ryžavý, Žilina a Slovenské národné povstanie (New York: Universum Sokol Publications, 1981); Haim Gordon, The Rise and Decline of the Jewish Community of Žilina (Slovakia) (Jerusalem: A. Klein Ltd., 2003); and Jana Stráska, "Koncentračné stredisko v Žiline," AFHUMBW 3:4 (2010): 88–95.

Primary documents about the Žilina concentration camp can be found at SNA, microcopied to USHMMA as RG-57.001M, including reels 22, 23, 111, and 112. Personal collections at USHMMA include the Arie Klein papers (Acc. No. 2005.323.1). Published documents on the Žilina concentration camp can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, ed., Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: Deportácie v roku 1942 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2005). VHA holds 79 testimonies from Žilina survivors. Two published testimonies are by Alexander Hochhäuser, Zufällig überlebt (Berlin: Metropol, 1992); and Marie Magdalena Hornňanová-Jodasová, Neobyčejný život (Prague: Nakl. Jaroslava Poberová, 2005).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. "Koncentračný tábor—Žilina," March 3, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 112, box 394, file 55 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M/112/394/55); USHMMA, RG-57.001M/111/392/18.
2. VHA #36997, Milan Drahoš testimony, October 1, 1997.
3. VHA #06806, Adolf Burger testimony, December 18, 1995.
4. "Sústredenie a preprava Židov," March 12, 1942, SNA, fond MV, box 205/269/1942, reprinted in Nižňanský, Holokaust na Slovensku, 6: 139–143 (Doc. 37).
5. Hochhäuser, Zufällig überlebt, p. 87.
6. VHA #33804, Stella Raab testimony, September 14, 1997.
7. "Žilina," n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 22/ 230/1484.
8. "Žilina," October 25, 1942, USHMMA, RG-57.001M/22/205/596.

ŽILINA/WORK CENTER

Žilina is located 169 kilometers (105 miles) northeast of Bratislava. The Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) officially created the Žilina forced labor camp on December 28, 1942, under Decree 1453/42; however, the camp's dates of existence are disputed by numerous sources. Some sources claim that the camp was active from September 1, 1941, until August 29, 1944, whereas others focus exclusively on 1943.¹ The labor camp, also commonly referred to as a work center (pracovné stredisko), was located on Štefániková Street, Number 7, just outside of the city near the Váh River. More than 250 Jewish forced laborers living in the camp built the soccer stadium for the Municipal Sports Club Žilina (Mestský športový klub Žilina).

The soccer stadium's construction began in late 1940; by the spring of 1941, the lawn, athletic track, and a substantial part of the stands were completed. The first friendly match between Žilina and Banská Bystrica occurred on August 10, 1941. The Žilina district commander (Okresný veliteľ, OV) of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG) was responsible for all matters related to the camp, including supplies, housing, clothing, medical issues, and camp security, which the HG provided. The camp commander, Vojtech Zavodský, also happened to be the patron of the local soccer club.² Not only was Zavodský involved in the construction of the soccer stadium but he also "Aryanized" the plant for the transport of building stone from the quarries. Arpád Stark, the Jewish owner of this plant, his wife, and their two children were sent to a concentration camp and never returned.

The HG was the official employer and had full jurisdiction over the camp. The laborers worked eight-hour shifts; however, their hours were extended if necessary. As the employer, the HG paid Jewish workers based on their marital status. Married Jews received 3.80 Slovak crowns per hour (Ks); single Jews received 3.50 Ks per hour. In addition, the HG provided each laborer three meals a day, clothes, shoes, and housing. The fee for these services was 14.45 Ks per day. Therefore, for married men, their daily earnings decreased from 30.40 Ks to 15.95 Ks; for singles, their pay decreased from 28 Ks to 13.55 Ks per day.³

The construction of the soccer stadium was supposed to take a year, and it continued even in the winter months. On July 20, 1943, Anton Vašek, the head of MV Department 14, which oversaw the "Jewish Question" in Slovakia, reported to Slovak prime minister Alexander Mach that there were 54 people in the camp. This number accounted for 1.4 percent of the total number of people in camps in Slovakia during that time. Of the 54 laborers, 46 were men and 8 were women; 23 were single, 29 married, 1 divorced, and 1 widowed. Thirty-six were "Israelites," and 18 were baptized. Together in 1943, the laborers worked 74,211 hours, and the expenses totaled 318,526.90 Ks.⁴

The laborers continued to live in the camp until the Slovak National Uprising broke out on August 29, 1944. When the antifascist revolt started in Slovakia, the forced laborers were liberated, and many joined the partisans. The stadium, recently renovated, is still in use by the Žilina soccer club.

SOURCES Very little has been written about the work center in Žilina; most publications focus on the nearby transit camp. Some information on the work center can be found in Haim Gordon, The Rise and Decline of the Jewish Community in Žilina (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan, 2003). Some historical information is also provided on the MŠK Žilina's official webpage at www.mskzilina.sk/index.php?url=static&stranka=8.

Primary sources are located at USHMMA in the SNA collection, RG-57.001M, reel 112. Documents on the Žilina work center can also be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004).

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 112, box, 392, file 18.
2. Ibid.
3. Ibid.
4. "Výročná správa židovských pracovných táborov a stredísk 1943," n.d., ANSMP, fond IX, 152/81, reprinted in Nižňanský et al., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: 254 (Doc. 117).

ZOHOR

Zohor is a village located 21 kilometers (13 miles) northwest of Bratislava and approximately 6 kilometers (almost 4 miles) east of the Slovak-Austrian border. On May 31, 1943, the waterway company, Moravod; Ing. Gustáv Hamburger in Skalica, and the Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo vnútra, MV) signed an agreement to create a forced labor camp—at the time referred to as a work center (pracovné stredisko)—just outside of Zohor. The camp, called the “Jewish work center in the construction of levees—Morava River, Zohor” (Pracovné stredisko Židov pri stavbe ochrannej hrádze rieky Moravy v Zohore), held Jewish forced laborers (prislušníci) who erected levees and dug canals on the Morava River.¹

The workers were former forced laborers of the Sixth Labor Battalion (Šiesty robotný prápor, ŠP) who were discharged from the National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO) on June 1, 1943, and thereafter came under MV control. The Jewish Council (Židovská rada, ŽR), created on July 15, 1943, consisted of the chair, Armin Beerman, and Armin Kaudl, who dealt with health and social issues.

The camp commander was Tomáš Vlček, and several members of the Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG), including Viliam Bolgáč, served as guards. Discipline was strict. Moravod was responsible for paying the MV-supervised HG camp guards and for furnishing their provisions and accommodations. The camp operated under the rules and regulations governing forced labor camps for Jews.

Moravod also provided housing for the forced laborers, which included barracks, a communal kitchen, and an office. These barracks were located about 50 meters (164 feet) from the train station and accommodated approximately 150 laborers. Survivors recalled fleas and other pests in the wooden barracks. The forced laborers slept on wooden boards and had military-issued blankets that were also infested with parasites. They wore blue uniforms at work.

On November 24, 1943, Moravod requested that MV dissolve the Zohor camp. When it ceased to exist, the laborers were moved to Kral'ovany, a forced labor camp located 180 kilometers (110 miles) northeast of Zohor. Forty-three young people were also transported to Kral'ovany. The MV ordered them to be ready to leave on December 2, 1943, on the 6:05 A.M. train. Ján Eugen Šallay, the central warehouse manager of Moravod, inspected the barracks on December 15, 1943. The barracks were subsequently returned to the company.²

SOURCES Primary sources on the Zohor camp can be found in USHMMA, RG-57.001M (SNA), reels 158, 187, and 190. Published primary sources on this camp can be found in Eduard Nižňanský, Igor Baka, and Ivan Kamenec, eds., Holokaust na Slovensku, 5: Židovské pracovné tábory a strediská na Slovensku 1938–1944 (Bratislava: Nadácia Milana Šimečku, 2004). VHA holds three testimonies that mention the camp at Zohor.

Vanda Rajcan

NOTES

1. “Pracovné stredisko židov pri stavbe ochrannej hrádze rieky Moravy v Zohore,” July 6, 1943, USHMMA, RG-57.001M, SNA, reel 185, box 571, file 15 (USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 185/517/15).

2. “Pracovné stredisko v Zohore,” n.d., USHMMA, RG-57.001M, 187/574/28.

TUNISIA

Jews who have been rounded up for forced labor march through the streets of Tunis carrying shovels, December 1942.
USHMM WS #07044, COURTESY OF BUNDESARCHIV.

TUNISIA (FRENCH AND ITALIAN CAMPS)

[Editor's note: Because little specific information is available on most of the French and Italian camps in Tunisia, we have chosen to provide a lengthy introduction, including source information, followed by the (necessarily) brief camp entries.]

With regard to the persecution of Jews in North Africa, Tunisia occupies a special place. Unlike Libya, it was not a colony of an Axis power during World War II, but a protectorate of France and thus of an occupied country largely under Nazi Germany's control. Unlike Morocco and Algeria, Tunisia experienced the landing of German troops in November 1942, so that large parts of this country came under direct military occupation by the Wehrmacht. As an ally of the Wehrmacht, Italy also sent army units to Tunisia, although they were de facto under German leadership. Tunisia was also exceptional in that Italy, in the context of its Mediterranean policy, laid claim to the country, and the German authorities took that into account in their occupation policies. At the same time, Nazi Germany was not prepared either to terminate French control over the country or to grant Tunisia independence. Consequently, during the German-Italian occupation of Tunisia there were altercations not only between the independence movement and the French and Italian authorities but also between the German and the Italian authorities. In addition, the French resident-general (résident-général) in Tunis, Amiral Jean-Pierre Esteva, introduced the antisemitic Jewish Law (Statut des juifs) in March 1942.¹ Although this anti-Jewish policy was less onerous than that in Vichy France, it still included "Aryanization" measures. Thus, Tunisian Jews were caught in the middle: between the French Vichy administration; the German persecution apparatus; the independence movement, which in large part was anti-Jewish in orientation; and the Italian authorities, which sought to gain sovereignty over Tunisia in the long term.

Before World War II, there were around 85,000 Jews living in Tunisia, more than half of whom were residents of Tunis, the capital. Most held Tunisian citizenship, and several thousand—primarily foreign soldiers and administrative employees—also had French citizenship. In addition, about 5,000 Jews were Italian citizens. Along with prosperous and well-educated Jews, in the individual Jewish communities there were numerous poor and poorly educated members. Of the Italians living in Tunisia, the Jews were among the most affluent, whereas the Italian non-Jews in many cases were fishermen and simple workers. In 1942, the Italian government protested against the endeavors of the Vichy administration to "Aryanize" Jewish property. It viewed those efforts as an attempt to take possession of the substantial property of these individuals and simultaneously to weaken Italy's position in Tunisia. The Italian government later took the same stance with regard to the Germans' persecution of Jews, because protection of the wealthy Jews was seen at the same time as protection of the Italian "national spirit" (italianità) in Tunisia.

On November 9, 1942, following the invasion of Algeria and Morocco by British and U.S. troops the previous day, the Wehrmacht began landing forces in northern Tunisia—all around the capital and the important port in Bizerte. At the end of November, the German and the less numerous Italian troops were under considerable military pressure to prevent a possible strangulation of the Tunisian bridgehead by the Allies. Finally, in December 1942, the Axis powers succeeded in strengthening their position and expanding the bridgehead by gaining ground.

It was in this phase that the deployment of Jewish forced laborers began. In an order dated December 6, 1942, General der Panzertruppen Walther Nehring, commander of the XC Army Corps, called for the army position held thus far to be improved. Named as auxiliary workers for this improvement were the local population and the Jews. The order requiring the furnishing of workers included the following arrangements for the deployment of Jews:

1. The male Jewish civilian population is to be made available by the SD (Security Service, Sicherheitsdienst) for the performance of earthwork operations, in such a way that initially, as a first installment, 1,000 men are available as a workforce for each of the Bizerte, Tunis-North, and Tunis-South sector commanders.
2. The Jewish work squads are to be formed by the Jewish communities, and an administrative team is to be attached to them. The administrative teams are to be used for cooperative work with the headquarters of division-sized and larger units. They are responsible for the execution of the orders by the work gangs. Otherwise they are to be treated by the field elements as hostages.
3. Supplies and equipment are guaranteed by the Jewish communities. The field elements provide accommodations and appropriate guard forces at the worksites.
4. The work gangs, each 1,000 strong, are to be brought (on foot or rail transport only, where possible) by the SD, after consultation with the sector commanders, to the following locations:
 - Mateur for Bizerte Sector
 - St. Cyprien for Tunis-North Sector
 - Ben Arous for Tunis-South SectorThe sector commanders arrange the other details with the SD through corps headquarters.
5. Payment of the workforce must be made by the Jewish community.²

The order was preceded by a conversation between Nehring; SS-Obersturmbannführer Walter Rauff, who headed the Einsatzkommando Tunis of the Security Police (Sicherheitspolizei, Sipo) and SD following his service in occupied Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union; and Rudolf Rahn, the plenipotentiary who, as the political representative to the commander of the German troops in Tunis between November 1942 and May 1943, represented the German Foreign Office in Tunisia. Thus all the significant German authorities—but none of the Italians—were represented in the essential decision making on the deployment of Jewish forced laborers. Rudolf Rahn claimed that Generaloberst Hans-Jürgen von Arnim—who had taken control of Axis forces on December 8, 1942, as commander of the Fifth Panzer Army in Tunisia—in his capacity as commander-in-chief assigned the Jewish labor companies to individual troop units and issued the order “that the people are to be treated exactly like voluntary workers.”³ This is a euphemistic assertion, because the order dated February 18, 1943, with reference to the improvement of the coastal defense positions, placed the Jewish work detachments on an equal footing with the teams of prisoners; that is, not exactly treated like free Arab workers.

For more information on the organization of forced labor by the German authorities in the country and the Jewish Council in Tunis, set up by German decree on December 6, 1942, and headed by Grand Rabbi Haïm Bellaïche, as well as on the conditions in the labor camps, see the introductory section on Tunisia in Volume 4. It is important to note here that one of the intermediaries between the SD and the Recruitment Committee of Jewish Labor (Comité de Recrutement de la Main-d'Oeuvre Juive), which bore the brunt of the organizational work, was SS-Hauptsturmführer Theodor Sävecke, deputy commander of the SD-Einsatzkommando Tunis, previously the SD's contact man for the Police of Italian Africa (Polizia dell'Africa Italiana) in Libya and later head of the Sipo in Milan. This key position therefore was occupied by a man who had experience in working together with the Italian authorities in North Africa.

According to historian Jacques Sabille, there was a total of about 6,400 Jewish forced laborers in Tunisia. That is, more than one-third of the 17- to 50-year-old age group, which included around 15,000 persons, was rounded up for work. Yet many Jews escaped from the labor camps. While 3,659 Jews were doing work for the Wehrmacht or the Italian Army as long-term detainees or as “home-sleepers” (Heimtschläfer; privately housed and confined to camp during working hours only) on December 20, 1942, only 2,430 remained on February 13, 1943, and by April 25, the number had dropped still further, to only 1,556. Finally, in May 1943, the Allies liberated the remaining Jewish forced laborers, around 1,500 in total.

Ultimately, all the labor camps for Jews were under Wehrmacht and SD control, which by mutual agreement regulated and kept tabs on labor deployment. Wehrmacht members served on guard details in the camps, but Italian and French soldiers, as well as Arabs, also worked as guards. Although there were some camps where all the guards were Italians, Germans had supremacy and control. Evidence of that is Rahn's clear message to Esteva, as early as November 1942, that the handling of the Jewish question in Tunisia was exclusively a German matter. The sole exceptions to this policy were Jews with Italian citizenship. They alone—and not, for example, Jews in the Italian zone—were to be excluded from German provisions, providing that was compatible with military needs.

French and Italian camps in Tunisia can be arranged according to the following typology: forced labor camps for Jews, which were Italian-run, and internment camps for Jews deported from Libya to Tunisia. A third category of “camp,” which deserves mention, consists of “day camps,” in which Jewish forced laborers were confined for a portion of each day. Such forced laborers were categorized as home-sleepers. The day-camp sites, such as the one at La Goulette, do not fit this encyclopedia's definition of a camp, but bear a striking resemblance to forced labor practices found in the same period in Romania and Slovakia.

The Italian-run forced labor camps for Jews included labor camps that were set up for a certain length of time, in which Jews were deployed as forced laborers over the long term. Therefore, numerous aspects of camp administration and structure in these camps were identical to those in other forced labor camps in occupied Europe or in European countries aligned with Nazi Germany. For example, as a rule the large camps had non-Jewish camp leaders, above the positions in the camp administration held by Jews, such as a group leader (approximately equivalent to the position of Kapo) and camp police. Armed guards watched the prisoners at all times.

The French-run internment camps for Jews served a different function from the forced labor camps. In the internment camps, Jews of all ages and of both sexes were held at a small number of sites under guard. These camps were not used for the purpose of labor deployment in segregated groups, but rather to house Jews deported from Libya. Therefore they resembled internment camps of the type found all over occupied Europe. Such camps were first established by the French administration in Tunisia, which was loyal to Vichy France. However, after the German landing in November 1942, the Germans assumed supervisory control over all camps in which Jews were interned, including those housing deportees from Libya.

The Italian sector in Tunisia was located southeast of Tunis in the area of Zaghouan and Enfidaville. The Germans transferred to the Italians a scant 1,000 Jewish forced laborers. The remoteness of this mountainous region and the difficult lines of communication to Tunis worsened the situation of the Jews deployed by the Italians. Of course, the treatment of the detainees by Italian guards was fundamentally better than by German guards, and the Jews were less heavily exposed to Allied bombing raids. Nevertheless, the camp inmates suffered from deplorable hygienic conditions in their wretched accommodations, as well as from a shortage of water. Basic hygienic facilities were lacking, and medical care in the Italian camps was inadequate. Historian Daniel Carpi points out that Italian guards also misappropriated for their own use the rations intended for the Jewish forced laborers. Such behavior increased the hunger of the camp inmates, whose diet generally was not adequate for the demands of hard physical labor. Thus the living conditions in the Italian labor camps, too, were anything but humane. The precise number of Jews who died while doing forced labor or who were killed by the guards is unknown. Overall, it is estimated that around 100 Jews lost their lives in the course of forced labor or were murdered. Given a total of around 6,400 Jewish forced laborers, the general mortality rate therefore was almost 1.6 percent.

In 1941 and 1942 there was heavy fighting in Libya, and during that period the control of fairly large parts of the Italian colony changed hands repeatedly, shifting between the Wehrmacht and the Italian Army, on the one hand, and the British Eighth Army, on the other. Starting in late 1941, the German Afrika Korps pushed forward in an eastward direction and forced the British back toward Egypt. On February 7, 1942, Mussolini, as Italy's interior minister, issued an order to the Italian governor of Libya, Ettore Bastico, requiring that the Jews be interned. He issued this order in the belief that the Jews of Benghazi had welcomed the British as liberators. Meanwhile, as of January 1942, Jews with British citizenship were gradually brought by ship to Italy and interned there in various locations. In July 1942, Jews with French citizenship were deported to Algeria, and Jews with Tunisian citizenship to Tunisia.

For the Jews brought to Tunisia, Esteva's administration set up three camps in the summer of 1942 pursuant to Vichy anti-Jewish policy: in Gabès, Marcia Beach (Marcia Plage) near Tunis, and Tniet-Agarev near Sfax. In these internment camps, the conditions of detention were similar in principle to those in the enclosed labor camps. After German and Italian troops had conquered a relatively large area in Tunisia, the German authorities established the principle that they alone would make decisions concerning the handling of the "Jewish question." Thus the SD also assumed supervisory control over the internment camps for the Jews deported from Libya.

From this point on, the detainees' living conditions deteriorated. Leaving the camp was permitted only by exception and only under heavy guard. In addition, at least for Gabès, it has been verified that this camp was fenced-in and that leaving camp without permission was punishable by death.⁴ The assistance provided to the inmates by the Jewish communities decreased. All the Jews were very poorly housed from the beginning, but now they also suffered from hunger and thirst and were forced to live in poor hygienic conditions. As a result of these circumstances and the largely nonexistent medical care, many inmates fell ill.

As in France's other North African colonies, following liberation a military tribunal investigated the crimes not only of the Germans but also those of the Vichy authorities. In Tunisia, this tribunal was convened in Tunis. It gathered statements from survivors and documents relating to persecution. Esteva, evacuated to France by the Germans, was tried in absentia and sentenced to death as early as May 15, 1943, by a military court headed by Général d'armée Henri Giraud. His arrest in Paris on September 22, 1944, was followed by a new proceeding, which ended on March 15, 1945, with his sentencing to life imprisonment. For reasons of ill health, however, Esteva was released in August 1950. He died the following year in Reims.

SOURCES Secondary sources on French and Italian camps for Jews in Tunisia start with the landmark treatment by Jacques Sabille, Les Juifs de Tunisie sous Vichy et l'Occupation, preface by Daniel Mayer (Paris: Éditions du Centre, 1954). In numerous later works on Tunisia during the Vichy era, there are only short sections dealing with forced labor. In German, there is a short survey, Eberhard Jäckel, Peter Longerich, and Julius H. Schoeps, eds., "Tunesien," in Enzyklopädie des Holocaust: Die Verfolgung und Ermordung der europäischen Juden (Munich, Zürich: Piper, 1995); in Hebrew, there is information on individual locations and the camps established there in 'Irit Avramski-Blai, ed., Pinkas ha-kehilot. Luv; Tunisyah: Entsiklopedyah shel ha-yishuvim ha-Yehudiyim le-min bizasdam ve-'ad le-aḥar Sho'at; Milḥemet ha-'Olam ha-Sheniyah (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1997). A good overview in English and French is Michel Abitbol, The Jews of North Africa during the Second World War (Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1989). The French edition appears under the title Les Juifs d'Afrique du Nord sous Vichy (Paris: Maisonneuve & Larose, 1983). In addition, there is Daniel Carpi, Between Mussolini and Hitler: The Jews and the Italian Authorities in France and Tunisia (Hanover, NH: Brandeis University Press/University Press of New England, 1994). Carpi has closely examined Italian policy with regard to the Jews in Tunisia.

Primary sources on the French and Italian camps in Tunisia can be found in CDJC; for example, CXXIII-68, CXXIV-17, and CCCLXXXVII-4 (some of this documentation is available at USHMMA as RG-43.024M). Additional sources are located in BAMA (Bestand RH 21-5). In addition, there are documents concerning the situation of the Jews in Tunisia and the attitude of the Italian occupation authorities in the collection of documents compiled by URO, Judenverfolgung in Italien, den italienisch besetzten Gebieten und in Nordafrika (Frankfurt-am-Main, 1962). On the three internment camps for Jews deported to Tunisia from Libya, information is available from legal proceedings concerning restitution in OLG Köln. Excerpts from the decision appear in "24. BEG-SchlussG Art. V Nr. 1 I," RsWgr 26 (1975): 28–31. The self-exculpatory remarks of Rudolf Rahn can be found in Rubeloses Leben; Aufzeichnungen und Erinnerungen (Stuttgart: Europäischer Buchklub, 1952). Early published memoirs of Jewish forced laborers in occupied Tunisia start with Paul Ghez, Six mois sous la botte: Les Juifs de Tunis aux prises avec le SS (Paris, Tunis: S.A.P.I., 1943); Robert Borgel, Étoile jaune et croix gammée: Récit d'une servitude (Tunis: Ed. Artypo, 1944); and Gaston Guez, ed., Nos martyrs sous la botte Allemande: Où, les ex-travailleurs Juifs de Tunisie racontent leurs souffrances (Tunis: Les presses Typo-Litho du journal "La Presse," 1946). In addition, Albert Memmi dealt with his experiences on the staff of the Comité de Recrutement and as a former forced laborer in the form of an autobiographical novel in Die Salzsäule (Cologne: Kiepenheuer & Witsch, 1963). The original French edition appeared under the title La Statue de Sel (Paris: Ed. Corrêa, 1953).

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

NOTES

1. Statut des juifs, USHMMA, RG-43.024M (CDJC), LXXXIII, reel 38.
2. Nehring order, December 6, 1942, NG-2571, extracted in Sabille, Les Juifs de Tunisie sous Vichy et l'occupation, pp. 42–43 (plate).
3. Quotation from Rahn, Rubeloses Leben, p. 302.
4. “24. BEG-SchlussG Art. V Nr. 1 I,” RsWgr 26 (1975): 29.

Camps in Tunisia

DJEBEL CHAMBI

The Italian Army in Tunisia established a forced labor camp for Jews at Djebel Chambi, located roughly 8 kilometers (5 miles) northwest of Kasserine (Al-Qasrayn). Kasserine is 219 kilometers (or 136 miles) southwest of Tunis. The camp was located at or near the largest mountain peak in Tunisia, Jebel ech Chambi, which is 1,544 meters or almost one mile high. Italian soldiers served as the guards. Little is known about this camp.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

DJEBIBINIA

In December 1942, the Italian Army established a forced labor camp for Jews at Djebibinia (today: Al Jubaybīnah), approximately 25 kilometers (almost 16 miles) west of Enfidaville and 71 kilometers (44 miles) southwest of Tunis. Forced laborers for this site were brought from the Zaghouan camp. One forced laborer, André Assuied, died of blood poisoning while in Djebibinia. His death led to rumors of an epidemic, but, according to historian Jacques Sabille, two Jewish physicians, Drs. Moatti and Maurice Uzan, ascertained during an inspection that there was not an epidemic in the camp.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

DJELLOULA

The Italian authorities in Tunisia established a forced labor camp for Jews at Djelloula (today: ‘Ayn Jalulah) on January 1, 1943. The neighboring village of ‘Ayn Jioula is located 117 kilometers (nearly 73 miles) south-southwest of Tunis. The Djelloula camp was used for the detention of Jewish forced laborers deployed primarily for airfield maintenance. Shortly after its opening, an additional group of Jews arrived from the Zaghouan work camp. In mid-February 1943, Henry Sfez, as the authorized regional representative of the Labor Recruitment Committee (Comité de Recrutement), managed to persuade the Italian camp administration to allow 47 men from the camp to go to Tunis. Italian soldiers served as the guards. Djelloula prisoner Elie Mettoudi died of injuries suffered during an Allied air attack. The camp was closed on March 30, 1943.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

DJOUGAR

Located 64 kilometers (approximately 40 miles) southwest of Tunis, Djougar (today: Jougar) was a forced labor camp for Jews established on December 9, 1942. The prisoners assisted with airfield maintenance and repair. The exact number of camp inmates is not known. On January 12, 1943, however, all the Jews from the Saouaf labor camp were transferred to the Djougar camp, and as late as April 1943, a few forced laborers arrived from Sbikha.

The Italian soldiers guarding this camp were subordinate to Colonnello Impellizzeri of the 1st Mountain “Superga” Division. Impellizzeri gave permission to replace 50 Jews unfit for work with 25 new forced laborers from Bizerte. On April 21, 1943, 65 men were still held in Djougar, but it was closed only nine days later, on April 30, 1943. The camp capo, Raymond Raccah, managed to persuade the Italian camp leadership to let all the inmates return to Tunis, in view of the Allied advance toward that city. Thirty Jews rode by truck to Tunis, and the others made their way to Tunis on their own. Two forced laborers remained unaccounted for, however. They may have lost their lives during the last of the fighting in Tunisia or may have been murdered by soldiers of the Axis powers. The only prisoner killed during an Allied air raid at Djougar was Joseph Chemouny.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

ENFIDAVILLE

In December 1942, a camp for Jews was set up in Enfidaville (today: Enfidha), 76 kilometers (47 miles) southeast of Tunis and 41 kilometers (almost 25 miles) northwest of Sousse. Detained at Enfidaville were 256 Jews brought by train from the Djebel Dejelloud railway station to Enfidaville on December 20. They were not called up for forced labor for quite some time, but had to line up for roll call three times a day and remain in confinement. The Italian camp chief treated the inmates humanely. Fourteen Italian soldiers guarded the inmates. In 1943, all of the inmates were moved to Kondas.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

GABÈS

The Gabès internment camp in southern Tunisia was established in July 1942 by order of the Vichy French protectorate. Gabès (Arabic: Qābis) is located approximately 325 kilometers (around 202 miles) south of Tunis. It was used to intern Jews with Tunisian citizenship expelled from Libya by the Italian Fascist regime. French gendarmes guarded the camp until November 1942. The internees successfully persuaded the camp leadership to allow individual Jews to leave the camp on occasion, accompanied by an armed guard, and to shop in town, using the scanty financial means they had brought with them. These purchases, in turn, ensured their survival. The British Eighth Army liberated the Gabès internment camp at the end of March 1943, but the Jews were still housed there as late as the fall of that year, waiting to be able to return to Libya.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

KONDAS

In 1943, the Italian Army set up a tent camp in Kondas (today: Kondar) after all the Jewish forced laborers were transferred from Enfidaville, which lies 24 kilometers (approximately 15 miles) to the northeast. (Enfidaville is 76 kilometers or 47.5 miles southeast of Tunis.) The Kondas labor camp was presumably shut down in April 1943.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

LE KEF

Le Kef (Kef, El Kef, today: Al Kaf) is a city almost 700 meters (2,297 feet) above sea level in northwest Tunisia and the capital of the Kef governorate, located 149 kilometers (nearly 93 miles) southwest of Tunis and nearly 551 kilometers (more than 343 miles) northwest of Tripoli, Libya. Le Kef was the temporary capital of Tunisia during World War II. The Le Kef camp was a confinement center (centre de séjour surveillé, CSS) established by the Vichy French military authorities initially to detain Austrian and German refugees who served in the French Foreign Legion (Légion étrangère, LE).

The first 28 Austrian refugees left Tunis for Le Kef on April 24, 1940. Le Kef also received French political suspects such as communists and syndicalists. They were later joined by members of the Tunisian nationalist party, the Neo-Destourians. The camp had a capacity to accommodate 300 internees and had a separate disciplinary section. In November 1940 the political detainees were separated by nationality, and the Tunisians were sent to El-Guettar nearly 206 kilometers (128 miles) southeast of Le Kef. There were 115 British officers and sailors from the sunken cargo ships Empire Defender, Empire Pelican, and Parracombe at Le Kef, while the remaining crew members were placed in Djelfa and Laghouat. There were also some British airmen and 15 Spanish Republicans.

The morale among the political internees at Le Kef was not good.¹ A notable internee at Le Kef was the syndicalist leader, Georges Poropane. After demobilization on July 22, 1940, he was interned at Le Kef on August 5, 1940. A few weeks after Poropane's arrival in the camp, the internees went on hunger strike in protest of the harsh conditions. In response there was some improvement in household and sleeping conditions; they were given a stove and firewood (with winter approaching) and were exempted from excessive work. Poropane and his fellow internees then renewed their strike to protest bullying by the authorities. Poropane was released at the end of August 1942 and placed under house arrest in Algeria.

Following the Tunisia campaign and Allied victory on May 13, 1943, the detainees in Tunisian camps, including Le Kef, were progressively returned to civilian life.

SOURCES Secondary sources describing the camp at Le Kef include Jacob Oliel, Camps du Vichy: Maghreb-Sabara 1939–1944 (Montreal: Éditions du Lys, 2005); Zosa Szajkowski, Jews and the French Foreign Legion (New York: KTAV Publishing House, Inc., 1975); Robert Satloff, Among the Righteous: Lost Stories of the Holocaust's Long Reach into Arab Lands (New York: Public Affairs, 2006); and André Moine, La Déportation et la résistance en Afrique du Nord 1939–1944 (Paris: Éditions Sociales, 1972).

Primary source material for Le Kef can be found in the AN Police Générale collection, available on microfilm in USHMMA as RG-43.016M.

Cristina Bejan

NOTE

1. "Les internés britanniques," n.d., USHMMA RG-43.016M (AN, Police Générale), reel 17, carton 15111, p. 17.

MARCIA BEACH

The Marcia Beach (Plage) internment camp, located about 20 kilometers (more than 12 miles) west-northwest of Tunis, was set up in July 1942 by order of the French protectorate administration. In November 1942, the Nazi Security Service (Sicherheitsdienst, SD) assumed supervisory control over camps previously organized by the French authorities. The Marcia Beach camp only contained Jews deported from Libya to Tunisia by the Italian colonial administration, quartered in disused horse stables. Because only Jews from Libya with Tunisian citizenship were interned here, there were no internal Jewish, national tensions.

Male internees fit for labor performed excavation work for the Wehrmacht from time to time. It is not known whether other employers who might have used Jews for forced labor did so.

A German-appointed Jewish camp leader, Rafael Romani, born in Benghazi in 1904, was responsible for camp discipline. The guards, initially French gendarmes, were replaced by armed Arabs under German command. At first the Jewish community of the small coastal town La Marsa (Arabic: Al Marsa) tried to support the inmates, because the food supplied by the French authorities was insufficient. Later the Jewish community of Tunis arranged for deliveries of foodstuffs, which were distributed fairly, but they too were inadequate for the number of internees. All the inmates suffered from hunger, however, there is no information available about any inmate deaths or killings.

Around May 7, 1943, this camp was liberated, but the inmates remained in the camp for another six months because they were still unable to return to Libya. Nothing is known about any post-liberation proceedings against the guards.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

MOHAMEDIA

The Italian-run forced labor camp for Jews at Mohamedia, located approximately 15 kilometers (9.3 miles) south of Tunis, was established on December 11, 1942. The Jewish male prisoners were deployed in various types of forced labor. In all, there were only 26 prisoners at Mohamedia. The exact date of the camp's dissolution is unknown, but the Allies liberated the area in early May 1943.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

SAINTE MARIE DU ZIT

The Italian-run forced labor camp for Jews at Sainte Marie du Zit, located approximately 50 kilometers (more than 31 miles) south-southeast of Tunis, was established on December 11, 1942. The prisoners maintained and repaired roads, as well as the German-built Sainte Marie du Zit Airfield. In total, 250 forced laborers were detained at the camp. The Italian Army shut down the camp on December 31, 1942.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

SAOUAF

In December 1942, the Italian Army established a forced labor camp for Jews at Saouaf (today: Aş Şawwāf), located just over 63 kilometers (more than 35 miles) south of Tunis. Its inmates performed forced labor for the army. The Italian soldiers serving as guards in this camp, like those in the camps at Djougar, Sbikha, and Zaghouan, were subordinated to Colonnello Impellizzeri, who belonged to the 1st Mountain "Superga" Division. On January 12, 1943, this camp was closed by order of the Italian Army, and the forced laborers were moved to the work camp at Djougar.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

SBIKHA

The Italian Army established a forced labor camp for Jews at Sbikha (today: Aş Subaykhah) in December 1942. The camp was located 39 kilometers (24 miles) southwest of Enfidaville. In January 1943, a group of forced laborers arrived at Sbikha from the Zaghouan camp. In mid-February, the Italian camp leadership allowed 30 Jews to go to Tunis at the request of Henry Sfez of the Recruitment Committee of Jewish Labor (Comité de Recrutement de la Main-d'Oeuvre Juive). The Jews, who were taken to Tunis by a noncommissioned officer (NCO) named Galese, were supposed to be replaced by an equal number of forced laborers, but Galese returned alone. Afterward, an Italian military court sentenced him to go to the frontlines, with a reduction in service grade. The Italian soldiers who guarded the Sbikha camp were under the command of Colonnello Impellizzeri, who belonged to the 1st Mountain "Superga" Division. In April 1943, the Italians liquidated the Sbikha forced labor camp and took the remaining Jews to the camp at Djougar.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

TNIET-AGAREV

Located 21 kilometers (13 miles) west of Sfax, the internment camp at Tniet-Agarev (Arabic: El Agareb) was set up in July 1942 by a decision of the French protectorate, which controlled it until November 1942. After that date, the Security Service (Sicherheitsdienst, SD) of the Nazi SS assumed overall supervision, without completely overriding the decisions of the French civil administration. Interned in Tniet-Agarev were exclusively Jews with Tunisian citizenship who had been deported from Libya to Tunisia by the Italian Fascist regime. After November 1942, male inmates of this internment camp were occasionally called on to perform forced labor for the Wehrmacht.

Deported families as well as individuals were interned in the camp, so that the age structure of the inmates roughly conformed to that of the overall Jewish population in Libya. No information is available about the number of deaths in this camp. The guarding of the camp was the responsibility of French gendarmes, several of whom stole various items from the modest possessions of the internees. After November 1942, the guards were placed under the oversight of the Germans, who conducted weekly inspections.

After the establishment of the internment camp in the summer of 1942, the prisoners successfully sought permission for the Jewish community of Sfax to send food and doctors for the medical care of the inmates. This support, however, ended when the Germans occupied the region. In addition, the inmates organized the cleaning of the camp and arranged to exchange various items—clothing, bed linens, and other things they had brought with them from Libya—for food. Until November 1942, it was possible for Jewish inmates to barter on a small scale with Arabs from the surrounding villages. As a result, the local Arab population, at least, had some rudimentary knowledge of the Jews' situation.

The camp was liberated on April 10, 1943, by the British Eighth Army, but the inmates' situation did not improve as a result, because the French protectorate continued to run the camp. For the time being, the inmates were unable to return to Libya and had to keep living in the barracks camp, some until the summer of 1944. As far as is known, none of the camp staff was brought to trial after the liberation of the camp.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

ZAGHOUAN

In Zaghouan (or Zaghwan), almost 45 kilometers (nearly 28 miles) south of Tunis, a forced labor camp for Jews was set up in December 1942 in buildings that lacked roofs. The Jewish prisoners were used to maintain and repair roads and perform other types of forced labor for the Italian Army. In all, the camp held 345 Jews who were guarded by Italian soldiers. Like those in the Djougar and Sbikha camps, the Italian soldiers guarding this camp were answerable to Colonnello Impellizzeri, who belonged to the 1st Mountain "Superga" Division. The regional representative of the Labor Recruitment Committee (Comité de Recrutement) in Zaghouan, a teacher named Robert Bellaïche, successfully persuaded the Italian camp administration to make some improvements in the living conditions of the Jews. On December 30, 1942, numerous camp inmates were taken from Zaghouan to Djebibinia. On March 31, 1943, the Italians closed down the camp.

Jens Hoppe
Trans. Kathleen Luft

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

2ème Bureau	Deuxième Bureau de l'État-major général (Second Bureau of the French General Staff, Intelligence)
A-HL	Archives des Hôpitaux de Lannemezan (Lannemezan, France)
A-ICRC	Archives of the International Committee of the Red Cross (Geneva, Switzerland)
A-IICG	Arhiv Istorijskog instituta Crne Gore (Archives of the Historical Institute, Crne Gore, Montenegro)
A-ISSAEC	Archivio dell'Istituto Sondriese per la storia della Resistenza e dell'età contemporanea (Archives of the Sondrian Institute for the History of the Resistance and Contemporary Age, Sondrio, Italy)
AAIU	Archives de l'Alliance Israélite Universelle (Archives of the Universal Jewish Alliance, Paris)
ABPO	Annales de Bretagne et des Pays de l'Ouest
AC	Archivio Comunale (Italian municipal archive)
AC-BSD	Archivio Comunale Borgo San Dalmazzo (Municipal Archive of Borgo San Dalmazzo, Italy)
AC-Se	Archivio Comunale Senigallia (Municipal Archive of Senigallia, Italy)
ACBdL	Archivio Comunale di Bagni di Lucca (Municipal Archive of Bagni di Lucca, Italy)
ACBP	Archivio Comunale Bagnolo in Piano (Municipal Archive of Bagnolo in Piano, Italy)
Acc. No.	Accession Number
ACCAP	Archivio Comunale di Capannori (Municipal Archive of Capannori, Italy)
ACDEC	Archivio della Fondazione Centro di Documentazione Ebraica Contemporanea (Archives of the Central Foundation of Contemporary Jewish Documentation, Milano, Italy)
ACMEOR	Asociația Culturală Mondială a Evreilor Originari din România (World Cultural Association of Jews Originally from Romania)
ACP	Archivio Comunale di Piano (Municipal Archives of Piano, Italy)
ACS	Archivio Centrale dello Stato (Italian Central State Archives, Rome)
ACS-CRI	Archivio Centrale dello Stato-Croce Rossa Italiana (Central State Archives of the Italian Red Cross, Rome)
ACT	Archivio Comunale di Tonezza (Municipal Archives of Tonezza del Cimone, Italy)
ACV-G	Archivio della Curia Vescovile, Grosseto (Archives of the Grosseto Episcopal Court, Grosseto, Italy)
AD	Archives Départementales (Departmental Archives)
AD-A-M	Archives Départementales des Alpes-Maritimes (Departmental Archives of Alpes-Maritimes, Nice, France)
AD-Ab	Archives Départementales de l'Aube (Departmental Archives of the Aube, Troyes, France)
AD-Ain	Archives Départementales de l'Ain (Departmental Archives of the Ain, Bourg-en-Bresse, France)
AD-Ard	Archives Départementales de l'Ardèche (Departmental Archives of the Ardèche, Privas, France)
AD-C	Archives Départementales de la Creuse (Departmental Archives of the Creuse, Guéret, France)

904 LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

AD-Can	Archives Départementales du Cantal (Departmental Archives of the Cantal, Aurillac, France)
AD-Cor	Archives Départementales de Corrèze (Departmental Archives of Corrèze, Tulle, France)
AD-Do	Archives Départementales de la Dordogne (Departmental Archives of the Dordogne, Périgueux, France)
AD-E-L	Archives Départementales d'Eure-et-Loir (Departmental Archives of the Eure-et-Loir, Chartres, France)
AD-L	Archives Départementales du Lot (Departmental Archives of the Lot, Cahors, France)
AD-Lo	Archives Départementales de Lozère (Departmental Archives of Lozère, Mende, France)
AD-M	Archives Départementales de la Mayenne (Departmental Archives of the Mayenne, Laval, France)
AD-Me	Archives Départementales de la Marne (Departmental Archives of the Marne, Châlons-en-Champagne, France)
AD-Mor	Archives Départementales du Morbihan (Departmental Archives of the Morbihan, Vannes, France)
AD-P-A	Archives Départementales des Pyrénées-Atlantiques (Departmental Archives of the Pyrénées-Atlantiques, Pau, France)
AD-P-D	Archives Départementales du Puy-de-Dôme (Departmental Archives of the Puy-de-Dôme, Clermont-Ferrand, France)
AD-P-O	Archives Départementales des Pyrénées-Orientales (Departmental Archives of the Pyrénées-Orientales, Perpignan, France)
AD-R	Archives Départementales du Rhône (Departmental Archives of the Rhône, Lyon, France)
AD-S	Archives Départementales de la Savoie (Departmental Archives of the Savoie, Chambéry, France)
AD-S-S-D	Archives Départementales de la Seine-Saint-Denis (Departmental Archives of the Seine-Saint-Denis, Paris)
AD-Ve	Archives Départementales de la Vendée (Departmental Archives of the Vendée, La-Roche-sur-Yon, France)
AD-Y	Archives Départementales de l'Yonne (Departmental Archives of the Yonne, Auxerre, France)
ADA	Archives Départementales de l'Ariège (Departmental Archives of the Ariège, Foix, France)
ADA-HP	Archives Départementales des Alpes de Haute Provence (Departmental Archives of the Alpes de Haute Provence, Digne-les-Bains, France)
ADAu	Archives Départementales d'Aude (Departmental Archives of Aude, Carcassonne, France)
ADB-R	Archives Départementales des Bouches-du-Rhône (Departmental Archives of the Bouches-du-Rhône, Marseille, France)
ADC	Archives Départementales de la Charente (Departmental Archives of the Charente, Angoulême, France)
ADC-O	Archives Départementales de la Côte-d'Or (Departmental Archives of the Côte-d'Or, Dijon, France)
ADD	Archives Départementales du Doubs (Departmental Archives of the Doubs, Besançon, France)
ADDr	Archives Départementales de la Drôme (Departmental Archives of the Drôme, Valence, France)

ADFin	Archives Départementales du Finistère (Departmental Archives of the Finistère, Quimper, France)
ADG	Archives Départementales de la Gironde (Departmental Archives of the Gironde, Bordeaux, France)
ADGe	Archives Départementales du Gers (Departmental Archives of the Gers, Auch, France)
ADH	Archives Départementales de l'Hérault (Departmental Archives of the Hérault, Montpellier, France)
ADH-A	Archives Départementales des Hautes-Alpes (Departmental Archives of the Hautes-Alpes, Gap, France)
ADH-G	Archives Départementales de Haute-Garonne (Departmental Archives of the Haute-Garonne, Toulouse, France)
ADH-L	Archives Départementales de la Haute-Loire (Departmental Archives of the Haute-Loire, Le Puy-en-Velay, France)
ADH-M	Archives Départementales de la Haute-Marne (Departmental Archives of the Haute-Marne, Chaumont, France)
ADH-P	Archives Départementales des Hautes-Pyrénées (Departmental Archives of the Hautes-Pyrénées, Tarbes, France)
ADH-S	Archives Départementales de la Haute-Savoie (Departmental Archives of the Haute-Savoie, Annecy, France)
ADH-V	Archives Départementales de la Haute-Vienne (Departmental Archives of the Haute-Vienne, Limoges, France)
ADI	Archives Départementales de l'Isère (Departmental Archives of the Isère, Grenoble, France)
ADI-L	Archives Départementales d'Indre-et-Loire (Departmental Archives of Indre-et-Loire, Châteauroux, France)
ADL	Archives Départementales du Loiret (Departmental Archives of the Loiret, Orléans, France)
ADL-A	Archives Départementales de Loire-Atlantique (Departmental Archives of the Loire-Atlantique, Nantes, France)
ADL-C	Archives Départementales de Loir-et-Cher (Departmental Archives of the Loir-et-Cher, Blois, France)
ADL-G	Archives Départementales du Lot-et-Garonne (Departmental Archives of the Lot-et-Garonne, Agen, France)
ADM	Admiralty (The National Archives, Kew, United Kingdom, archival signature)
ADM-L	Archives Départementales du Maine-et-Loire (Departmental Archives of the Maine-et-Loire, Angers, France)
ADM-M	Archives Départementales de Meurthe-et-Moselle (Departmental Archives of the Meurthe-et-Moselle, Nancy, France)
ADS	Archives Départementales de la Sarthe (Departmental Archives of the Sarthe, Le Mans, France)
ADS-L	Archives Départementales de Saône-et-Loire (Departmental Archives of the Saône-et-Loire, Mâcon, France)
ADT	Archives Départementales du Tarn (Departmental Archives of the Tarn, Albi, France)
ADT-G	Archives Départementales de Tarn-et-Garonne (Departmental Archives of Tarn-et-Garonne, Montauban, France)
ADV	Archives Départementales du Var (Departmental Archives of the Var, Draguignan, France)
ADY	Archives Départementales des Yvelines (Departmental Archives of the Yvelines, Saint-Quentin-en-Yvelines, France)

a.e.	arkhivna edinitsa (Bulgarian archival unit)
AFHUMBN	Acta Facultatis Humanisticae Universitatis Matthiae Belii Neosoliensis
AFMD	Amis de la Fondation pour la Mémoire de la Déportation (Friends of the Foundation for the Memory of the Deportation)
Afr. J.	Africana Journal
AFSC	American Friends Service Committee
Ag	Annales de géographie
Ag-La	Agenzia LAORE Sardegna (Sardinian Agency for Agricultural and Rural Development)
AH-PCE	Archivo histórico-Partido Comunista de España (Historical Archives, Communist Party of Spain, Madrid)
AISR	Archivio dell'Istituto per la storia della Resistenza e della società contemporanea (Archives of the Institute of the History of Resistance and Contemporary Society)
AISRA	Archivio dell'Istituto per la storia della Resistenza e della società contemporanea di Asti (Archives of the Institute of the History of Resistance and Contemporary Society of Asti, Italy)
AISR BVV	Archivio dell'Istituto per la storia della Resistenza e della società contemporanea nel Biellese, nel Vercellese e in Valsesia (Archives of the Institute of the History of Resistance and Contemporary Society in Biellese, Vercellese, and Valsesia, Varallo, Italy)
AISRVA	Archivio dell'Istituto storico della Resistenza e della società contemporanea in Valle d'Aosta (Archives of the Historical Institute of Resistance and Contemporary Society in Valle d'Aosta, Aosta, Italy)
AIU	Alliance israélite universelle (Universal Alliance of Jews)
AJ	Arhiv Jugoslovenske (Yugoslav Archive, Belgrade; succeeded by AS)
AJJDC	American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (aka "the Joint")
Ajk	Arhiv Jugoslovenske kinoteke (Yugoslav Cinematic Archives, Belgrade, Serbia)
Aju	Archives Juives
L'Almanacco	L'Almanacco: Rassegna di studi storici e di ricerche sulla società contemporanea
Am	Archives municipales (French Municipal Archives)
Am-Br	Archives municipales Brest (Municipal Archives of Brest, France)
AMANR	Arhivele Ministerului Apărării Naționale a României (Archives of the Romanian Ministry of National Defense Archives, Bucharest)
AME	Arhiva Ministerului de Externe (Archives of the Romanian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Bucharest)
AMI	Arhiva Ministerului de Interne (Archives of the Romanian Ministry of the Interior, Bucharest)
AML	Archives de la Mairie de Lacaune (Archives of the City Hall of Lacaune-les-Bains, France)
AMP-J	Archive Mairie de Plénée-Jugon (City Hall Archives of Plénée-Jugon, France)
AMR	Arhivele Militare Romane (Romanian Military Archives, Bucharest)
AMSGF	Archivio Museo Storico della Guardia di Finanza (Archives of the Historical Museum of the Customs Office, Rome)
AMSNP	Archív Múzea Slovenského Národného Povstania (Archives of the Museum of the Slovak National Uprising, Banská Bystrica, Slovakia)
AMV SR	Archív Ministerstva Vnútra (Archives of the Ministry of Interior, Slovak Republic)
AN	Archives Nationales (French National Archives, Paris)
ANED	Associazione Nazionale Ex Deportati (National Association of Former Deportees)
Anj	Arhiva neprijateljskih jedinica (Archives of Enemy Units, Archives of the Military History Institute, Belgrade, Serbia)

ANPPIA	Associazione Nazionale Perseguitati politici Italiani Antifascisti (National Association for Politically Persecuted Antifascist Italians)
ANR	Arhivele Naționale ale României (National Archives of Romania, Bucharest)
ANR-Bi	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Bihor (National Archives of Romania-Bihor Branch)
ANR-Că	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Călărași (National Archives of Romania-Călărași Branch)
ANR-Cos	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Constanța (National Archives of Romania-Constanța Branch)
ANR-G	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Galați (National Archives of Romania-Galați Branch)
ANR-H	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Hunedoara (National Archives of Romania-Hunedoara Branch)
ANR-Ialo	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Ialomița (National Archives of Romania-Ialomița Branch)
ANR-Is	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Iași (National Archives of Romania-Iași Branch)
ANR-Mu	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Mureș (National Archives of Romania-Mureș Branch)
ANR-Vs	Arhivele Naționale ale României-Vaslui (National Archives of Romania-Vaslui Branch)
ANRM	Arhiva Națională a Republicii Moldova (National Archives of the Republic of Moldova, Chișinău)
ANS	Archives Nationales du Sénégal (National Archives of Senegal, Dakar)
ANSC	Asociația Națională a Studenților Creștini (Romanian Christian National Student Association)
ANSP	Associazione Nazionale “Sandro Pertini”—Firenze (“Sandro Pertini” National Association—Florence)
ANV	Arhio Nomarchias Voiōtias (Archive of the Prefecture of Viotia, Greece)
AOF	Afrique occidentale française (French West Africa)
AP&J	Aberdeen Press & Journal
APH	Air Power History
APN	Archives de la Police Nationale (Archives of the National Police, Paris)
APO	Army Post Office
AQSH	Arkivi Qëndror Shtetëror (Albanian State Archives, Tiranë)
APPP	Archives de la Préfecture de Police de Paris (Archives of the Prefecture of Police of Paris)
A-RS	Archiv Republika Slovenija (Archives of the Republic of Slovenia, Ljubljana)
ArchMol	Archiva Moldaviae
ARDIEP	Associations des résistants, déportés emprisonnés et internés en Afrique du Nord (Association of Resisters, Imprisoned Deportees, and Internees in North Africa)
Arkeia	Arkeia: Revue d'histoire; Histoire, mémoire du Vingtième siècle en Sud-Ouest
AS	Arhiv Srbije (Archives of Serbia, Belgrade)
ASA	Archivio di Stato di Asti (Asti State Archives, Italy)
ASC-C	Archivio Storico del Comune di Carpi (Historical Archives of the Commune of Carpi, Italy)
ASC-S	Archivio Storico del Comune di Sondrio (Historical Archives of the Commune of Sondrio, Italy)
ASF	Archivio di Stato di Forlì (Forlì State Archives, Italy)
ASFI	Archivio di Stato di Firenze (Florence State Archives, Italy)
ASG	Archivio di Stato de Genova (Genoa State Archives, Italy)

908 LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

ASHM	Archives de la Société d'Histoire de la Montagne (Archives of the Society of the History of the Montagne, Le Chambon-sur-Lignon, France)
ASL	Azienda Sanitaria Locale (Italian: local health center)
ASLU	Archivio di Stato di Lucca (Lucca State Archives, Italy)
ASM	Archivio di Stato di Macerata (Macerata State Archives, Italy)
ASMAE	Archivio Storico-diplomatico del Ministero degli Affari Esteri (Archives of Diplomatic History of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Rome)
ASMo	Archivio di Stato di Modena (Modena State Archives, Italy)
ASP	Archivio di Stato di Parma (Parma State Archives, Italy)
ASV	Archivio di Stato di Vercelli (Vercelli State Archives, Italy)
ASVen	Archivio di Stato Venezia (Venice State Archives, Italy)
ASVR	Archivio di Stato di Verona (Verona State Archives, Italy)
AUCEI	Archivio dell'Unione delle Comunità Ebraiche Italiane (Archives of the Union of the Italian Jewish Community, Rome)
AUO	Analele Universității Ovidius
AUSSME	Archivio dell'Ufficio storico dello Stato maggiore dell'Esercito (Archives of the General Staff of the Army, Historical Office, Rome)
AVI	Arhiv Vojnoistorijskog Instituta (Archives of the Military History Institute, Belgrade, Serbia)
AŽOO	Arhiv Židovske općine Osijek (Archives of the Jewish Community of Osijek, Croatia)
B	busta (Italian: envelope)
BA-B	Bundesarchiv Berlin (German Federal Archives, Berlin)
BA-L	Bundesarchiv Aussenstelle Ludwigsburg (German Federal Archives, External Branch Ludwigsburg)
BA-SAPMO	Bundesarchiv–Stiftung Parteien und Massenorganisationen der DDR (German Federal Archives, Foundation of Party and Mass Organizations of the German Democratic Republic, Berlin)
b.č.	bez čísla (Slovak: without number)
BdO	Befehlshaber der Ordnungspolizei (Commander of the Order Police)
BdS	Befehlshaber der Sipo und des SD (Commander of the Security Police and Security Service)
BEG	Bundesentschädigungsgesetz (German Federal Compensation Law)
BFL	Budapest Főváros Levéltár (Budapest Municipal Archives)
BGHI	Bulletin of the German Historical Institute
BGRAHS	Bulletin du Groupe de Recherches Archéologiques et Historiques de Sologne
BH	Beit Hatfutsot (Museum of the Jewish People, Tel Aviv)
BK	Bereichkommando (Area Detachment)
BK	Budapesti Közlöny
BL	Batalion de Lucru (Romanian Labor Battalion)
BLH	Beth Lohamei Hagettaot (Archives of the Ghetto Fighters' House, Israel)
BML	Békés Megyei Levéltár (Békés County Archives, Gyula, Hungary)
BN	Basler Nachrichten
BNR	Banca Națională a României (National Bank of Romania)
BRCS	British Red Cross Society
BSÉSA	Bulletin de la société d'études scientifiques de l'Aude
BSHT-I	Bulletin de la Société d'Histoire Tille-Ignon

BuKö	Budapesti Közlöny
CAC	Centre des Archives Contemporaines (Center of Contemporary Archives, Fontainebleau, France)
CAHJP	Central Archives for the History of the Jewish People, Jerusalem
CamCom	Camera di Commercio di Roma (Chamber of Commerce, Rome)
CAMR	Cercle d'archéologie de Montluçon et de la région
CAOM	Centre des Archives d'Outre-Mer (Center of Overseas Archives, Aix-en-Provence, France)
CAR	Comité d'assistance aux Réfugiés (Committee of Assistance to Refugees)
CAS	Comité américain de Secours (American Committee of Assistance)
Čas	Člověk a společnost: Internetový časopis pro původně teoretické a výskumné štúdie z oblasti spoločenských vied
CCI	Camps et Centres d'Internement (Camps and Internment Centers)
CdA	Corpo d'Armata (Italian Army Corps)
CDDP, C-M	Centre départemental de documentation pédagogique, Champagne-sur-Marne (Departmental Center of Pedagogical Documentation, Champagne-sur-Marne, France)
CDEC	Centro di Documentazione Ebraica Contemporanea (Center of Contemporary Jewish Documentation, Milano, Italy)
CDJ	Comité général de défense des Juifs (French Committee for the Protection of Jews)
CDJC	Centre de Documentation Juive Contemporaine (Center of Contemporary Jewish Documentation, Paris)
CDLM	Cahiers de la Méditerranée
CEM	Consiliul Evreiesc Moghilev (Jewish Council of Moghilev, Transnistria)
CER	Centrala Evreilor din România (Central Bureau of Romanian Jews)
CERCIL	Centre d'étude et la recherche sur les camps d'internement et la déportation juive dans le Loiret (Center for Study and Research on the Internment Camps and the Jewish Deportation in the Loiret, Orléans, France)
CFL	Corps Francs de la Libération (Frankish Corps of Liberation)
CFR	Căile Ferate Române (Romanian Railways Company)
CFRT	Căile Ferate Române Transnistria (Romanian Railways in Transnistria)
CGE	Comandamentul General at Etapelor (Romanian Rear Area General Command)
CGQJ	Commissariat Général aux Questions Juives (General Commissariat on the Jewish Question)
CGT	Confédération Générale du Travail (General Confederation of Labor)
CGTU	Confédération Générale du Travail Unitaire (General Confederation of United Labor)
ChGK	Chrezvychnaia Gosudarstvennaia Komissiia (Soviet Extraordinary State Commission)
ChrAll	Chronique Allemandes
CHSGM	Comité d'histoire de la Seconde Guerre mondiale (Committee of the History of the Second World War; defunct organization—now Institute of Contemporary History, Paris)
CIAF	Commission italienne d'armistice avec la France (Italian Commission of the Armistice with France)
CIC	Counterintelligence Corps (United States Army)
CICR	Comité Internationale de la Croix Rouge (International Committee of the Red Cross, Geneva, Switzerland)
CIMADE	Comité Inter-Mouvements Auprès des Évacués (Committee to Coordinate Activities for the Displaced)

910 LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

CJF	Chantiers de la jeunesse française (Builders of French Youth; Vichy paramilitary organization)
Clio	Clio: Rivista trimestrale di studi storici
CM/1	Care and Maintenance 1 or Welfare and Support Form (“CM/1 Form”), International Tracing Service records
CMA	Christian Missionary Alliance
CML	Csongrád Megyei Levéltár (Csongrád County Archives, Hungary)
CMO	Chemin de Fer du Maroc Oriental (Railroads of Eastern Morocco)
CNI	Central Name Index of the International Tracing Service
CNRS	Centre national de la recherche scientifique (National Center of Scientific Research, Paris)
CNSAS	Consiliul Național pentru Studierea Arhivelor Securității (National Council for the Study of the Securitate Archives, Romania)
CNSE	Combat de Nice et du sud-est
COJASOR	Comité Juif d’Action Sociale et de Reconstruction (Jewish Committee for Community Care and Reconstruction)
conf. Ord. Nr.	confirmare Ordin Număr (Romanian: confirmation order number)
Cont.	Contrôle (Inspection; French archival abbreviation)
Cor	Corrèze Département, France
Cornești Tg.	Cornești Târg, Bessarabia (today: Cornești, Moldova)
CPLE	Compagnie de Passage de la Légion étrangère (Transit Company of the French Foreign Legion)
CRDE	Comitato ricerche deportati ebrei (Research Committee on Jewish Deportees, CDEC)
CRF	Croix-Rouge Française (French Red Cross)
CRI	Croce Rossa Italiana (Italian Red Cross)
CRm	Cabiers de Rieumontagné
CROWCASS	Central Register of War Criminals and Security Suspects
CRR	Crucea Roșie din România (Romanian Red Cross)
CRRL	Centre Régionale “Résistance et Liberté” (Regional Center, “Resistance and Liberty,” Thouars, France)
CS	Comando Supremo (Italian Supreme Command)
C.S.	Controspionaggio (Italian: Counterespionage)
(č.s.)	číslo spisu (Slovak archival abbreviation: file number)
CSE	Contrôle Social des Étrangers (French Social Supervision of Foreigners)
Čsp	Časopis za suvremenu povijest
CSS	centre de séjour surveillé (French confinement center)
CTE	Companie de Travailleurs Étrangers (Company of Foreign Workers)
CTM	Companie de Transports au Maroc (Moroccan Transportation Company)
CuIs	Curierul Israelit
Cumidava	Cumidava: Anuarul Muzeului Județean de Istorie Brașov
CZA	Central Zionist Archives (Jerusalem)
D	Dosje (Albanian archival abbreviation: folder)
DACgO	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Chernighivs’koi oblasti (State Archives of the Chernighiv Oblast’, Ukraine)
DACkO	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Chernivets’koi oblasti (State Archives of the Czernowitz Oblast’, Ukraine)

Dagr	Divisione affari generali e riservati (Italian Division of General and Confidential Affairs; occasionally rendered in Italian holdings: AAGGRR)
DAMO	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Mikolaivs'koi oblasti (State Archives of the Mykolaiv Oblast', Ukraine)
DAOO	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Odeskoi oblasti (State Archives of the Odessa Oblast', Ukraine)
DAOO/YV	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Odeskoi oblasti (State Archives of the Odessa Oblast', Ukraine), collected by Yad Vashem
DASBU	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Sluzhby Bezpeky Ukraïny (State Archives of the Ukrainian Security Service, Kyiv)
DAVINO	Derzhavnyi arkhiv Vinnyts'koi oblasti (State Archives of the Vinnytsia Oblast', Ukraine)
DBK	Deutscher Bevollmächtigter in Kroatien (German Commissioner in Croatia)
DCA	Défense contre avion (French Air Defense)
DdC	La Dépêche du Centre
DE	Detășamentul de Evrei (Romanian: Brigade of Jews)
DEGOB	Magyarországi Zsidók Deportáltakat Gondozó Országos Bizottság (National Committee of Hungarian Jews Supporting Returning Deportees)
DE(L)	Daily Express (London)
DELASEM	Delegazione per l'Assistenza degli Emigranti Ebrei (Delegation for the Assistance of Jewish Emigrants)
DEP	Deportati, esuli, profughi
DeS	"Documenti e Studi": Rivista semestrale dell'Istituto storico della Resistenza e dell'Età contemporanea in Provincia di Lucca
DG-IV	Durchgangsstrasse-IV (Highway IV)
Dgap	Divisione Generale Affari Politici (Italian General Division of Political Affairs)
DGPN	Direction générale de la Police Nationale (French General Directorate of the National Police)
Dgps	Direzione generale della pubblica sicurezza (Italian General Directorate of Public Security)
Dgsg	Direzione generale servizi di guerra (Italian General Directorate of War Services)
DGSN	Direction Générale de la Sûreté Nationale (French General Directorate of National Security)
DH	Dachauer Hefte
DIKI	Dimotiko Kentro Istorias ke Tekmiriossis Volou (Municipal Center for Historical Research and Documentation of Volos, Greece)
DK	Državne komisije za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača (Yugoslav State Commission to Investigate Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators)
dkg	decagram
DM	La Dépêche du Midi
DO	Les Dossiers de l'Obstétrique
DOB	date of birth
Doc. No.	document number
Docs Pb	Documents philatéliques
dott. Cav.	Dottore Cavaliere (Italian honorific, loosely translated as university degree holder and commander)
DP	displaced person
DPODS	Direktsia na politsiata, otdel dŕzhavna sigurnost (Bulgarian Security Police Directorate)

912 LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

DQP	Drejtoria Qëndrore e Policise (Albanian Central Directorate of the Police)
DR	Dunai Repülőgépgyár (Danube Aircraft Factory, Csepel Island, Hungary)
DRED	Documenti raccolti per la ricerca sugli Ebrei deportati dall'Italia (documents collected for research on the Jews deported from Italy)
Ds	diario storico-militario (Italian: war diary)
DTA	Dimosia Tileorasi Archeio (Public Television Archive of Greece)
DTOSGPN	Délégué des les Territoires Occupés du Secrétariat Général pour la Police Nationale
E&F	Eaux-et-Forêts (Water and Forests Department)
E&L	Eure-et-Loir Département
EA	Ethnikē Allēleggyē (National Solidarity; Greek aid organization and partisan front)
EA	Ethnikē Antistasē
EAM	Ethnikó Apeleytherotikó Métopo (Greek National Liberation Front)
Échos	Échos Saléviens: Revue d'histoire locale
ECOSMEG	European Cosmopolitanism and Sites of Memory
ÉCPAD	Établissement de Communication et de Production Audiovisuelle de la Défense (Communications and Audiovisual Establishment of the French Defense Ministry, Paris)
ÉD	Études Drômoises
EES	Ellinikós Erythrós Staurós (Hellenic Red Cross)
ÉÉUF	Éclaireuses et Éclaireurs unionistes de France (Unionist Girl and Boy Scouts of France)
EG-J	Einsatzgruppe (der Sipo und des SD) für Jugoslawien (Einsatzgruppe of the Security Police and the Security Service for Yugoslavia)
EI	Écarts d'identité
EIF	Eclaireurs Israélites de France (French Jewish Scouts)
EK	Etsivä keskuspoliisi (Finnish Security Police)
EK-Valpo	Etsivä keskuspoliisi-Valtiollinen poliisi (Finnish archival designation: Finnish Security Police collections)
ELAS	Ellinikós Laïkós Apeleftherotikós Stratós (Greek People's Liberation Army)
Ell	Ellenzék
Er.P	Erillinen Pataljoona (Finnish: detached battalion)
ESC	Ente Sardo di Colonizzazione (Sardinian Colonization Authority)
EsM	Espaces Marx (Paris)
EsUj	Esti Ujság
ÉT	Études Tsiganes
EVDG	Engagés volontaires à la Légion étrangère pour la durée de la guerre (French Foreign Legion Volunteers for the duration of the war)
F	fond (archival abbreviation)
F-18	“Registration of Liberated Former Persecutees at Various Locations” at the International Tracing Service
FAA	Fleet Air Arm (UK Royal Navy)
FAA	Fegyvertelen álltak az aknamezőkön: Dokumentumok a mundaszolgá lat történetéhez Magyarországon
FAF-UC	Fondazione Alfred Lewin-Una Città (Alfred Lewin Foundation, One City, Forlì, Italy)
fasc.	fascicolo (Italian: file)
FCER	Federația Comunităților Evreiești din România (Federation of Jewish Communities of Romania)

FF.AA.	Forze Armate (Italian Armed forces)
FFI	Forces Françaises de l'Intérieur (French Forces of the Interior; resistance organization)
FHS	French Historical Studies
FJCY	Federation of Jewish Communities in Yugoslavia
FK	Feldkommandantur (German Army Field Command Office, designated by unit with an Arabic numeral and headquarters, e.g., FK 748, Saint-Brieuc)
FL	fletë/fleta (Albanian archival abbreviation: sheet)
FMD–BaPAR	Fondazione Memoria della Deportazione–Biblioteca archivio Pina e Aldo Ravelli (Deportation Records Foundation–Pina and Aldo Ravelli Library Archives, Milano, Italy)
FNDIRP	Fédération nationale des déportés, résistants, et patriotes (French Federation of Deportees, Resisters, and Patriots)
FO	Foreign Office (London)
FSB	Federal'naya sluzhba bezopasnosti Rossiyskoy Federatsii (Russian Federal Security Services)
FSJF	Fédération des Sociétés Juives de France (Federation of the Jewish Societies of France)
FTPF	Franc-Tireurs et Partisans Français (Irregulars and French Partisans)
FUCER	Federația Uniunii Comunităților Evreiești din România (Federated Union of Jewish Communities of Romania)
Gab.	cabinetto (Italian archival abbreviation: cabinet)
GABAP	Gabinetto armistizio-pace, Ministero degli Esteri (Armistice–Peace Cabinet, Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs)
GAFTA	Groupe Autonome des Forces Terrestres Antiaériennes (Autonomous Group of Ground Anti-Aircraft Forces)
GAK	Geniko arhio kratus (General State Archives, Athens, Greece)
GARF	Gosudarstvennyi arkhiv rossiiskoi federatsii (State Archives of the Russian Federation, Moscow)
Gestapo	Geheime Staatspolizei (Secret State Police)
GFP	Geheime Feldpolizei (Secret Field Police)
GMCC	Guerres mondiales et conflits contemporains
GMR	Groupe (-ments) Mobile(s) de Réserve (Mobile Reserve Group or Groups)
GN	Gendarmerie Nationale (French National Gendarmerie)
GNR	Guardia Nazionale Repubblicana (Spanish Republican National Guard)
Gnr	Guardia Nazionale Repubblicana (Italian National Republican Guard)
GPO	United States Government Printing Office (Washington, DC)
GPTE	Groupe Palestinien des Travailleurs Étrangers (Palestinian Foreign Workers Group)
GR:Sr	Geschichte und Region: Storia e regione
GSC	Giornale di storia contemporanea
Gt. Gnl.	Gouvernement Générale (General Government)
GTA	Groupement de Travailleurs Algériens (Algerian Workers Group)
GTC	Groupe de Travailleurs Civils (Civilian Workers Group)
GTCE	Groupe de Travailleurs Civils Etrangers (Civilian Foreign Workers Group)
GTD	Groupe de Travailleurs Démobilisés (Demobilized Workers Group)
GTE	Groupe des Travailleurs Étrangers (Foreign Workers Group)
GTEA	Groupe des Travailleurs Étrangers Autonome (Autonomous Group of Foreign Workers)

GTED	Groupe des Travailleurs Étrangers Démobilisés (Demobilized Foreign Workers Group)
GTI	Groupes de Travailleurs Israélites (Jewish Workers Group)
GuG	Geschichte und Gesellschaft
GVA	Glavno upravlenie na arkhivite (Archives of the Bulgarian Interior Ministry, Sofia)
H-K	Ha-kol: Glasilo Židovske zajednice u Hrvatskoj
H. Res.	United States House of Representatives Resolution
HAHE	Historiko Archeio tou Hypourgeiou Exōterikōn (Historical Archive of the Greek Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Athens)
Hč	Historický časopis
HC VII	Sofia People's Court Panel VII
HCK	Hrvatski Crveni križ (Croatian Red Cross)
HDA	Hrvatski državni arhiv (Croatian State Archives, Zagreb)
HDCM	Holocaust Documentation Center and Memorial (Budapest)
HelsSan	Helsing Sanomat
HG	Hlinková Garda (Slovak Hlinka Guard)
HGS	Holocaust and Genocide Studies
HI	Hoover Institution, Stanford University, Palo Alto, California
HIAS	Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society
HICEM	Hebrew Immigration Committee (alternatively: Hebrew Immigration/Jewish Colonization Association/Emig-Direkt)
HistPén	Histoire Pénitentiaire
HJM	Hungarian Jewish Museum (Safed, Israel)
HM	Holocaust and Modernity
HMS	His (Her) Majesty's Ship
HPL	Hôpital Psychiatrique de Lannemezan (Lannemezan, France)
HQABS	Headquarters, Atlantic Base Section
HrNa	Hrvatski narod
HSC	Holocaust: Studii și Cercetări
HSJCH	Holocaust Studies: A Journal of Culture and History
HSL'S	Hlinková Slovenská Ľudová Strana (Hlinka Slovak People's Party)
HSS	Hrvatska seljačka stranka (Croatian Peasant Party)
HSSPF	Höhere SS- und Polizeiführer (Higher SS- and Police Leader)
Ht	Hespéris tamuda: Université Mohammed 5., Faculté des Lettres et des Sciences Humaines, Rabat
HVHG	Hlavnè Vel'itelstvo Hlinkovej Gardy (Headquarters of the Slovak Hlinka Guard)
"I"	Informazione (Italian: Intelligence)
I-Kke	Itä-Karjalan keskitysleirien esikunta (Archives of the Staff of the Eastern Karelian Concentration Camps, Finnish National Archives, Helsinki)
I-Ks	Itä-Karjalan sotilashallinto (Archive of the Eastern Karelian Military Administration, Finnish National Archives, Helsinki)
I-L	Indre-Loire Département, France
IaB	Istorijski arhiv Beograda (Historical Archives of Belgrade, Serbia)
ICM	Inspectoratul Clerului Militar (Romanian Military Clergy Inspectorate)
ICRC	International Committee of the Red Cross (Geneva, Switzerland)
IEQJ	Institut d'Étude des Questions Juives (Institute for the Study of the Jewish Question)

IGC	Inspection Générale des Camps (French Inspector General of Camps)
IGJ	Inspectoratul General al Jandarmeriei (Romanian Inspector General of the Gendarmerie)
IHTP	Institut d'Histoire du Temps Présent (Institute of Contemporary History, Paris)
Ij	Information Juive
IKL	Inspektion der Konzentrationslager (Nazi SS Inspectorate of Concentration Camps)
ITer	Il Territorio: Semestrare di storia, memoria, cultura, fotografia, ambiente
IMI	Italienische Militärinternierte (Italian Military Internee)
IMT	International Military Tribunal
Ing.	Ingenieur (German honorific for engineer)
ins.	inserto (Italian archival abbreviation: insert)
Interbrigade	International Brigade (Spanish Civil War)
inv. č.	inventárne číslo (Slovak archival abbreviation: inventory number)
ISI	Institut za savremenu istoriju (Institute of Contemporary History, Belgrade, Serbia)
ISRECIM	Archivio dell'Istituto Storico della Resistenza e dell'età contemporanea di Imperia (Archives of the Historical Institute of the Resistance and the Contemporary Age of Imperia, Imperia, Italy)
ISRSCPC	Istituto storico della resistenza e della società contemporanea in Cuneo e provincia (Historical Institute of the Resistance and Contemporary Society in Cuneo and Province)
ISSREC	Istituto sondriese per la storia della resistenza e dell'età contemporanea (Sondrio Institute for the History of the Resistance and the Contemporary Era, Sondrio, Italy)
ISTRECO	Istituto per la storia della resistenza e della società contemporanea della Marca trevigiana (Institute for the History of the Resistance and Contemporary Society in the March of Treviso)
IT	Italien (Italian; German file designation used in captured Italian military records)
ITS	International Tracing Service (Bad Arolsen, Germany)
IWM	Imperial War Museum (London)
Izv	Izvestiia
JAF	Jednotný archivní fond (single archival collection: Czech archival signature)
Jav	Jalkväen vuosisikirja
JCS	Journal of Contemporary History
JGKS	Jahrbücher für Geschichte und Kultur Südosteuropa
JGLS	Journal of the Gypsy Lore Society
JIM-bg	Jevrejski istorijski muzej, Beograd (Jewish Historical Museum, Belgrade)
JMGS	Journal of Modern Greek Studies
JMIS	Journal of Modern Italian Studies
JNOF	Jedinstveni narodnooslobodilački front (Unitary National Liberation Front, Yugoslavia)
JO	Journal Officiel de la République française
“Joint”	American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee
Joint-ul	Romanian: “The Joint,” American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee
JSU	Juventudes Socialistas Unificadas (Unified Socialist Youth; Spanish Republican organization)
Jud.	judet (Romanian: district)
JuNS-V	Justiz und NS-Verbrechen
K	kutija (Serbian archival abbreviation: box)

K 149 PTI	MOL archival signature for Provincial Police Reports of the Hungarian Ministry of Internal Affairs
KA	Kansallisarkisto (National Archives of Finland, Helsinki)
KaKy	Katochiki Kyvernisi (Greek: Occupying Government)
KanArk	Kansan Arkisto (The Peoples' Archive, Helsinki)
Kč	Czechoslovak crown
KdS	Kommandeur der Sicherheitspolizei und des Sicherheitsdienstes (Command Office of the Security Police and Security Service)
Ke	Kotijoukkojen esikunta (Staff of the Home Army of Finland)
KEOKH	Külföldiek Ellenőrző Országos Központi Hatóság (Hungarian National Central Alien Control Office)
KEV	Komisarstvo za evreiskite vüprosi (Bulgarian Commissariat for Jewish Affairs)
KGB	Komitet gosudarstvennoi bezopasnosti (Committee for State Security in the USSR)
KISOK	Középiskolai Sportkörök Országos Központja (National Center for Secondary Sports Clubs)
KKE	Kommounistikó Kómma Elládas (Communist Party of Greece)
KKSH	Kryqi i Kuq Shqiptar (Albanian Red Cross)
KL	Konzentrationslager (German: concentration camp)
Klim	milk spelled backward (brand of canned milk used during World War II)
KMOF	Közérdekü Munkaszolgálat Országos Felügyelője (Hungarian Public Labor Service)
ko	kokoelma (Finnish archival term: collection)
KPK	Komanda Përgjithshme Karabinierisë (Albanian: General Command of the Carabinieri)
Ks	Slovak crown
KSS	Komunistická Strana Slovenska (Communist Party of Slovakia)
KuKau	Kuopion kaupunginkirjasto (City Library of Kuopio, Finland)
KUZOP	Komisija za utvrdivanje zlocina okupatro i njihovih pomagaca (Slovenian Commission for the Investigation of Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators)
KZ	Konzentrationslager (German slang abbreviation for concentration camp)
LAORE	Agenzia regionale per l'attuazione dei programmi regionali in campo agricolo per lo sviluppo rurale (Regional Agency for the Implementation of Regional Programs in the field of Agriculture for Rural Development)
LAT	Los Angeles Times
LCSDIU	Lettera del Centro Studi e Documentazione Isola di Ustica
LD	Lacio Drom: Rivista bimestrale di studi zingari
LDH	Ligue des droits de l'Homme (League of Human Rights, Paris)
LE	Légion étrangère (French Foreign Legion)
LFC	Légion française des combattants (French Legion of Veterans)
LFC-VRN	Légion française des combattants et des Volontaires de la Révolution Nationale (French Legion of Veterans and Volunteers of the National Revolution; Vichy veterans organization)
LG	Landgericht (German regional or district court)
LICA	Ligue internationale contre l'antisemitisme (International League against Antisemitism)
L'impegno	L'impegno: Rivista di storia contemporanea del Vercellese, del Biellese e della Valsesia
Lin.RP	Linnoitusrakennuspataljoona (Fortification Construction Battalion)
LP	Lagărul de Prizonieri (prisoner of war camp)
LPRA	Lagărul de prizonieri de război americani (camp of American prisoners of war)
LPRS	Lagărul de Prizonieri Sovietici (Romanian camp of Soviet prisoners of war)

LPN	Le Petit Niçois
ES	Eudový Súd (Slovak People's Court)
LSA	Landssvikarkivet (Norwegian Treason Archive, Norwegian National Archives, Oslo)
LuNo	Lumea Noastră
M-L	Maine-et-Loire Département (France)
MA	Moreshet Archive (Menashe, Israel)
MACE	Maison d'Accueil Chrétienne pour Enfants (Christian Reception Home for Children)
MACVG	Ministère des Anciens Combattants et Victimes de Guerre (Ministry of Veterans and Victims of War, Brussels)
MAE	Ministero degli Affari Esteri (Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs)
MAE-ASD	Ministero degli Affari Esteri-Archivio Storico-diplomatico (Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs–Diplomatic History Archives, Roma)
MAE-R	Ministerul Afacerilor Externe (Romanian Ministry of Foreign Affairs)
MagIs	Magazin Istoric
MAI	Ministerio dell' Africa Italiana (Ministry of Italian Africa)
MAN-MI	Mission des Archives nationales auprès du ministère de l'Intérieur de l'Outre-mer et des Collectivités territoriales (Mission of the French National Archives of the Ministry of the Interior of the Overseas and Territorial Communities, Paris)
MaP	Music and Politics
MATP	Mémoire d'Ardèche et Temps présent
MBF	Militärbefehlshaber in Frankreich (German Military Commander-in-Chief in France)
MCG	Marele Cartier General (Romanian Army General Headquarters)
MDVP	Ministerstvo Dopravy a Verejných Prác (Slovak Ministry of Transportation and Public Works)
MÉ	Magyar Élet
Mer-Niger	Chemins de Fer de la Méditerranée au Niger (Mediterranean-Niger Railway, or Mediterranean Niger Company)
MF	Ministerstvo Financii (Slovak Ministry of Finance)
Mg	Monde gitan
MH	Ministerstvo Hospodárstva (Slovak Ministry of Economic Affairs)
Mi	Ministero Dell'Interno (Italian Ministry of the Interior)
MI 9	Military Intelligence 9 (Escape and Evasion)
MIOK	Magyar Izraeliták Országos Képviselete (National Representation of Hungarian Jews)
MIPI	Magyar Izraeliták Pártfogó Irodája (Welfare Bureau of Hungarian Jews)
Mj	Revue d'histoire de la Shoah: Le Monde juif
MmJa	Memorijalni muzej Jasenovac (Jasenovac Memorial Museum, Croatia)
MMVNV	Montech, ma ville, notre ville: Journal municipal
MN	Chemins de Fer de la Méditerranée au Niger (Mediterranean-Niger Railway, or Mediterranean Niger Company)
MNCR	Mouvement National contre le Racisme (National Movement against Racism)
MNO	Ministerstvo Národnej Obrany (Slovak National Defense Ministry)
MNZ-TF	Magyar Nemzeti Múzeum Torteneti Fénykeptár (Hungarian National Museum, Photographic Collection, Budapest)
MNZS	Múzej novejse zgodovine (National Museum of Contemporary History, Ljubljana, Slovenia)
MOL	Magyar Országos Levéltár (National Archives of Hungary, Budapest)

MonOf	Monitorul Oficial
Moravod	Slovenské dolnomoravské vodné družstvo (Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative)
MRDG	Ministère de la Réconstruction, Direction Générale (Belgian Ministry of Reconstruction, General Directorate, Belgium)
MRN	Musée de la Résistance Nationale (Museum of the National Resistance, Paris)
MRNJ	Muzej Revolucije Narodnosti Jugoslavije (People's Revolutionary Museum of Yugoslavia, Belgrade)
Msg.	Monsignor
MSP-L	Ministerstvo sociální péče, Londýn (Czechoslovak Ministry of Social Welfare, London)
MStM	Marele Stat Major (Romanian Army General Staff)
MT	Le Magazine de la Touraine
MTK	Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre (Circle of Hungarian Fitness Activists)
MUDr.	Medicinae Universae Doctor (Latin abbreviation for physician, commonly used in Slovakia)
MUP	Ministarstva unutarnjih poslova (Croatian Ministry of the Interior)
MV	Ministerstvo vnútra (Slovak Ministry of the Interior)
MV	Motor Vessel (Royal Navy designation, plus ship's name)
MVAC	Milizia volontaria anticomunista (Italian Anticommunist Voluntary Militia; Fascist organization)
MVR	Ministerstvo na vaeutreshnite raboti (Bulgarian Ministry of the Interior)
MVSN	Milizia Volontaria per la Sicurezza Nazionale (Voluntary Militia for National Security, e.g., "Black Shirts")
MZ	Ministarstvo zdravstva (Croatian Ministry of Health)
MZSML	Magyar Zsidó Múzeum és Levéltár (Archives of the Jewish Museum of Hungary, Budapest)
MZV	Ministerstvo Zahraničných Vecí (Slovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs)
NaP	Národní archiv v Praze (Czech National Archives, Prague)
NARA	United States National Archives and Records Administration, College Park, MD
NarNov	Narodne novine
NatPprs	Nationalities Papers
NbS	Narodna biblioteka Srbije (National Library of Serbia, Belgrade)
NBUV	Vernadsky National Library of Ukraine (Kyiv)
n.d.	no date
Nda	Nedićeva arhiva (Nedić Archives, VaB, Belgrade)
NDH	Nezavisna Država Hrvatska (Independent State of Croatia)
NeS	Nord e Sud (Naples)
NG	Nuremberg Government (Nuremberg war crimes trials document prefix)
NGO	nongovernmental organization
NMT	Nuremberg Military Tribunal
NO	Nouvel Observateur
NOB	Narodnoosvobodilna borba (Slovenian War of National Liberation)
Nom	Novi omanut
NOP	Narodnooslobojilacki pokret (Yugoslav National Liberation Movement)
NOR	Narodnooslobodilački rat (Yugoslav War of National Liberation)
NOT	Népbíróságok Országos Tanácsa (Hungarian National Council of People's Courts)

N.P.	no publisher
n.p.	not paginated
NS	Nasjonal Samling (National Assembly; Norwegian Nazi Party)
Ob	L'Oribus
OBE	Order of the British Empire
OF	Otechestven Front (Bulgarian Fatherland Front)
OFM	Ordo Fratrum Minorum (Order of Friars Minor)
Ogg.:	Oggetto (Italian: regarding)
OGYK	Országgyűlési Könyvtár (Library of the Hungarian Parliament, Budapest)
OJB	Organization of Jews in Bulgaria
OKH	Oberkommando des Heeres (Supreme Command of the German Army)
OKW	Oberkommando der Wehrmacht (Supreme Command of the German Armed Forces)
OLG	Oberlandesgericht (German Higher Regional Court)
OM	Oikeusministeriö (Archive of the Ministry of Justice, Finnish National Archives, Helsinki)
OMGUS	Office of the Military Government for Germany, United States
ONACVG	Office National des Anciens Combattants et Victimes de Guerre (National Office of Veterans and Victims of War, Ministry of Defense, Paris)
ONV	Okresný národný výbor (Slovak: District National Committee)
OOYV	Odessa Oblast' Archives records from the collections of Yad Vashem, Jerusalem
ORT	Obshchestvo remeslennogo i zemledel'cheskogo truda (Society for Handicraft and Agricultural Work, a Jewish aid organization)
OSE	Oeuvre de Secours aux Enfants (French Children's Aid Society)
OSP	Odeljenje specijalne policije (Serbian Special Police)
OSPB	Ministerstvo na obshtestvenite sgradi, pūtishtata i blagoustroistvoto (Bulgarian Ministry of Public Works)
OSPEA	Omada Symviōsēs Politikōn Exoristōn Anaphēs (Commune of Political Exiles of Anafi, Greece)
OSPEPh	Omada Symviōsēs Politikōn Exoristōn Pholegandrou (Commune of Political Exiles of Pholegandros, Greece)
OSS	Office of Strategic Services
OT	Organisation Todt (Nazi construction organization)
OÚ	Okresný úrad (Slovak district office)
OV	Okresný Velit'el' (Slovak district commander)
OVRA	Organizzazione vigilanza repressione antifascismo (Italian Organization for Vigilance and Repression of Antifascism)
OVTP	Otdel vremenna trudova povinnost (Bulgarian Bureau of Temporary Labor)
P/	préfet (French prefect with departmental abbreviation)
PäA	Päämajan Arkisto (Archive of the Finnish General Headquarters, Finnish National Archives, Helsinki)
PAAA	Politisches Archiv des Auswärtigen Amtes (Political Archives of the German Foreign Office, Berlin)
PAI	Polizia dell'Africa Italiana (Police of Italian Africa)
PCd'I	Partito Comunista d'Italia (Communist Party of Italy, 1921–1926)
PCE	Partido Comunista de España (Communist Party of Spain)
PCF	Parti communiste français (French Communist Party)

PCI	Partito Comunista Italiano (Italian Communist Party after 1926)
PCIRO	Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization (International Tracing Service predecessor organization)
PCMCM	Președenția Consiliului de Miniștri-Cabinetul Militar, România (Romanian Presidency of Council of Ministers-Military Cabinet)
PCR	Partidul Comunist Român (Romanian Communist Party)
PdS	La Provincia di Sondrio
PetC	Petit Courier
PFSH	Partia Fashiste Shqiptarë (Albanian Fascist Party)
PG	prigioniere (-ri) di guerra (Italian: prisoner or prisoners of war, POW)
Philobiblon	Philobiblon: Transylvanian Journal of Multidisciplinary Research in Humanities
PI	Photographic Interpretation (report)
PI	Provincia di Imperia: Rivista bimestrale dell'Amministrazione provinciale di Imperia
p.i.	par intérim (French: acting post)
PIA	Párttörténeti Intézet Archivuma (Archives of the Institute of Party History, Budapest)
PK	Point Kilométrique (Kilometric Post)
PKSh	Partia Komuniste e Shqipërisë (Communist Party of Albania)
PM	Polizia Militare (Italian Military Police)
Pm	Pedagoški muzej (Pedagogical Museum, Belgrade)
PNF	Partito Nazionale Fascista (Italian National Fascist Party)
Poliivan	Poliitiset vangitsemiset (Finnish: political detention)
POPF	Parti Ouvrier et Paysan Français (French Workers' and Peasants' Party)
Popr	Povijesni prilozi
PPA	Parti Populaire Algérien (Algerian People's Party)
Ppa	Puolustusvoimien pääesikunnan arkisto (Archive of the General Staff of the Defense Forces, Finnish National Archives, Helsinki)
PPF	Parti Populaire Français (French Popular Party)
PPSh	Partia e Punës e Shqipërisë (Party of Labor of Albania-Albanian Communist Party)
PR	Policajné Riad'iteľ'stvo (Slovak Police Directorate)
Pr	préfet régional (French regional prefect)
PrMa	La Province du Maine
PS	Paris-Storey (Nuremberg war crimes trials document suffix)
PSUC	Partido Socialista Unificado de Cataluña (Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia)
PÚ	pracovny útvar (Slovak work center; euphemism for a forced labor camp)
PvPE	Puolustusvoimain pääesikunta (General Staff of the Finnish Defense Forces)
Pvttkk	Poliittisten vankien ja turvasäilöläisten korvauskomitea (Finnish: Political Prisoners and Political Detainees Compensation Committee)
PX	photographic collection designation for the Scott Macfie Gypsy Collections, University of Liverpool, United Kingdom
Q	La Quinzaine: Revue de la juive en France et à l'étranger
QSCV	Quaderni di Storia e Cultura Viareggina
RA	Riksarkivet (Norwegian National Archives, Oslo)
RAAF	Royal Australian Air Force
racc.	raccomandata (Italian archival term: registered)
RAD	Reichsarbeitsdienst (Reich Labor Service)
RAF	Royal Air Force

RAS	Rassegna degli Archivi di Stato
RASSFR	Rivista Abruzzese di Studi Storici dal Fascismo alla Resistenza
RAVSIGUR	Ravnateljstvo za javni red i sigurnost (Croatian Directorate for Public Order and Safety)
RB	La Resistenza Bresciana: Rassegna di studi e documenti dell'Istituto Storico della Resistenza di Brescia
RC	Revue de Comminges
RCAF	Royal Canadian Air Force
RCH	Review of Croatian History
Rd	Rivista dalmatica
reg. br.	registarski broj (Serbian archival abbreviation: number of registration)
RevTo	Revista Tomis
RFSS	Reichsführer-SS (Reich Leader of the SS)
RG	record group
RGASPI	Rossiiskii gosudarstvennyi arkhiv sotsial'no-politicheskoi istorii (Russian State Archives of Social and Political History (former Special [osobyi] Archive, see RGVA), Moscow)
RGBI	Reichsgesetzblatt
RGVA	Rossiiskij Gosudarstvennyj Voennyj Arkhiv (Russian State Military Archive)
RH	Republike Hrvatske (Republic of Croatia)
RICR	Revue internationale de la Croix-rouge
Riflessioni	Riflessioni: Umanesimo della Pietra
RJRS	Ravnateljstvo za javni red i sigurnost (Croatian Directorate of Public Order and Security)
RKKS	Reichskreditkassenschein (German-issued scrip)
RKU	Reichskommissariat Ukraine (Reich Commissariat Ukraine)
RLG	Regia Luogotenenza Generale (Royal General Lieutenancy; the Italian governing authority in Albania)
RMAI	Ministerul Afacerilor Interne (Romanian Ministry of Internal Affairs)
RMH	Review of Military History
RMI	La Rassegna Mensile di Israel
RNR	Royal Naval Reserves
RomS	Romani Studies
RPSR	Romanian Political Science Review
RS	Republika Slovenija (Republic of Slovenia)
RS	Ricerche Storia
RSD	Rivista Storia e Documenti
RSI	Repubblica sociale italiana (Italian Social Republic; sometimes rendered Rsi)
RsWgr	Rechtsprechung zum Wiedergutmachungsrecht
Rt.	részvénytársaság (Hungarian: company)
RTim	Rivista Timocul
RUR ŽO	Ravnateljstvo Ustaškog Redarstva–Židovski odsjek (Ustaša Police Directorate–Jewish Section)
s/c	sous couvert (de) (French bureaucratic abbreviation: under the cover of)
S-P	Sous-Préfet (French subprefect)
SA	Sturmabteilungen (Storm Detachment, aka Nazi Storm Troopers)
ŠAB	Štátny archív v Bratislave (State Archive in Bratislava)
ŠABY	Štátny Archív v Bytči (State Archive in Bytca, Slovakia)

ŠAN	Štátny archív v Nitre (State Archive in Nitra, Slovakia)
SANU	Srpska akademija nauka i umetnosti (Serbian Academy of the Sciences and Arts, Belgrade)
SAO	Senior Allied Officer or Senior American Officer (prisoner of war officer spokesman)
SAP	Squadre di azione patriottica (Italian Squad of Patriotic Action)
ŠAPB	Štátny Archív v Považskej Bystrici (State Archive in Považska Bystrica, Slovakia)
ŠAPO	Štátny archív v Prešov (State Archive in Prešov, Slovakia)
SBO	Senior British Officer
SBU	Siemens-Bauunion (Siemens Construction Union)
SchlussG	Schlussgesetz (Federal German Terminal Law)
SCI	Serviciul Central de Informații (Romanian Central Intelligence Service)
SCM	Sottocapomanipolo (Italian National Republican Guard rank equivalent to a sottotenente)
ScSl	Scrinia Slavonica
SD	Sicherheitsdienst (Security Service of the Nazi SS)
SDK	Srpski dobrovoljački korpus (Serbian Volunteer Corps of Zbor)
SDP	Suomen Sosialidemokraattinen Puolue (Finnish Social Democratic Party)
SDS	Srpska državna straža (Serbian State Guard)
S.E.	Son Excellence (French: His Excellency)
Sect. Jand.	Sectorului Jandarmi (Romanian: Gendarmerie Sector)
SeM	Storia e Memoria
s.f.	sottofasciolo (Italian archival abbreviation: subfile)
s. fasc.	sottofascicolo (Italian archival abbreviation: dossier)
SfèPo	Sfera Politicii
Sft.	Sfântu (Romanian: Saint)
SGPN	Sécrtariat Général pour la Police Nationale (General Secretariat of the French National Police)
SHD	Service Historique de la Défense (Historical Service of the Ministry of Defense, Paris)
SHD-DGN	Service Historique de la Défense, Direction de la Gendarmerie Nationale (Historical Service of the Ministry of Defense, National Gendarmerie Directorate, Paris)
SHGN	Service Historique de la Gendarmerie Nationale (Historical Service of the National Gendarmerie, Paris)
SHí	Soproni Hírlap
SHN	Studia Historica Nitriensia
SIA	Solidarité internationale antifasciste (International Solidarity of Antifascists)
SICELP	Società Italiana Costruzioni e Lavori Pubblici (Italian Society for Construction and Public Works)
Siguranța	Serviciul Secret de Informații (Romanian Secret Intelligence Service)
SIM	Servizio Informazioni Militare (Italian Military Intelligence Service)
Sipo	Sicherheitspolizei (German Security Police)
SISRM	Serviciul de Informații și Securitate al Republicii Moldova (Archives of the State Security and Intelligence Service of the Republic of Moldova, Chișinău)
SJA	Soviet Jewish Affairs
SkR	Sonderkommando Russland (Special Kommando Russia)
SINo	Službene novine
S/St	Slovene Studies

SM	Sosiaaliministeriön (Finnish Ministry of Social Affairs)
SMat	La Sarthe du Matin
SME	Stato Maggiore dell'Esercito (General Staff of the Royal Italian Army)
SMGC	Scott Macfie Gypsy Collections (University of Liverpool, United Kingdom)
SML	Somogy Megyei Levéltár (Somogy County Archives, Kaposvár, Hungary)
SMRE	Stato maggiore del Regio Esercito (General Staff of the Royal Italian Army)
SNA	Slovenský Národný Archív (Slovak National Archive, Bratislava)
SNCF	Société Nationale des Chemins de fer français (French National Railway Service)
SNCRR	Societatea Națională de Cruce Roșie din România (National Society of the Red Cross of Romania)
SNP	Slovenskè Národnè Povstanie (Slovak National Uprising)
SNS 1	Suomen-Neuvostoliiton rauhan ja ystävyyden seuran (Finnish-Soviet Peace and Friendship Society)
ŠOA	Štátny oblastný archív (Slovak State Regional Archive, with district)
ŠOA-B	Štátny oblastný archive-Bratislava (Slovak State Regional Archive-Bratislava)
ŠOBA	Štátny oblastný Úrad (Slovak State Regional Office)
ŠOKA	Štátny okresný archív (Slovak State District Archive, with district)
ŠOKA-Pr	Štátny okresný archív-Prievidza (Slovak State District Archive-Prievidza)
SOL	Service d'ordre Légionnaire (Service of the Legionary Order)
SOŠ	Stráž Obrany Štátu (Slovak National Defense Guard)
SoTu	Sotavankileirien tutkimuskeskus (Archive of the Prisoner of War Camp Research Center, Finnish National Archives, Helsinki)
SoUpj	Sotilasaikakauslehti: Upseeriliiton julkaisu
ŠP	Šiesti Rabotný Prápor (Slovak Sixth Labor Battalion)
SP IV	Specijalna policija IV (Serbian Special Police, 4th Section)
SPD	Suomen Sosialidemokraattinen Puolue (Finnish Social Democratic Party)
SPRSo	Suomen Punaisen Ristin sotavankitoimisto (Prisoner of War Office of the Finnish Red Cross)
ŠR	Štátna Rada (Slovak State Council)
SRI	Serviciul Român de Informații (Romanian Intelligence Service)
SS	Schutzstaffel (Nazi Protective Corps)
Ss	Studi storici
SS-HHB	SS-Hauptamt Haushalt und Bauten (SS-Main Office of Budget and Buildings)
SS-RSHA	SS-Reichssicherheitshauptamt (SS-Reich Security Main Office)
SSAA	Sottosegretariato di Stato per gli Affari Albanesi (Sub-Secretary of State for Albanian Affairs)
SSCE	Service du Contrôle des Étrangers (French Service of the Supervision of Foreigners)
SSE	Service Social des Étrangers (French Social Service to Foreigners)
SSI	Serviciul Special de Informații (Romanian Special Intelligence Service)
SSO	SS-Offiziersakte (SS officer file)
SSR	Soviet Socialist Republic
Sss	Šinagan sak'met'a saministro (Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Republic of Georgia)
StA-Münc	Staatsarchiv München (State Archive of Munich)
Stalag	Stammlager or Kriegsgefangenen-Mannschafts-Stammlager (German prisoner of war camp)
Stapo	Statspolitiet (Norwegian State Police)

STO	Service du Travail Obligatoire (Obligatory Labor Service)
ŠÚA SR	Štátny Ústredný Archív Slovenskej Republiky (State Central Archive of the Slovak Republic)
SÚj	Somogyi Újság
Supersloda	Comando Superiore FF. AA. “Slovenia e Dalmazia” (Superior Command of the Italian Armed Forces, “Slovenia and Dalmatia”)
SZSZBML	Szabolcs-Szatmár-Bereg Megyei Levéltár (Szabolcs-Szatmar-Bereg County Archives, Hungary)
T	tulo (Finnish archival abbreviation: entry)
TB	Tuberculosis
TDia	Tsentrallen Durzhaven istoricheski arhiv (Bulgarian Central Historical Archive), Sofia
Tence	Tence: Les Amis du Vieux Tence à la Découverte de notre Histoire
TM	Tribunale Militaire (French Military Tribunal)
TMWC	International Military Tribunal, Trial of the Major War Criminals , 42 vols. (Nuremberg, 1947–1949).
TNA	The National Archives (Kew, United Kingdom; formerly Public Record Office, PRO)
TR	termen redus (Romanian: reduced term of military service)
TsAFSB	Tsentrál’nyi arkhiv FSB (Central Archives of the Federal Security Bureau, Moscow)
TsAMO	Tsentrál’nyi arkhiv ministerstva oborony Rossiiskoy Federatsii (Central Archives of the Russian Ministry of Defense, Podolsk)
TsDA	Tsentrallen dŭrzhaven arhiv (Bulgarian National Archives, Sofia)
Tva	Tsentrallen voenen arhiv (Central Military Archives, Veliko Turnovo, Bulgaria)
UA	Ulkoasiainministeriön arkisto (Archive of the Finnish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Helsinki)
UAC	Ufficio Affari civili (Italian Army Civilian Affairs Office)
UCEI	Unione delle Comunità Ebraiche Italiane (Union of the Italian Jewish Community; successor of UCII)
UCII	Unione delle Comunità Israelitiche Italiane (Union of the Italian Jewish Community; predecessor of UCEI)
UD-CGT	L’Union departementale-Confédération Générale du Travail (French Departmental Union-General Confederation of Labor)
UdSSR	Union der Sozialistischen Sowjetrepubliken (German: Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; USSR)
Ufa	Universum Film AG
uff.	ufficio (Italian archival abbreviation: office)
UGB	Uprava grada Beograda (Administration of Belgrade)
UGIF	Union Générale des Israélites de France (General Union of French Jews)
UHRO	Ustaša–Hrvatska revolucionarna organizacija (Ustaša–Croatian Revolutionary Organization)
ÚHU	Ústredny hospodarsky urad (Slovak Central Economic Office)
UJRE	Union des Juifs pour la Résistance et l’entr’aide (Jewish Union for Resistance and Mutual Aid)
ÚjS	Új Somogy
UL	University of Liverpool (United Kingdom)
UMAS	L’Union metallurgique d’Arc-et-Senans (Metallurgical Union of Arc-et-Senans, France)
ÚMKL	Új Magyar Központi Levéltár (New Hungarian Central Archives, Budapest)
UNES	Unione Esercizi Elettrici (Italian Union of Electrical Concerns)

UNS	Ustaška Nadzorna Služba (Ustaša Security Police)
UNWCC	United Nations War Crimes Commission
UPV	Uradnovňa precedníctva vlády (Slovak prime minister's office)
URO	United Restitution Organization
USAAF	United States Army Air Forces
ÚŠB	Ústredna Štátnej Bezpečnosti (Slovak State Security Center)
USC	Unitarian Service Committee
USHMM	United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, Washington, DC
USHMMA	United States Holocaust Memorial Museum Archives, Washington, DC
USHMMPA	United States Holocaust Memorial Museum Photo Archives, Washington, DC
USIKS	Ustaški stegovni i kazneni sud (Ustaša Disciplinary and Criminal Court, Zagreb)
USSME	Ufficio storico dello Stato maggiore dell'Esercito (General Staff of the Italian Army, Historical Office, Rome)
USSR	Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (also Soviet Union and UdSSR)
ÚŽ	Ústredna Židov (lit.: "Jewish Center"; Slovak Jewish organization)
v	vit (Albanian archival abbreviation: year)
Vaada	Va'adat ha-'ezrah ve-hatsalah be-Budapesht (Zionist Aid and Rescue Committee, Budapest)
VaB	Vojni arhiv, Beograd (Military Archives, Belgrade)
Valpo	Valtiollinen poliisi (Finnish Security Police)
VCC	various concentration camps (International Tracing Service term)
VDAR	Vjesnik Državnog Arhiva u Rijeci
V.E.	Vittorio Emanuele III (King Victor Emanuel III)
VeHi	Veszprémi Hírlap
VeVá	Veszprém Vármegye
VFM	Vestfold fylkesmuseum (Vestfold County Museum, Tønsberg, Norway)
VfZ	Vierteljahrshefte für Zeitgeschichte
VH	Vojenská Historiá
VHA	Visual History Archive of the Shoah Foundation (Los Angeles, CA)
VHAB	Vojenský Historický Archív, Bratislava (Military Historical Archive, Bratislava)
VHAT	Vojenský Historický Archív, Trenčín (Military Historical Archive, Trenčín, Slovakia)
VIA	Voенно-istoricheskii arkhiv
VIZ	Voенно-istoricheskii zhurnal
VMS	La Vie Mancelle et Sarthoise: Revue culturelle et d'actualités de la Sarthe
VNV	Vlaamsch Nationaal Verbond (Flemish National Union)
VoB-Serbien	Verordnungsblatt des Militärbefehlshabers in Serbien/List uredaba Vojnog zapovednika u Srbiji
VoMi	Volksdeutsche Mittelstelle (SS-Office for Ethnic German Affairs)
VRID	Vienne Résistance Internement Déportation (Resistance, Internment, and Deportation Association, Department of Vienne, France)
WAPIC	West African Political Intelligence Centre (London)
WJC	World Jewish Congress
WJC-R	World Jewish Congress of Romania
WL	Wiener Library (London)
WS #	worksheet number (United States Holocaust Memorial Museum Photo Archives designation)

XH	xhaketa (Albanian archival abbreviation: microfilm)
Y-IU	Yahad–In Unum (Together–in One, Paris)
YIVO	Yidisher visnshaftlekher institut (Yiddish Scientific Institute, YIVO Institute for Jewish Research, New York)
YM	Yalkut Moresbet: Holocaust Documentation and Research
YMCA	Young Men’s Christian Association
YV	Yad Vashem (National Institute for the Memory of the Victims of Nazism and Heroes of the Resistance, Jerusalem)
YVA	Archive of the National Institute for the Memory of the Victims of Nazism and Heroes of the Resistance, Yad Vashem, Jerusalem
YVS	Yad Vashem Studies
Z	Zigeuner (German for “Gypsy”)
ZALfJ	Zwangsarbeitslager für Juden (forced labor camp for Jews)
ZAML	Zala Megyei Levéltár (Zala County Archives, Hungary)
ZBOR	Združena Borbena Organizacija Rada (United Combative Organization of Labor; lit.: “Assembly”; Serbian fascist party)
z.b.V.	zur besonderen Verwendung (special or temporary duty)
ZdL or ZStL	Zentrale Stelle der Landesjustizverwaltungen (Central Office for State Justice Administrations), Ludwigsburg, Germany (now BA-L)
ZIZ	Zürcher Illustrierte Zeitung
ŽK	Židovský Kódex (Slovak: Jewish Code)
ZKRZ	Zemaljska komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača Hrvatske (People’s Republic of Croatia State Commission for the Investigation of the Occupiers and their Collaborators)
ZNO	Zone non occupée (unoccupied or Southern Zone in France)
ZO	Zone occupée (German-occupied zone in France)
ŽOZ	Židovska općina Zagreb
ŽPS	Židovskè pracovnè stredisko (Slovak forced labor center for Jews)
ŽPT	Židovský pracovný tábor (Slovak forced labor camp for Jews)
ŽR	Židovská rada (Slovak: Jewish Council)
Zs	Zsidó (Hungarian: Jew)
ZTI	Zaist’ovací Tábor v Ilave (penal camp in Ilava, Slovakia)
ŽÚ	Župný úrad (Slovak county office)
ŽÚÚ	Židovská ústredná úradovňa (Slovak Jewish Central Office)
z.V.	zur Verfügung (German: to be at one’s disposal; e.g., temporary assignment)
ZZB	Zveza združenj borcev (Slovenian Association of Combatants)

TABLE OF APPROXIMATE RANK EQUIVALENTS

Armies		U.S. Army (World War II)	Bulgarian Army	Croatian Army	Finnish Army	French Army
German Army	General of the Army	General of the Army	n/a	Vojskovodja	Marsalkka	Maréchal
Generalfeldmarschall	General	General	General	General Pješastva	Kenraali	Général d'armée
Generaloberst	Lieutenant General	General-Leytenant	General-Leytenant	Podmaršal	Kenraaliluutnantti	Général de corps d'armée
General (der Infanterie etc.)						Altbornagy
Generalleutnant	Major General	General-Major	General	General	Kenraalimajuri	Général de division
Generalmajor	Brigadier General	Polkovnik	Pukovnik	Pukovnik	Eversti	Général de brigade
Oberst	Colonel	Podpolkovnik	Podpolkovnik	Podpukovnik	Everstiluutnantti	Colonel
Oberstleutnant	Lieutenant Colonel	Major	Major	Bojnik	Majuri	Lieutenant-colonel
Major	Major	n/a	n/a	Nadsatnik	n/a	Commandant
Hauptmann	Captain	Kapitan	Kapitan	Satnik	Kapteeni	n/a
Oberleutnant	First Lieutenant	Poporuchik	Poporuchik	Natporučnik	Luutnantti	Capitaine
Leutnant	Second Lieutenant	Podporuchik	Podporuchik	Poručnik	Vänrikki	Lieutenant
Stabsfeldwebel	n/a	n/a	n/a	Zastavnik	Sotilasmestari	n/a
Oberfeldwebel	Master Sergeant	Feldfelbel	Feldfelbel	Časnik	Väpeli	Sous-lieutenant
Feldwebel	Technical Sergeant	Podofitser	Podofitser	Stožerni Narednik	Ylikersantti	Adjudant-chef
Unterfeldwebel	Staff Sergeant	Kandidat Podofitser	Kandidat Podofitser	Narednik	Kersantti	Adjudant
Unteroffizier	Sergeant	n/a	n/a	Vodnik	n/a	Sergent-chef (Maréchal des logis-chef)
Obergefreiter	Corporal	Efreitor	Efreitor	Razvodnik	Alikersantti	Sergent (Maréchal des logis de carrière)
Gefreiter	n/a	n/a	n/a	Desetnik	Korpraali	n/a
Oberschütze	Private 1st Class	Rednik	Rednik	Domobran	Sotamies	Caporal-chef
Schütze	Private					Caporal
						Soldat

(continued)

Hungarian Army	Italian Army	Romanian Army	Serbian State Guard	Slovak Army
Tábornagy	Maresciallo d'Italia	Mareşal al României		n/a
Vezérezreides	Generale d'Armata	General de armată		n/a
Generale Designato d'Armata	Generale di Corpo d'Armata	General de corp de armată		Generál I Triedy
Vezérőrnagy	Generale di Divisione	General de divizie	Diviziski Đeneral	Generál II Triedy
Dandártábornok	Generale di Brigata	General de brigadă	Brigadni Đeneral	n/a
Ezreides	Colonnello	Colonel	Pukovník	Plukovník
Alezreides	Tenente Colonnello	Locotenent-colonel	Potpukovník	Podplukovník
Örnagy	Maggiore	Major	Major	Major
n/a	Primo Capitano	Capitan	Kapetan	Stotník
Százados	Capitano	Locotenent	Poručnik	Nadporučík
Főhadnagy	Primo Tenente	Sublocotenent	Potporučnik	Poručík
n/a	Tenente	Plutonier adjutant		Důstojnícky zástupca
Hadnagy	Sottotenente	Plutonier maior		Důstojnícky zástupca
Főtörzsőrmester	Aiutante di Battaglia	Plutonier		Rotmajster
Törzsőrmester	Maresciallo Maggiore	n/a		n/a
Őrmester	Maresciallo Capo	Sergent maior	Narednik vodnik	Zástavník
Szakszaszvezető	Maresciallo Ordinario	n/a	Narednik	Rotník
n/a	Sergente Maggiore	Sergent	Podnarednik	Čatník
Tizedes	Caporale Maggiore	Caporal	Kaplar	Čatár
Őrvezető	Caporale	Fruntaş		Desiatnik
Honvéd	Soldato	Soldat	Stražar	Slobodník
				Strelník

Paramilitaries	Black Shirts (MVSN)	Hirden	Hlinka Guard	Ustaša
Nazi SS	Comandante Generale	Stabschef	Armádník	Krilník
Reichsführer-SS	Luogotenente Generale	n/a	Divízník	Pukovník
Oberstgruppenführer	Capo di SM	n/a	Brigádník	Dopukovník
Obergruppenführer	Luogotenente Generale	n/a	Štábník	Bojník
Gruppenführer	n/a	n/a	Dozorník	Nadsatník
Brigadeführer	Console Generale	n/a	Kapitán	Satník
Oberführer	Console Comandante	Regimentfører	Nadbrojník	Nadporučník
Standartenführer	Primo Seniore	Nestregimentfører	Zbrojník	Poručník
Obersturmbannführer	Seniore	n/a	n/a	n/a
Sturmbannführer	Centurione	Sveitfører	n/a	n/a
Hauptsturmführer	Capomanipolo	Nestsveitfører	n/a	Zastavnik
Obersturmführer	Sottocapomanipolo	n/a	n/a	Častníčki
Untersturmführer				Namjestnik
	Primo Aiutante	n/a	n/a	Stožerni Vodnik
Sturmscharführer	Aiutante Capo	n/a	Skupinik	Vodnik
Hauptscharführer	Aiutante	n/a	n/a	Dovodnik
Oberscharführer	Primo Capo Squadra	Kommandersersjant	Družnik	Rojnik
Scharführer	Capo Squadra	Lagfører	Rojnik	Dorojnik
Unterscharführer	Vicecapo Squadra	Nestlagfører	Gardista	n/a
Rottenführer	Camicia Nera Scelta	Speider		Čarkar / Vojničar
SS-Sturmmann	n/a	Nestspeider
SS-Oberschütze	Camicia Nera	Hirdmann
SS-Schütze or SS-Mann

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Diane F. Afoumado: France/Vichy: Introduction, Drancy

Guy Aldridge: France/Vichy: Château de Bégué

Jean Ancel: Romania: Introduction

Silvia Q. Angelini: Italy: Bagni di Lucca, Colle di Compito

Cristina Bejan: France/Vichy: Beaune-la-Rolande, Château du Roc, Château-du-Sablou, Fort-Barraux, La Meyze, Montmélian, Reillanne, Sereilhac, Sisteron, Villemur-Sur-Tarn; Vichy Africa: Introduction, Ain Guenfounda, Ain Sefra, Akbou, Ben Chicao, Bou Azzer, Boulhaut, Carnot, Cherchel, Conakry, Constantine, Crampel, Djebel-Felten, El-Aricha, El-Guerrah, Fort Caffarelli, Hadjerat M'Guil, Kankan, Kasbah Tadla, Kenadsa, Kersas, Khenchela, Kindia, Koulikoro, La Marne, Magenta, Marrakech, Mediouna GT-14539, Mengoub, Oued-Djerch, Oued-Zenati-Bone, Oulmèes/El Karit, Quargla, Relizane, Skiriat, Tamanar, Telergma, Tendrara; Hungary: Bácsalmás, Balasagyarmat, Békéscsaba, Keszthely, Kisvárd, Máramarosziget, Marosvásárhely, Nagysurány, Paks, Pápa, Sepsiszentgyörgy, Szászrégen, Szatmárnémeti, Szeged, Zalaegerszeg; Romania: Craiova, Tecuci; Tunisia: Le Kef

Frida Bertolini: Italy: Chiesanuova, Colfiorito, Gonars, Mantua, Tonezza del Cimone, Tremiti Islands, Venice, Vicenza, Vo' Vecchio; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Lubiana

Aomar Boum: Vichy Africa: Introduction, Abadla, Agdz, Bedeau, Béni Abbès, Berguent, Berrouaghia, Boghar, Boghari, Bossuet, Bou Arfa, Bou Denib, Cheragas, Colomb-Béchar, Djelfa, Djenien Bou Rezg, Djerrada, Géryville, Im-Fout, Laghouat, Le Kreider, Mecheria, Mediouna, Menabba, Méridja, Missouri, Monod, Oued Akreuch, Oued Zem and Moulay Bouazza, Sebikotane, Settlat, Sidi El Ayachi, Skiriat

Randolph L. Braham: Hungary: Introduction, Beszterce, Debrecen, Dés, Dunaszerdahely, Eger, Kaposvár, Kecskemét, Kolozsvár, Miskolc, Nagybánya, Nagykanizsa, Nyíregyháza, Pestszenterzsébet, Sátoraljaújhely, Sopron, Veszprém

Carlo Spartaco Capogreco: Italy: Alberobello, Aprica, Bagno a Ripoli, Borgo San Dalmazzo, Campagna, Castel di Guido, Civitella della Chiana, Civitella del Tronto, Fossaloni, Isernia, Isola del Gran Sasso, Istonio Marina, Lama dei Peligni, Lanciano, Monigo, Montalbano, Montechiarugolo, Nereto, Notaresco, Pietrofitta-Tavernelle, Pisticci, Renicci di Anghiari, Sassoferrato, Scipione, Tollo, Tor-toreto, Urbisaglia; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Antivari, Arbe

Tim Cole: Hungary: Budapest

Ovidiu Creangă: Hungary: Nagyvarad; Romania: Introduction, Acmețetca, Alexandrodar, Alexandrovca, Ananiev, Balaiciuc, Balanovca, Balchi, Balta, Balta/120 Labor Battalion, Bălți/LPRS No. 7, Bălți Rauțel, Berezovca, Bernandovca, Beșad, Birzula, Bobric, Bogdanovca, Bolgrad, Bolgrad/LPRS No. 8, Bondurovca, Branița-Moghilev, București/LPRA No. 12 and No. 13, Budești/LPRS No. 7/No. 13, Budi, Călărași, Capusterna, Capustiani, Carișcov, Cațmazov, Cazaciovca, Cernăuți, Cernoviți, Cetvertinovca, Chianovca, Chișinău, Cicelnic, Cihrin, Colosovca, Conotcăuți, Copaigorod, Corbeni/LPRS No. 10, Cornești Târg, Coșarinți, Coșăuți, Covaliovca, Crăciunești and Vulcan/LPRS No. 9, Crasna, Crasneanca, Crijopol, Crivoi Ozero, Crușinovca, Cucavca, Cuzminți, Derebcin, Djurin, Doaga, Domanovca, Dornești/LRPS No. 6, Dorohoi, Dubăsari, Edineți, Galați, Golta, Golta/LPRS and labor camps, Gorai, Gordievca, Grabivți, Grosulovo, Grosdovca, Halcinți, Hrinovca, Hulievca, Iampol, Iaruga, Iasinova, Independența/LPRS No. 16, Jigovca, Ladijin, Ladijin/Stone Quarry, Liubașevca, Lozova, Lucineț, Lugova, Maia/LPRS No. 12, Manicovca, Mărculești, Miascovca, Mihailovca, Mitki, Mogilev-Podolsk, Moldavca, Molocnea, Mostovoi, Murafa, Nemerci, Nestervarca, Obodovca, Odessa, Odessa/Internment and Labor Camps, Odessa/LPRS, Oleanița, Olgopol, Onești-Noi, Orhei, Osievca, Osmanca, Ovidiopol, Ozarinți, Pecioara, Popivți, Râbnița, Rezina, Sădăgura, Șargorod, Savrani, Scazineț, Secureni, Serebria, Șiria/102 Brigade for Jews, Slivina, Slobozia / LPRS No. 1, Șmerinca, Soroca, Spicov, Stanislavcic, Stepanchi, Storojineț, Suha Balca, Suha Verba, Șumilovca, Sumovca, Târgu Jiu, Targul Vertujeni, Tarutino, Tătărești, Tatarovca, Tecuci, Teiș-Târgoviște, Țibulovca, Timișoara/LP No. 17, Timișul de Jos/LPRA No. 18, Tiraspol, Tiraspol/LPRS No. 5 and No. 11, Tivriv, Tomașpol, Tridubi, Tropova, Trostineț, Tulcin, Ustia, Vapniarca, Vasinovca, Vaslui/LPRS No. 4, Vazdovca, Videle, Vigoda, Vijnița, Vindiceni, Vlădeni-Homorod/LPRS No. 2, Voitovca, Voroșilovca, Vradievca, Zabocrici, Zahariovca

László Csősz: Hungary: Csepel Island / Internment Camps

- Giovanna D'Amico: Italy: Lipari Island, Mamula and Prevlaka Islands, Roccatederighi, Ustica Island, Verona; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Mamula Island and Prevlaka, Zlarino
- Maura de Bernart: Italy: Forlì
- Tommaso Dell'Era: Italy/Occupied Albania: Fier, Fushë Arrëz, Gërman, Kavajë, Klos, Kolonjë, Kruja, Kukës, Pejë, Peqin, Prezë, Priština, Pukë, Villa Shiroka
- Andrea Di Stefano: Italy: Corropoli, Farfa, Gioia del Colle, Le Fraschette di Alatri, Sforzacosta, Tossicia, Visco
- Diana Dumitru: Romania: Bălți/Rauțel, Chișinău, Edineț
- Nicoletta Fasano: Italy: Aosta, Aravecchia, Asti, Bergoggi and Celle Ligure, Calvari di Chiavari, Sondrio, Vallecrosia
- Andrea Giuseppini: Italy: Fertilia, Fiume
- Ivo Goldstein: Croatia: Jasenovac I and II, Jasenovac III, Jasenovac IV, Jasenovac V
- Amedeo Osti Guerrazzi: Italy: Introduction, Agnone, Ariano Irpino, Boiano, Buccari, Cairo Montenotte, Camugnano and Bazzano, Casacalenda, Castagnavizza, Fabriano, Laurana, Manfredonia, Monteforte Irpino, Petriolo, Poggio Terza Armata, Pollenza, Ponza, San Tomaso della Fossa, Sassoferato, Scuola Santa Croce, Senigallia, Servigliano, Solofra, Treia, Ugliano, Ventotene, Vinchiaturio; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Buccari, Melada
- Alexis Herr: Italy/Occupied East Africa
- Ján Hlavinka: Slovakia: Introduction, Dubnica Nad Váhom/Work Unit, Hiadel', Ilava/Work Center for Jews, Marianka, Nováky, Sered
- Abby Holekamp: France/Vichy: Agde, Casseneuil, Le Barcarès, Château de Tombebouc, Collioure, Fort-de-Peigney, Jargeau, Lamotte-Beuvron, Lannemezan, Marseille/Hôtel de Bompard, Moisdon-La-Riviere, Perpignan, Récébédou, Rennes, Rivel, Saint-Sulpice-la-Pointe, Soudeilles, Troyes
- Jens Hoppe: Croatia: Đakovo, Gospić, Gospić/Jadovno, Gospić/Pag Island, Jasenovac V, Kerestinec, Koprivnica, Kruščica, Lepoglava, Lobargrad, Tenjé; Italy: Ferramonti di Tarsia; Italy/Occupied North Africa: Buqbuq, Giado, Sidi Azaz; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Arbe, Brazza Island, Cupari, Curzola Island, Gravosa, Lesina Island, Mezzo Island, Porto Re; Tunisia: Introduction, Djebel Chambi, Djebibinia, Djelloula, Djougar, Enfidaville, Gabès, Kondas, Marcia Beach, Mohamedia, Sainte Marie du Zit, Saouaf, Sbikha, Tniet-Agarev, Zaghouan
- Willa Johnson: France/Vichy: Nexon, Noé
- Milan Koljanin: Serbia: Introduction, Smederevska Palanka
- Alexander Korb: Croatia: Đakovo, Gospić, Gospić/Jadovno, Gospić/Pag Island, Jasenovac V, Jastrebarsko, Kerestinec, Lobargrad; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Melada
- Alexander Kruglov: Romania: Balanovca, Balchi, Balta, Berezovca, Berșad, Birzula, Budi, Carișcov, Cernoviți, Cicelnic, Copaigorod, Crasna, Crișopol, Crivoi Ozero, Cucavca, Derebcin, Djurin, Dubăsari, Golta, Gorai, Grabivți, Hrinovca, Lucineț
- Jerome Legge: Italy: Fossoli
- Alexandra Lohse: Croatia: Introduction; France/Vichy: Alboussière, Annecy, Argelès-sur-Mer, Barenton, Chibron, Fréjus, Grammont, Gurs, Le Mont-Dore, Les Eaux Bonnes, Nay, Port-Vendres, Prémol, Rieucros, Saint-Germain-les-Belles, Saint-Nectaire, Saint-Paul-d'Eyejeaux, Saliers, Sallanches, Valbonnais; Hungary: Barcs, Bárdfalva, Budafok, Budakalász, Budapest/Columbus Street, Budapest/Conti Street Prison, Budapest/KISOK, Budapest/Magdolna Street, Budapest/Margit Boulevard, Budapest/Mosonyi Street, Budapest/Óbuda, Budapest/Rökk Szilárd Street, Budapest/Tattersall, Csepel Island, Csongrád, Csörgő, Garany, Győr, Ipolyság, Kalocsa, Kassa, Kistarcsa, Komárom, Léva, Mohács, Monor, Nagykanizsa/Internment Camp, Nagyszöllös, Pécs, Ricse, Sárvár, Siklós, Szécsény, Székesfehérvár, Szeklence, Szilágyosmlyó, Szolnok, Szombathely, Técső, Topolya, Újvidék, Ungvár, Verebély, Zombor; Romania: Liubașevca, Lugova, Tatarovca, Ustia, Vazdovca, Verhovca; Slovakia: Hiadel', Nižný Hrabovec, Petič
- Oleksandr Marinchenko: Romania: Balti/LPRS No. 7, Slobozia/LPRS No. 1, Tiraspol/LPRS No. 5 and No 11.
- Dallas Michelbacher: Romania: Calafat, Caracal, Lugoj, Turnu-Severin
- Eduard Nižnanský: Slovakia: Degeš pre Nitre, Nováky, Vyhne
- Susan Papp: Hungary: Beregszász, Nagyszöllös
- Vanda Rajcan: Slovakia: Introduction, Bojková, Bratislava/Patrónka, Bystré, Degeš, Devínska Nová Ves, Dubnica nad Váhom/Concentration Camp for Roma, Hanušovce nad Topľou, Ilava/Detention Center, Ilava/Work Unit, Ivánka pri Dunaji, Jablonica, Jarabá, Kostolná, Kral'ovany, Láb, Lipníky, Miloslavov, Most na Ostrove, Nováky, Nové Mesto nad Váhom, Očová, Poprad, Revúca, Sered', Svätý Jur, Ústie nad Oravou, Veľký Kýr, Vyhne, Žilina, Žilina/Work Center, Zohor
- Julia Riegel: France/Vichy: Gaillon, Paris / La Petite Roquette, Paris/Tourelles, Pithiviers, Pithiviers (CSS)
- Marianne Robins: France/Vichy: Tence

Steven F. Sage: Bulgaria: Introduction, Dupnitsa, Ferdinand, Gara Bov, Gara Chepino, Gonda Voda, Gorna Dzhumaya, Gorna Oryahovitsa and Dolna Oryahovitsa, Haskovo, Ihtiman, Krūstopole, Lovech, Nedelino, Parzardzhik, Plovdiv, Ribaritsa, Shumen, Skopie, Smedovo, Sofia, Somovit, Struma Valley, Svishtov, Trūnska Klisura, Vratsa, Zhelūzartsi, Zvūnichevo

Eliezer Schilt: France/Vichy: Agde, Aincourt, Arc-et-Senans, Audaux, Aulus-les-Bains, Bagnères-de-Luchon, Boussais, Bram, Brens, Buzet-sur-Baïse, Casseneuil, Catus, Cauterets, Caylus, Chabanet, Château-Doux, Chaudes-Aigues, Choisel, Coray, Coudrecieux, Douadic, Écrouves, Évaux-les-Bains, Fort-de-Vancia, Frontignan, Grez-en-Bouère, La Bourboule, Lacaune les Bains, La Guiche, La Lande-à-Monts, Lamalou-les-Baines, Lamotte-Beuvron, La Morellerie, Lannemezan, Le Cheylard, Les Alliers, Les Milles, Loriol, Louviers, Mallavieille, Marseille/Hôtel le Terminus du Port, Marseille/Le Brébant, Masseube, Mérignac, Miramas, Moisdon-la-Rivière, Moley, Monseigneur, Montech, Montélimar, Montlhéry, Montreuil-Bellay, Montsûrs, Mulsanne, Plénée-Jugon, Poitiers, Pontivy, Puy-l'Evêque, Récébédou, Rennes, Rivel, Rivesaltes, Saint-Cyprien, Saint-Maurice-aux-Riches-Hommes, Troyes, Voves; Vichy Africa: Agdz, Conakry, Immouzer Des Marmoucha, Oued Zem and Moulay Bouazza

Raz Segal: Hungary: Huszt, Munkács

Oula Silvennoinen: Finland: Introduction

Jakub Smutný: Italy: San Tomaso della Fossa

Marianne Neerland Soleim: Norway: Introduction, Berg, Bredtveit

Paola Trevisan: Italy: Prignano sulla Secchia

Nikos Tzafleris: Italy/Occupied Greece: Akronafplia, Anafi Island, Athens/Averof Prison, Athens/Empeirikeio, Athens/Kallithéa, Corfu-Lazaretto Island, Iōannina, Kalavryta, Katouna, Larissa, Pholegandros, Thebes, Trikala, Vonitsa

Madeline Vadkerty: Slovakia: Introduction, Krupina

Mirza Velagic: Croatia: Jasenovac I and II, Jasenovac III, Jasenovac IV, Jasenovac V

Lars Westerlund: Finland: Introduction, Äänislinna, Detached Battalion 21

Joseph Robert White: Croatia: Sisak I and II, Slavonka Požega; France/Vichy: Aincourt, Arc-et-Senans, Brens, Castres, Cauterets, Coudrecieux, Égletons, Évaux-les-Bains, Fort-de-Vancia, Fort du Portalet, Gaillac, La Morellerie, Le Mont-Dore, Les Milles, Le Vernet d'Ariège, Montreuil-Bellay, Poitiers, Rabès, Récébédou, Rivesaltes, Rouillé, Ruffieux, Saint-Cyprien, Saint-Georges d'Aurac, Saint-Maurice-aux-Riches-Hommes, Savigny par Valleur, Voves; Vichy Africa: Ksabi, Laghouat, Ram Ram, Talzaza Menabba, Tombouctou; Italy: Agnone, Antivari, Borgo San Dalmazzo, Casoli, Chieti, Citta Sant'Angelo, Elba Island, Lauria, Montechiarugolo, Senegallia; Italy/Occupied Southeast France: Embrun, Lynwood Villa, Megève, Mentone, Modane, Sospello, Vence; Italy/Occupied Yugoslavia: Cighino; Slovakia: Lipníky

Anna M. Wittmann: Hungary: Bor

ABOUT THE EDITOR

Joseph Robert White, Applied Research Scholar with the Jack, Joseph and Morton Mandel Center for Advanced Holocaust Studies, received his B.A. and M.A. degrees from Georgia State University and his Ph.D. in Modern European History from the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. He was a fellow at the Mandel Center in 2001 and returned to work on the Encyclopedia of Camps and Ghettos in 2004. Among his many other tasks, he contributed more than 90 essays to Volume I, including the introduction to the section that covered the early Nazi camps, before he took over as editor of this volume. Dr. White published two articles in the journal Holocaust and Genocide Studies, taught 31 online and blended courses at the University of Maryland University College, and gave lectures around the country. He was also one of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum's authorities on the archives of the International Tracing Service. To our sorrow, Dr. White died unexpectedly in May 2016.

NAMES INDEX

This index lists all names alphabetically by family name. Names and spellings of names sometimes vary, because of marriage, use of a pseudonym, or alternate spellings in the source documents. Although efforts have been expended to make the listings as consistent as possible, a person may appear more than once in the index. Where known, we have used cross-references to link these names together. Page numbers in italics refer to illustrations and their captions.

- Abala, 254
Abdelaziz, El Hachemi, 258
Abdelkader, Agha, 263
Abetz, Otto, 95
Abitbol, Michel, 247
Ablinger, Max, 411
Abraham, Hilde Fanny, 428
Abrahams, Stephen, 338
Abram, Iancu, 704
Abramovici, Carol, 574
Abramovici, Iosif, 604
Abramovici, Pribluda Shloimu, 597
Abromeit, Franz, 358
Achgoua, Jean-Pierre, 109
Aćimović, Milan, 833, 834, 836
Ackerman, Moise, 640
Adam, André, 180
Adamou, Takēs, 515
Adamov, Arthur, 108
Adamovici, Iulian, 736
Adler, Francis, 384
Adler, Sara, 361
Agafie, Vasile, 783
Ágai, Andor, 336
Agapie, Dumitru, 602, 603
Agapie, Vasile, 651, 710, 711
Agarici, Viorica, 624
Ágh, László, 349
Agnes, Adrien, 130
Ahmed, Cheikh Chetout, 266
Ahtemberg, Moise, 747
Aigner, Leslie, 323
Aimone (prince), 46
Aizemberg, Iosif, 640
Aizic, Solomon, 604
Akoun, Fernand S., 148
Akpo-Vaché, Catherine, 240
Alámaru, Rubin, 733
Albert, Lázár, 336
Albini, Umberto, 423
Albu, Nicolae, 652
Aldo, Cicero, 523
Alectoride, Teodor, 728
Alessandrini, Filippo, 419
Alexander (king), 47
Alexandrescu, Constantin, 626, 634, 662, 699, 700, 709, 731, 737, 778, 780, 805, 810, 824
Alexianu, Gheorghe, 575, 576, 578, 581, 582, 589, 590, 591, 610, 634–635, 684, 728, 729, 740, 756, 757, 803, 819
Alizoti, Feizi, 490
Alkalaj, Josef, 547
Alkalaj, Leon, 547
Alkutser, Itsak David, 41
Allain, Léon “Hector,” 156
Allart, Blanche and Pierre, 162
Alongi, Francesco, 422, 445
Alpar, Olga, 383
Alter, Itic, 604
Alype, François-Pierre, 177
Amarandei, 677
Amat-Piniella, Joaquim, 108
Ambruş, Romulus, 588, 611, 658, 659, 670, 680, 682, 717, 718, 802
Amikam, Benjamin, 384
Ammazzalorso, Armando, 422
Amoroso, Antonio, 552
Amsel, Pearl, 346
Amselek, Albert, 291
Anastasiadēs, Stergios, 521
Anderman, Heinrich, 791
Andesburg, Olea, 640
Andonianţ, Grigore, 682
Andorfer, Herbert, 836
Andrei, Cocuz, 677
Andrey, 103, 237
Andreyeva, Valentina, 86
Andrieu, Andrien, 118
Andrusin, Afanasie Grigorievici, 611
Andújar, Manuel, 218
Angel, Rosa. See Anzhel, Roza
Angeli, Alexander, 173, 183
Anolik, Erna, 384
Ansbacher, Leo, 218
Ansky, Michel, 268
Antalfy, Pál, 336
Anthoni, Arno, 84
Antl, Ödön, 343
Antoine, Maurice, 120
Antónatos, Gerasimos, 513, 518, 525
Antonescu, Ion, 570, 571, 572, 574, 575, 576, 578, 579, 580, 582, 589, 590, 595, 610, 612, 618, 619, 622, 623, 627, 628, 634, 635, 637, 638, 646, 649, 653, 656, 658, 673, 680, 682, 684, 705, 706, 714, 717, 747, 762, 766, 786, 794, 809, 817
Antonescu, Maria, 794
Antonescu, Mihai, 582, 612, 688, 767, 794
Antz, 127
Anzhel, Roza (Rosa Angel), 41
Aouad, Mohamed, 284
Apolzan, Teodor, 776
Apostolidis, Apostolos, 507
Appelt, Mirko, 76
Appignanesi (doctor), 467
Appignanesi, Maria, 466
Arato, Paul, 378
Arbib, Benedetto, 530
Armanasco, Stefano, 402
Armancourt, Jehan d’, 171, 172
Armellini, Quirino, 556
Arnaud, Raymond, 179
Arnim, Hans-Jürgen von, 895
Áron, Ferenc, 355
Arribeaue (doctor), 156
Asael, Mazal, 16–17
Aschenazi, Eti, 791
Assuied, André, 899
Astrologo, Pellegrino, 432
Atanasiu, S., 613
Atanasov, Todor Boichev, 6, 19, 42
Atkinson, John, 509, 510n14
Atsalis, Grigoris, 512
Attali, Léa, 162
Aub Mohrenwitz, Max, 265
Auerbach, Philipp, 117, 118
Auflegger, Henric, 755
Auger, Roger, 262
Aujaleu, 180
Aulanier, André, 177
Aurel, Nicolae, 653
Auzanneau, Robert-Stéphane, 169
Avelin, 255
Averöf, Yeörgios, 508
Avitabile, Domenico, 430

Babich, Ante, 473
Babin, Louis, 130
Bačić, Dragomir, 468
Bader, Paul, 832
Baderot, Alfred, 264
Badia, 771
Badoglio, Pietro, 401, 424, 436, 452, 455, 473, 502
Badsí, Mahed, 266
Baik, Eva, 386
Bajor, Örnagy, 354
Bakal, Nahum, 721
Baky, László, 306, 307, 308, 310, 346
Bălăianu, Ion, 646, 647
Balázs, Jenő, 337
Baldauf, Kurt, 173
Bălea, Valerian, 677
Băleanu, Ion C., 643, 688, 713, 715, 756
Bali, Meshulam Aron, 41
Baljak, Ventura, 57
Balkányi, Judit, 375
Balke, Harry, 173
Balogh, András, 320
Balogh, Károly, 358
Bandel, 795
Bandera, Stepan, 756
Bandini, Attilio, 452
Band-Kun, Milica, 73
Banet, Elemér, 353

- Bantaş, Constantin, 797
 Barabas, Andrei, 371
 Barac, Mark, 723
 Barad, Karol, 594
 Barbanel, Toptia, 203
 Barbato, Dario, 448
 Barber, Kathleen, 378, 379
 Barbera, Gaspero, 553
 Barbie, Klaus, 144, 534
 Barcan, Ion, 673
 Barcza, Vera, 325–326
 Bardi de Fourtou, Albert, 532
 Barillon, Roland, 132
 Barkatz, George, 297
 Barnabel, Felicia, 203
 Baron, Fred, 338, 368
 Barot, Madeleine, 236
 Baroux, Paul, 130
 Barrau, Jean-Joseph-Guillaume, 280
 Barta, Johanna, 354, 355
 Bartato, Dario, 448
 Bartaux, Edmond, 183
 Bartman, Moise “Mişu,” 687
 Bartoi, 750
 Bartos, 345
 Bartaş, Petre, 591
 Baruh, Eli, 29
 Basch, Esther, 361
 Basello, Giovanbattista, 448
 Bašić, Josip, 426
 Bassani, Gemma, 428
 Basta, 811
 Bastianini, Giuseppe, 468, 552
 Bastico, Ettore, 528, 529, 896
 Bata, József, 353
 Batory, John, 339
 Batren, Babo, 381
 Battaglia, 501
 Bauer, Anna, 114
 Bauer, Hinko, 76
 Bauer, Riccardo, 451
 Baum, Kurt, 123, 124
 Baumgarten, Jacques, 236
 Baumová, Irena, 877
 Bayer, Salo, 657
 Bazin, Raymond, 207, 237
 Beane, James B., 619
 Béard, Roger, 536
 Beaudouin, Eugène, 134
 Beaugrand, Georges, 201
 Becherman, Haim, 712
 Bechi, Filip, 736, 749
 Beer, Magda, 343
 Beerman, Armin, 891
 Behar, Victoria, 16
 Beiniş, Carol, 755
 Belardi, Italo, 448
 Belaubre, 234
 Belev, Aleksandür, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 31, 33, 35, 36
 Belkaim, Kaddur, 266
 Bella, Alzreda, 371
 Bellaïche, Haïm, 895
 Bellaïche, Robert, 902
 Belteki, Alexandru, 373
 Bena, 101
 Benakuva, Itziak, 328–329
 Benedek, Elizabet, 329
 Benedek, Marianne, 339
 Benedetti, Battista, 556
 Benedig, Margareth, 379
 Beneš, Edvard, 842
 Benesch, Erika, 346
 Benjamin, Korse, 607
 Benjamin, Walter, 168
 Benmoumen, Ahmed, 263
 Bensoussan, Abraham, 266
 Bentham, Jeremy, 194
 Benzler, Felix, 832
 Bercivici family, 679
 Bercovic, Avram, 738
 Bercu, Goldenberg, 607
 Berechet, F., 631
 Berecki, Ernő, 336, 348
 Beregfy, Károly, 305, 326
 Berendes, 132
 Berentes, László, 358
 Berg, Eta, 378
 Bergel, Joseph, 291
 Berger, 800
 Berggrav, Eivind, 567
 Bergl, Evelyn Arzt, 424, 425
 Berkani, Mohamed Aezki, 266
 Berkowitz, Mordechai, 378, 379
 Berl, Tresser, 621
 Bermann, Armin, 869
 Bernard, Joseph, 186
 Bernfeld, 335
 Bernou, Maamar ben, 266
 Bernstein, Béla, 364
 Bernştein, Haim, 726
 Bertalan, István, 358
 Bertényi, 359
 Bertoli, Paolo, 57
 Berzescu, Gheorghe, 773
 Best, Werner, 111
 Bestoso, Mario, 461
 Beynet, 269
 Bianchini, Severa, 466
 Bica, Liviu, 682
 Bielsa, Lluís Martí, 107
 Bienstock, 278
 Bier, Rudi, 544
 Billot, M. H., 180
 Binovici, I., 716
 Birnbaum, Teresa, 366
 Biró, József, 340, 341
 Biroli, Pirzio, 540
 Biteau, 180
 Bitozzi, Mario, 450
 Bjelinski, Bruno, 547
 Blancagemma, Antonio, 449
 Blanchet, Albert, 160
 Blasselle, 128
 Bleier, Katherine, 374
 Bleier, Olga, 368
 Blessi, 266
 Blick, Zipora, 328
 Blinder, Iosif, 607
 Bloch, Elie, 157, 203
 Bloch, Raymond, 209
 Blum, Léon, 90, 95, 139, 144, 145
 Blumel, André, 139
 Blumental, Aldred, 670
 Bobei, Gheorghe, 588, 611, 612, 686
 Bobinac, Parica, 65
 Bocchini, Arturo, 390, 407, 413, 453
 Bodet, 160, 161
 Bodo, 532
 Bogdanov, Asen Georgiev, 32
 Böhm, Ignác, 364
 Böhme, Franz, 832, 835
 Bohny-Reiter, August and Friedl, 215
 Bohrmann, Leopold, 189
 Bohuška, Jozef, 879
 Boiserie, Jean-Baptiste, 124
 Boisson, Pierre, 240, 260, 273, 279, 280, 298
 Boitel, 249
 Boivin, Yves, 211
 Bók, Miklós, 343
 Boletini, 491
 Bolgáč, Viliam, 869, 891
 Bolintineanu, C., 592, 593
 Bolocan, Petru, 820
 Bonanni, Casola, 399
 Bonanno family, 462
 Bonev, Svilen, 29
 Bonfiglio, Salvatore, 476
 Bonfils, Maurice, 196
 Bonneville, Aimé, 139
 Bonofigli, Renzo, 469
 Bonomini, Ernesto, 212
 Borbély, Kálmán, 319
 Borbola, 366
 Bordiga, Amadeo, 470
 Borgongini-Duca, Francesco, 400, 410, 416, 418, 423, 435, 439, 441, 454, 466
 Boris III (king), 2, 4, 10, 12
 Borisov, Vladimir, 662
 Borjan, Budislav, 70
 Bornemissza, Miklós, 370
 Borsa, Mario, 435
 Borsodi, József, 344
 Botez, Mihai, 739, 818
 Botilă, Mihai, 761
 Botnaru, Marcu, 596
 Botoroagă, Gheorghe, 714, 715, 721, 752, 756, 799, 804
 Bouchard, M., 201
 Bouet, Louis, 127
 Bouffet, René, 173
 Bougas “Goering,” 505
 Bougzouf, 263
 Bouhali, Larbi, 266
 Bouquillard, M., 206
 Bourgain, Louis, 182, 202, 203
 Bourguiba, Habib, 144
 Bourguiba, Mahmoud, 144
 Bourrigault, 179
 Boursier, Jean-Yves, 156
 Bousquet, René, 96, 169, 534
 Boussin, Louis “Charlot,” 156
 Bouvery, 133
 Boyer, August, 169
 Boyer, Philibert, 201
 Braha, Gheorghe, 600
 Braham, Randolph, 322, 326
 Brandes family, 679
 Brasseur, Auguste, 292
 Brauch, Aladar, 670
 Brault, Gérard, 118

- Braun, Harry, 377
 Braun, Ignác, 337
 Braunstein, Iancu, 795
 Braustein, 210
 Bravmann, Benjamin, 104
 Brellier (camp administrator), 179
 Brellier, Pierre, 157
 Bremont, 128
 Brent, Vera, 367
 Brestecico, Azriel, 659
 Bretholz, Leo, 110, 120
 Bretholz, Netty, 120
 Bretschneider, Carol, 804
 Breuer, Manya, 214
 de Brion, 281
 Brioude, Bertrand de, 220
 Brkljačić, Ivica, 61
 Bronfman, Zalmal, 801
 Broșteanu, Emil, 728
 Brot, 269
 Brotea, Dumitru, 734
 Brown, James Arthur "Buster," 282
 Bruck, Jonas, 349
 Brucker, Szilard, 320
 Brückler, Ernst, 874
 Bruja, Petru, 773
 Brüll, Alfréd, 332
 Brun, Paul, 168
 Brunner, Alois, 134, 135, 232, 871, 882–883
 Bruno, Giordano, 411
 Brust, Josef, 376
 Bsatica, Spascijc and Mirka, 468
 Bucșă, Teofil, 591
 Buda, István, 385
 Budak, Mile, 47
 Budica, Ion, 736
 Buffarini Guidi, Guido, 390, 392, 401, 402, 404, 406, 408, 411, 428, 441, 444, 456, 459, 461, 464, 474, 477
 Bughici, S., 811
 Buhot-Launay, 157
 Bükky, Jenő, 359
 Bulatu, Dumitru, 662
 Buligă, Zacheu, 775, 813
 Buljan, Ante, 468
 Bunea, Florin, 662
 Burădescu, Sever, 710, 711, 811, 812
 Burcel, D., 691
 Burck, 101
 Bürckel, Josef, 148, 151
 Burger, Charles, 255
 Burger, Harry, 537
 Burghilea, D., 751
 Burgher, 287
 Buriez, Charles, 263
 Burstein, Larissa, 766
 Burzio, Giuseppe, 847
 Busacca, 501
 Bussière, Jacques-Félix, 162
 Butchen, Marie, 184–185
 Butoliu, Gheorghe, 793
 Butta, Ugo, 552
 Bybelezer, Fernand, 178

 Caboche, Jules César, 265, 269
 Cacaud, Michel, 177
 Čáček, Samuel, 547

 Cagni, 401
 Cahn, Jacqueline, 137
 Călin, Ioan, 687
 Calmieri, Gino, 429
 Calogero, Cicero, 523
 Calogero, Ezia, 414
 Calotescu, Corneliu, 631, 632, 673, 760, 817
 Calzolari, 535–536
 Camacho, Diego, 108
 Camèra, R. M., 422
 Campailla, A., 428
 Campos Peral, José, 258
 Canari, N., 739, 818
 Căndea, 814, 823
 Cantoni, Raffaele, 469
 Cantor, Adele, 125, 126
 Čapić, Ljudevit, 76
 Capogreco, Carlo Spartaco, 410, 417, 440, 441, 450, 462, 469, 489, 551
 Caporali, Dante, 416
 Capron, Marcel, 103
 Capurro, Attilio, 445
 Caradonio-Di Blasio family, 414
 Caravita, Gregorio, 428
 Cardi, Jacques, 264
 Carlucci, Cosimo, 469
 Carol II (king), 570
 Carozzi, Giuseppe, 402
 Carpi, Daniel, 895
 Carpovici, Petro, 713
 Carrasco, Garido, 257
 Cartiens, Séraphin, 261
 Casale, Guglielmo, 399
 Caskie, Donald, 532
 Caspardo, 533
 Cassorla, Moïse, 209
 Cassulo, Andrea, 697, 716, 796, 815
 Castillo, Yaraba de, 278
 Catargiu, Barbu, 707, 708
 Čatloš, Ferdinand, 843, 846, 847
 Cavaliere, Alberto, 464
 Cavallo, Enrico, 419
 Cavano (Cavana), 519
 Cavaropol (colonel), 792
 Cavaropol, Mihai, 793
 Cay, Paul, 160
 Cazes, Andre, 113
 Cazès-Benathar, Hélène, 241, 248, 255, 256, 290
 Cecchetti, Domenico, 443
 Cecere, Giuseppe, 399
 Celentanto, Vincenzo, 441
 Cellier, 272
 Cepleanu, Constantin, 591
 Cepleanu, Nicolae, 818, 819
 Cernăianu, Nicolae, 764
 Cerovski, Božidar, 48
 Cesarano, Andrea, 441
 Cesarec, August, 67
 Cetățianu, C., 768
 Cetenic, Franco, 468
 Chabrol, 265
 Chaigneau, Jean, 160–161
 Chaligne, Renée, 237, 238
 Chalimov, Georgi Ivan, 42, 43
 Chapuisat, Edouard, 620, 708, 798
 Charant, J. de, 294

 Chassagnac, Henri, 116
 Cheiș, Aron, 726
 Chemouny, Joseph, 899
 Chénaux de Leyritz, Léopold, 108–109, 114, 120, 121, 155, 177
 Chérer, Jeanne, 216
 Chéron, Louis, 104
 Chevalier, Paul, 140, 141, 226
 Chiche, Lucien, 263
 Chiedere, Peppino, 556
 Chihai, Gheorghe, 600, 601, 602n8
 Chimenti, Gaetano, 443
 Chindrias, Vasile, 728
 Chinkovskaya family, 748
 Chirac, Jacques, 92
 Chirca, Ion, 654
 Chircorov, 638
 Chireman, Marcu, 690
 Chiribașa, Gheorghe, 764, 765
 Chiricuță, 764
 Choko, Arcadie, 138
 Cholakov, Ivan Genov, 7, 29
 Christodoulakis, Theodosios, 518
 Christoffel, 699
 Chrokmelnick, Herzel, 821
 Ciancaglino, Francesco, 467
 Ciano, Galeazzo, 517
 Čilić, Marjan, 69
 Cimatori, 451–452
 Cimprić, Milan, 432
 Ciortuz, Barbu "Ilie," 752
 Cireș, Mihail, 783
 Ciugureanu, N., 659
 Ciureanu, Corneliu, 670, 827
 Clara, Cleiner, 633
 Clear, Noel T., 260, 274
 Clémenceau, Georges, 135
 Clemente, Giuseppe, 268
 Clinceanu, Constantin, 599, 600
 Clinovici, Nicolae, 735
 Clopper, Isac, 694
 Coblic, Aria, 640
 Cocarla, Aristide, 672
 Codreanu, Corneliu Zelea, 570, 618, 781
 Codrescu, 669
 Cogan, Haim, 830
 Cohen, Lea, 24n15
 Cohn, Filip, 755
 Cohn, Ițic, 670
 Cohn, Louis, 271
 Cohn family, 679
 Cojan, C., 773
 Cojocar, Alexandru, 662, 726, 754, 790
 Cojocar, Oaie C., 574
 Coldefy, François Francisque, 128
 Collin, Emmy, 366, 367
 Collins, Reginald Douglas, 794
 Colombani (doctor), 257
 Colombani, Antoine, 293
 Colos, Grigore, 730
 Colucci, Raffaele, 474
 Coman, Nicolae, 657, 799, 825
 Comba, Francisco, 258
 Comollo, Gustavo, 448
 Conod, Édouard, 272, 287, 294
 Constantinescu, Alexandru, 783
 Constantinescu, I. D., 762

- Constantinescu, Ilie, 707, 708, 764
 Constantinescu, N., 660, 802
 Cordova, 472
 Cornișteanu, Pavel, 687
 Cornștein, Paul, 597
 Corti, Guido, 509
 Costilă, Ion, 728
 Costinescu, Ion, 610, 714
 Coturri, Renato, 554
 Coulon, 157
 Covatta, Raffaele, 476
 Cracovescu, G., 609
 Crainic, Toma, 625
 Crawford, Kenneth G., 258
 Cresp, François Augustin, 122, 681
 Creștinu, Avram, 588, 670, 671, 681, 739
 Crețu, I. D., 648
 Criste, M., 739
 Cristea, Dumitru, 646, 695
 Cristea, Hainalca, 371
 Croce, Camillo, 552
 Crockatt, Norman, 282
 Cropsal, Marcel, 137
 Cros, Pierre, 218
 Csáki, József, 379
 Csaszar, 321
 Csatáry, László, 343
 Csokor, Franz Theodor, 547
 Csukly, József, 343
 Cudisch, Leon, 597
 Cuenca Francisco, Confero, 257
 Cuiuli, Vincenzo "Snake," 541, 542
 Culnev, Gheorghe, 713, 715
 Cuza, Alexandru C., 570
 Czeisberger, Péter, 358
 Czillinger, József, 372
- Dabronaki, Belane, 345
 Dadot, Pierre, 102
 Daguet, 127
 Dahlem, Franz, 118, 171, 172
 Dahmane, 284
 Dal Pont, Adriano, 440
 Daladier, Édouard, 93, 106, 144, 145
 D'Alessio, Francesco, 519
 Dalla Costa, Elia, 406
 Dalloux, Marcel, 186
 Dalmazzo, Renzo, 551
 Dalnegro, Anna, 450–451
 Damaskinos (archbishop), 512
 Damian, C., 739
 Damianakou, Voula, 516–517, 524
 Danckelmann, Heinrich, 832, 836
 Dandolo, Giulio, 450
 Danilof, Mihail, 716, 757
 Danisovič (engineer), 866
 Danko, Marek, 870
 Dannecker, Theodor, 8, 9, 35, 95, 111, 134, 141, 151, 169, 196, 199, 200
 Danon, Sofi, 27–28
 Dănulescu, Aurel, 713–714, 715, 721, 752, 756, 799, 804
 Dapčević, Peko, 108
 Darlan, Jean François, 242, 277, 282
 Darquier de Pellepoix, Louis, 95, 96
 Dascal, Fani, 351
 Dascal, Paul, 811
- Daupeyroux, Charles, 222
 Dauphin, 271, 272
 David, Giuseppe, 416
 Davidoff, David, 218
 Davidovich, Judith, 351
 Davidovics, Anton, 368
 de Coteau, 261
 de Fabi family, 466
 De Filippis, Giovanni, 541
 de Gaulle, Charles, 139
 De Leo, 496
 De Maio, Costatino, 463
 De Mase, Guilio, 450, 451
 De Neumann, Peter. See Neumann, Peter de
 De Pelet, 228
 De Ricko, Pierre. See Ricko, Pierre de
 De Salis, W., 467
 De Vincenti-Mazzarosa family, 446
 Deba, Isak, 38
 Debreczeni, Miklós, 319
 Declava, Ferenc, 354, 367
 Decuseară, Vera, 662, 790
 Dedulescu, Angel (Anghel), 591, 739, 818
 Degrelle, Léon, 171
 Deguines, 133
 Dejardin, Pierre-Gabriel, 216
 del Castillo, Michael, 212
 Del Vecchio, Leone, 469
 Delcea, 747
 Delcuze, 157
 Deleanu family, 679
 Delebecque, 266
 Délépine, Gabriel, 252, 269
 Deligdisch, Heinrich, 806, 807
 Della Bonna, Guido, 515
 Della Torre, Odoardo, 469
 Delvina, Hasan, 488
 Demande, Paul, 156
 Demenchuk, Aleksandr, 675
 Depner, Oscar, 732
 Désaknai, Miklós, 336
 Desoullier-Podvoletzki, 118
 Desoyard, René, 183
 Desta Damtu, 502
 Deutsch, Madeline, 318
 Deutsch, Magda, 350
 Deutsch, Oscar W., 169
 Devčić, Ivan "Pivac," 57
 Devoyon, René, 268
 D'Héréma, Paul, 269
 Di Carlo, 461
 di Donna, Fernando, 417 di Rosa, Gino, 556
 di Stefano, Antonio, 469
 Di Vittorio, Giuseppe, 473
 Diamant, David, 201
 Diamantini, Iolanda, 460
 Diaz, Vittorio, 427
 Didier, Gustave, 226
 Dieterlin, Paul, 226
 Dijamantstein, Bruno, 61
 Dimitriu, Constantin, 688, 713, 715, 721, 752, 766, 799, 804
 Dimitrov, Ivan, 18
 Dimitrovick, Ioro, 468
 Dindelegan, Iosif, 625, 643, 703, 713, 715, 721, 722, 752, 753, 804
- Djurišić, 381
 Dobeson, G. T., 298
 Dobjanski, Anibal, 637
 Dobrescu, Victor, 801, 811
 Dobrevski, Ilija Iliev, 36
 Dodon, Nicolae, 806
 Doffi, 272
 Dohnányi (engineer), 864, 865
 Doifing, Adolf, 740
 Domonkos, Miksa, 324
 Donath, Pavel, 811
 Donati, Angelo, 537
 Donati, Charles, 181, 186–187
 Donchev, Tsvetan, 38
 Doorman, L. A. C. M., 794
 Doria Pamphili, Filippo (prince), 448
 Dorra, Sami, 273
 Dourmanoff, 272
 Doyen, Paul-André, 139
 Drăgălina, Cornel, 673
 Drăgănești, Constantin Ștefănescu, 679
 Draganov, Peio, 31, 32, 33
 Dragolov, Hristo, 18
 Drăgulescu, Traian, 677, 758
 Drégelyi, Béla, 372
 Dresdner, Abraham, 214
 Drexel, Max, 675
 Dreyfuss, Bertha, 169
 Dreyfuss, Clara (née Pollak), 169
 Dreyfuss, Edgard H., 156
 Dreyfuss, Rudi, 169
 Dreyfuss, Wilhelm, 169
 Drobner, Leib, 766
 Drucman, Melka, 596
 Drussy, Henri, 162
 Drux, Leo, 795
 Dubuc, André, 237
 Duby-Blom, Gertrude, 212
 Ducoin, 208
 Dudáš, Andrej, 845
 Dudás, Károly, 332, 333
 Duin, 171
 Dulgheru, Arghir and Constantin, 599
 Dumas, Roland, 141
 Dumbović, Ante, 74
 Dumitrescu, Eugen, 637
 Dumitrescu, Ilie, 600
 Dumitrescu, Mihail, 732
 Dumitrescu, Vasile, 814
 Dumitru, Constantin, 643
 Dunker, Ernst "Delage," 532
 Dupont, Ernest, 266
 Dupont, Julien, 266
 Ďurčanský, Ferdinand, 843, 844
 Ďurný, Štefan, 865
 Duval (camp director), 237
 Duval, 230
 Duval, J., 222
 Dvajala, Marfa, 730
 Dzherasi, Mois, 43
- Ebstein, Heinrich. See Epstein, Heinrich
 Eddeng, 449
 Eerolainen, Kosti-Paavo, 87
 Egedy, Kálmán, 342, 354
 Egete, 381
 Eggers, Christian, 139

- Ehrenfeld, Adolf, 352
 Ehrenfreund-Polić, Anica, 72
 Eichmann, Adolf, 95, 306, 309, 310, 315,
 318, 333, 342, 344, 346, 351, 357, 361, 375,
 379, 871, 882–883, 885
 Eidenbenz, Elisabeth, 108, 215
 Eidler, Jacob, 806, 807
 Einhorn, Ulrich, 888
 Eisenberger, Sámuel, 370
 Eisenstätter, Mendel, 355
 Eisenstein, Maria Luisa. See Moldauer,
 Maria Luisa
 Eisler, Hanns, 195
 Eisner, Gizela, 329
 Elazar, Avram Moshe, 20nn18–19, 20n22
 Elkan, Erich, 218
 Elliot, Lewis, 279
 Emilian, Odijenschi Ivan, 769
 Emilian, Radu, 728
 Enache, 816
 Enăchiță, Dan, 700, 701
 Endre, László, 306, 307, 308, 309, 323, 335,
 345, 348, 357
 Endrödi, Barnabás, 358
 Enge, Edgar, 836
 Engel, Ján, 869
 Engelberg, Oszkár, 336
 Engelbrecht, István, 355
 Engl, Ietta, 475
 Engleman, 856
 Engler, Jora (Iora), 791
 Epelman, Huna, 827
 Epstein, Heinrich, 118, 147
 Epštejn, Iosif, 755
 Epure, Ion, 710
 Ercolani, Alceo, 456
 Erlich, David. See Diamant, David
 Ernst, Camille, 101
 Ernst, Max, 168, 173
 Eshkenazi, Mazal. See Asael, Mazal
 Estebbe, 270
 Estèbe, 208
 Esteva, Jean-Pierre, 894, 896
 Estrade, Paul, 233
 Estrade-Szwarckopf, Mouny, 233
 Eszterházy, János, 847
 Eulampia, 511
 Evitco, 795
 Exillio, 257
- Fabian, Jeanne, 366
 Fabre (capitaine), 287
 Fabre, Georges, 266
 Fabricant, Ițic, 733
 Facchini (bishop), 439
 Faerstein, Saul, 726
 Făgădău, Mochi, 764
 Faget, 73
 Failla, Alfonso, 455
 Faivre, 179
 Faláth, Jozef, 871, 885
 Falkenhorst, Nikolaus von, 562
 Fallontin, Henri, 140
 Fancello, Francesco, 473
 Fantini, Giuseppe and Angela, 453
 Fantoli, Leonardo, 552
 Fantussati, Giovanni, 439
- Fanucci, 460
 Faragó, Béla, 364
 Farhi, Angelo (Anđelko), 546
 Farhi, Mois, 28
 Farinacci, Mario, 447–448
 Farkas, Ákos Doroghi, 312
 Farkasc, 381
 Fărtăi, Zaharie, 672
 Faško, 863
 Fauquier, Daniel, 535
 Faure, André-Jean, 157, 162
 Favoloro, 545
 Faye, 168
 Feckette, Nicolae, 755
 Feinberg, Kai, 561
 Feiner, Maurice “Moritz,” 291
 Fekete, József, 336
 Fekete, Maria, 336
 Felber, Hans-Gustav, 832
 Feldman, Mór, 352, 353
 Feldmann, Ladislav, 858
 Feliks, Milan, 76
 Fenichel, József, 348
 Ferenczy, László, 306, 308, 309, 310, 311,
 350, 369
 Fernand, Jacq, 130
 Ferret, 156
 Ferrier, Alvarez, 278
 Ferrigno, Carmine, 447
 Ferrigno, Nicola, 466, 467
 Feschotte, Jacques, 202
 Festa, Giuditta, 463
 Fetacău, Ion, 742, 769
 Feteacău (capitan), 699, 700, 731, 743, 805,
 807, 808
 Feuerwerker, David, 125, 138, 207
 Ficher, Sallo, 692
 Ficsman, Costin, 640
 Fignon, 179
 Fihman, Moise, 640
 Fihman, Sulim, 806, 807
 Filderman, Wilhelm, 579, 759
 Filhol, Emmanuel, 188
 Filip, Tabac, 607
 Filipaş, Gheorghe, 662, 707, 790
 Filipović-Majstorović, Miroslav, 53, 61, 64
 Fillion, Jean, 139
 Filov, Bogdan, 2
 Finidori, 271, 272
 Finştejn, Mendel, 662
 Finta, Imre, 333
 Finucci, 408
 Fiorenzuola, 454
 Fischbein, Gábor, 364
 Fischer, 262
 Fischer, József, 337, 348
 Fischmann, Bernardt, 402
 Fišera, Josef, 214
 Fishman, 712
 Flavian, Conrad and Élise, 532
 Fleischman, Ifraim, 690, 775
 Fleischmann, Gizela “Gizi,” 848, 877
 Fleișer, Monia, 829
 Fleișman, Efraim, 604, 775
 Flett, H. J. W., 260
 Fleury, Jean, 203, 204
 Flexer, Fayette J., 274, 298
- Flitman, Lorentz, 656
 Florian (major), 752
 Florian, Ion, 589, 762
 Flountzis, Antonis, 505
 Flurin, René, 120
 Foà family, 460
 Fogar, Galeano, 515
 Fogelman, Jacques, 155
 Follender, Alfred, 588, 670, 681
 Fontaine, André, 169
 Foot, M. R. D., 282
 Foppa Pedretti, Giuseppe, 464
 Fördős, Kálmán, 379
 Forgáčova, Alžbeta (neé Ungárova), 887
 Forgács, József, 348, 349
 Förster, Helmut, 832
 Forti family, 428
 Fóthy, János, 332
 Fouchet, 292
 Fournier, 147
 Fourniols, 208, 214
 Frada, Antonio and Marinovic, 468
 Fraier, Zisu, 824
 Frajermauer, Anny, 120
 Frajermauer, Chana, 121
 Frajermauer, Joseph, 120, 121
 Francetić, Jure, 69
 Franchetti, Giuseppe, 415
 Franco, Francisco, 90, 101, 120, 143, 258, 271
 Francovich, Antonio, 473
 Frank, Alfred, 221
 Fränk, Gerhard, 320
 Frank, Mór, 337
 Frankel, Ion, 677
 Franko, Mois Aron, 20n6
 Fraticelli, Mario, 424, 425
 Freedman, Oscar, 165
 Freiburger, Miroslav Salom, 555
 Freinet, Célestin, 122
 Frestecico, Simeon, 659
 Freund, Alexander, 857
 Freund, Zsigmond, 364
 Freyer (engineer), 864, 865
 Fridlander, Maurice, 155
 Fried, Shirley and Etta, 317
 Frieder, Abraham “Armin,” 847, 848, 877
 Friedländer, Ljudevit, 71
 Friedländer, Nada, 71
 Friedman, Sarah, 317
 Friedman, Tolca, 779
 Friedmann, Dezső Fejes, 335
 Frim, Livia, 353, 354
 Fry, Varian, 176
 Fröhlich, Heinrich, 786
 Fuchs, Wilhelm, 833, 836
 Fuciu, Gheorghe, 693
 Fuks, Simon, 114, 116
 Fundo, Lazar, 455, 473
- Gabrielli, Pierre Marius, 122
 Gabrovski, Petür, 9, 32, 33
 Gaddi, Giuseppe, 448
 Gadjić, Nikola, 70
 Gaetano, Rizzello, 456
 Gagliardi, Mario, 422

- Gailhard, Jean, 182
 Galderani, 519
 Galerne, Suzanne, 177
 Galese, 901
 Găletaru, Petre, 670, 717
 Gálffy, Imre, 353
 Galileo, 470
 Gambassini, Lucio, 418
 Gamelin, Maurice Gustave, 144
 Gamzon, Robert, 116, 155
 Gandin, Antonio, 409
 Ganev, Anton Stefanov, 6, 17
 Gangea, Ion, 613
 Ganz, Sam, 317
 Garamvölgyi, Albert "Béla," 336
 Garibaldi, Giuseppe, 428
 Garrec, Frédéric, 158, 230
 Gasharov, Ivan Stoyan, 7, 22, 23, 24n15
 Gatenio, Karl David, 38
 Gaude, Louis, 168
 Gavăț (Gavet), Ștefan, 597, 616, 617, 726, 732, 754, 790
 Gavriilidis, Costas, 524
 Gavrila, Dumitru, 749
 Gece, József, 336
 Géczy, András, 368
 Geloso, Carlo, 526
 Genchev, 33, 34
 Gendreau, 160
 Gény, 133
 Georges, 132
 Georgescu, Dumitru, 646, 647
 Georgescu, Ion, 686
 Georgiou, Fotios, 516
 Gérard, 101
 Gerber, Miriam, 175
 Gergely, Gyula, 358
 Gerlier, Pierre-Marie, 122
 Germoni, Guglielmo, 448
 Gerő, Miksa, 344
 Gerstl, Pauline and Wilhelm, 538
 Gertler, Georg, 350
 Gesler, Jozo (Josip), 69
 Gespaverić, Drago, 56
 Getting, 111
 Ghelbert family, 630n3
 Ghelfman, Nahman, 747
 Gheorghe, Petre, 786
 Gheorghe, Teodor, 620
 Gheorghiad, Ștefan S., 659, 691–692, 697, 712, 801, 811, 828
 Gherman, Idasia, 659
 Gherman, Joe, 677, 758
 Gherovici, Alexandru, 637
 Ghimpelmann, Iacov, 694
 Ghineraru, Florin, 607
 Ghini, Celso, 440
 Giacobbi, Antoine Félix, 279
 Giannelli, Ruggero, 518, 519, 525
 Giannikos, N., 505
 Gigante, Vincenzo, 455
 Giglio, Umberto, 427, 476
 Gilden, Samuel, 220
 Gilles, 121
 Gillet, 111
 Gimpel family, 408
 Gindl, Ján, 887
 Giolli, Raffaello, 435
 Girard, Germain, 222
 Girard, Yvonne, 537
 Giraud, Henri, 242, 282, 896
 Giraud, Marie-Louise, 194
 Giraudier, Vincent, 104
 Giraud, 408
 Gireman, Marcu, 594
 Gitton, Marcel, 103
 Giugiu, Gheorghe, 763
 Giurcă, Niculae, 646
 Giuseppe, Franco, 450
 Giuseppini, Andrea, 502
 Giustiniani-Bandini, 469
 Giustino, Marino, 415
 Gkontzios, Dimitris, 515
 Gkrozos, Apostolis, 518, 519
 Glasberg, Alexandre, 122, 123
 Glasberg, Vila, 123
 Glasner, Akiba, 348
 Glasner, Dragutin, 76
 Glika, Zvonko, 547
 Glogojanu, Ion, 728
 Glück, Sándor, 370
 Goga, Octavian, 318, 570
 Gogleață, 739, 819
 Golberg, Chaja, 162
 Goldman, Norberg, 714
 Goldschmidt, Nicolae, 811
 Goldschmied, Sándor, 372
 Goldsman (Goldtman), 795
 Goldstein, Ivo, 69, 555
 Golian, Ján, 849
 Gollick, Michael, 73
 Golski, 271
 Golstein family, 203
 Goranov, 40
 Gorbov, 740
 Gorsky, Vasile, 589, 590, 652, 762
 Goruchon, Charles, 168
 Gosset, Raoul, 130
 Goșescu, Dumitru, 679
 Goteu, Grigore, 818
 Gothly, Ferdinand, 764
 Gottlieb, Juda, 352
 Gouillon, Maurice, 162
 Goyou, 278, 281
 Grădinaru, Vasile, 715
 Graham, John Turnbull, 298
 Grama, Vasile, 625, 643, 713
 Gramsci, Antonio, 470
 Grande, Luigi, 422
 Grandjean, Maurice, 162
 Granovschi, Isac, 640
 Grant, Peter, 457
 Granzow, Johnny, 118
 Granzow, Kurt, 118
 Grassi, Raffaele, 403
 Grau, 266
 Gravelle (brigadier-chief adjutant), 106
 Gravelle, Jean, 269
 Graziani, Rodolfo, 502
 Grazioli, Emilio, 550, 557
 Gregory, Eva, 342
 Gregusova, Eva, 360
 Grenier, Fernand, 102, 103, 130
 Gribovszky, György, 369
 Griffier, 116
 Grigorescu, Gheorghe, 732
 Grigoriencu, Fimareta, 687
 Grill, Solomon, 704
 Grilli, Giovanni, 435
 Grisaru, Aron, 741
 Grixoni, Luigi, 519
 Gross, Bruno, 594, 690, 775
 Grosu, Gheorghe, 766
 Grosu, Nicolae, 797
 Grosz, József, 337
 Grothendieck, Alexander, 212
 Groza, Aurel, 714, 766
 Grüber, Paulina, 114
 Gruël, 229
 Grumberg, Eva, 601
 Grünberg, Micu, 634
 Grünfelder, Anna Maria, 68
 Grüngold, Margarethe, 339
 Grünvald, Paul, 604
 Grünwald, Erich, 869
 Grușovan, 734
 Guesmi, Ali, 266
 Guida, Marcello, 473
 Guijarro, Frederic, 269
 Guillaume, Camille, 102
 Guillemant, Jeannine, 137
 Guinle-Lorinet, Sylvaine, 163
 Gülzbov, Asparuh, 40
 Gurême, Henriette, 184
 Gurême, Raymond, 184
 Gurman, Cantor, 631
 Gussman, Louis, 164
 Gutman family, 69
 Guttman, I., 810
 Guttman, Landau, 637
 Guy, Christian, 186
 Guyon, 281
 Guzanyatskiy, Yankl, 675–676
 Haase, Alfred, 296, 297
 Habaň, 860
 Habazin, Dragica, 74
 Hacker, Béla, 372
 Hadad (Haddad), Moshe, 527
 Hadzo, Ștefan, 857
 Hagen, Herbert, 95
 Hager, 703
 Hager, Baruch, 821
 Hager, Barukh, 667
 Hager, Hayyim Meir, 363
 Haidațu, Teodor, 659
 Haim, Moise, 802
 Hain, Péter, 306
 Hajdú, Sándor, 343
 Hajnácskőy, László, 316, 371
 Hakel, Hermann, 400, 418
 Halachev, Nikola, 6, 7, 10
 Halpern, Marco, 432
 Halpern, Nehemia, 109
 Halpern, Rose, 341
 Halpert, Ben, 369
 Halphen, Jenő, 359
 Hamburg, Jack, 114
 Hamburger, Gustáv, 891
 Hamelin, France, 194, 195–196
 Hananel, Asher, 17

- Hanshaw, John C., 449
 Haracsek, József, 358
 Hark, Willy, 284, 296, 297
 Harris, Eric. See Loëwe, Eric
 Harth, Camillo. See Horth, Camillo
 Hartung, Rudolf, 642, 719
 Haskia, David, 20n22
 Hațiegan, Ion, 732
 Haubraiche, 264
 Hausch, Oberst von, 216
 Haviş, Ghesel, 726
 Hazana, Mardochee, 266
 Heath, Leslie C., 287
 Hefer, Stjepan, 76
 Hegedüs, 340
 Heger, Karlo "Karl," 72
 Heger, Raymond, 105
 Heger, Willibald, 72
 Hegyi, Lajos, 359
 Heidingsfeld family, 167
 Heinrichsohn, Ernst, 141
 Helen (queen), 619
 Helena, Stéphanie, 266
 Heller, Joseph, 271
 Helm, Hans, 833, 836
 Hénaff, Eugène, 130
 Hénault, Robert-Pierre "Robespierre," 160
 Henblein, 792
 Hendel, Hersh, 787
 Henle family, 109
 Henquizzi, 533
 Henry VIII (king), 169
 Herak, Slavko, 555
 Herald, Ludovít, 880–881
 Hérama, Paul d'. See D'Hérama, Paul
 Herghelegiu, Ion, 643
 Herlea, Dionisie, 764
 Herman, Janet, 185
 Herman, Nikola, 68
 Herman, Veiner, 692
 Hermann, Deszö, 348
 Hermans, Ward, 171
 Heroiu, Mircea, 684
 Herold, 216
 Herriot, Édouard, 139
 Herschmann, Adolph, 766
 Herşcovici, Friderich, 747
 Herşcovici, Samuil, 661
 Hershkovitz, Olga, 323
 Hersko, Blanka, 373
 Hervé, Raymond, 162
 Herzer, Ivo, 542
 Herzog, Roman, 502
 Hess, Richard, 408, 409
 Heublein. See Henblein
 Heureude, René, 115
 Heydrich, Reinhard, 95, 96
 Hierl, Konstantin, 5
 Hijós, Miquel, 107
 Himmler, Heinrich, 846, 848
 Hirauski, N., 156
 Hirchem, Rudolf, 604, 775
 Hirs, Heni, 822
 Hirsch, Alexandre, 359
 Hirsch, Auguste "Gusta," 167
 Hirsch, Zoltán, 375
 Hirschler, René, 116, 124, 220
 Hitler, Adolf, 2, 40, 46, 80, 90, 144, 390, 560, 562, 844, 845, 846
 Hlinka, Andrej, 842
 Hochhäuser, Alex, 862, 889
 Hochstädt, Avram, 766
 Hofbauer, Edith, 350
 Hofer, Marcus, 666
 Hoffmann, Julius, 438
 Hoffmeyer, Horst, 642
 Hogrel family, 129
 Hollander, Paul, 277, 291
 Hollóssy-Kuthy, Lajos, 348
 Holveck, Robert, 203
 Honti, Béla, 353
 Hörnicke, 359
 Hornyák, Miklós, 385
 Horowitz, Max, 720
 Horth, Camillo, 699
 Horthy, Miklós, 302, 305, 306, 311, 324, 332, 346, 355, 362, 368, 369, 376
 Horvát, István, 353
 Horváth, Árpád, 337
 Horváth, György, 343
 Horváth, Sándor, 374
 Horváth, Zoltán, 364
 Horvatin, Mladen, 67
 Hotz, 130
 Hrg, Andrea, 64–65
 Hrivniak, František, 857
 Huban, Ján, 881
 Hubert (camp chief), 132
 Hubert, Marie-Christine, 91, 184, 204, 222
 Hudson, James Douglas, 282
 Humbert, David-Gustave, 214
 Huntley, 794
 Hunyadi, László, 359
 Iacobescu, Nicolae, 632, 633, 795
 Iancu, Bercu, 604
 Iancu, Michaël, 146
 Ibárruri, Dolores, 108
 Ibárruri, Rubén Ruiz, 108
 Icković, 545
 Idel, Bianca, 804
 Iehil, Gold, 607
 Ignat, Bodor, 373
 Ignea, I., 695
 Ilić, Ljubomir, 117
 Iliescu, Dumitru, 768
 Iliescu, Mihai, 756, 777, 778
 Iliescu, Mihail (general), 742
 Iliescu, Mihaíl P. (colonel), 728
 Iliescu, Teodor, 588, 611
 Immirù, Ras, 452
 Impellizzeri, 899, 901, 902
 Infante, Adolfo, 520
 Ioan, Radu, 827
 Ioanid, Victor, 730, 797
 Ioannidis, Giannis, 506
 Ioffe, Ițic, 601
 Ionaşcu, N., 788
 Ionescu, Aliodor, 814
 Ionescu, C., 620
 Ionescu, Ioan (Ion) A., 687, 795
 Ionescu, Petre N., 738
 Ionescu, Radu, 638
 Ionescu, Ştefan, 614
 Ionescu-Obârşia, Ion, 589
 Iordanov, Poruchik Paraskev, 7, 38
 Iorgulescu, Vasile, 588
 Iosa, Gheorghe, 629, 770
 Iosifovici, Iosifescu, 827
 Iosipovici, Mayer, 755
 Iosspovici, S., 822
 Iovchev, Hristo Dimitrov, 42, 43
 Isaacson, Judith Magyar, 343
 Isăceanu, Victor, 673
 Isar, Aurelian, 768
 Isopescu, Modest, 581, 588, 589, 610, 611, 612, 658, 659, 660, 661, 670, 680, 681, 682, 686, 695, 696, 717, 718, 798, 802, 803, 815, 816, 827
 Ispravnicu, M., 690
 Israël, Benkemoun, 266
 Ițicovici, Haim, 604
 Iuliu, Brandes, 633
 Ivanchev, Aleksii. See Shonkin, Aleksii
 Ivanchev
 Ivănescu, Petre, 736
 Ivanov, Ivan, 6
 Ivanov, Zahari Velkov. See Velkov, Zahari
 Iványi, András, 348
 Ivaz, Antonio Amicizia, 468
 Jacchia, Diana and Dina, 428
 Jackson, Humphrey H., 280
 Jackson, Stanley, 537
 Jacob, Max, 135
 Jacquet, 111
 Jaeger, William H., 794
 Jägendorf, Siegfried, 636, 650, 664, 693, 716, 741, 757, 772, 821, 822
 Jaksetich, Giorgio, 455
 Jammet, Gaston, 182
 Janas, Karol, 860
 Janeli, Ruzzero, 513
 Janin, 255
 Jaross, Andor, 306, 308
 Javovic, Giovanni and Filomena, 468
 Jean-Faure, André, 232
 Jelinić, Krsto, 58
 Jerge, 863
 Jervell, Anton, 565
 Jessel, Richard, 282
 Jeunechamp, 282
 Joffe, Helene (née Mindel), 145–146
 Johnson, Peter Le Quesne, 275, 280
 Jólesz, Károly, 364
 Joly, Jean-Marie, 156
 Jonić, Velibor, 840
 Joos, Andor, 352
 Josten, Adolf, 836
 Jouassain, René, 138
 Jouffraud, Georges, 160
 Jouhaux, Léon, 139, 140
 Jovanović, Dragomir, 833, 836
 Józán, Miklós, 310
 Jrubetki, Leon, 617
 Juga, Aurel, 594, 653, 775, 813
 Juhász, Pál, 321
 Jukelis, Iosif, 766
 Jurenco, Eugen, 735
 Jüttner, Hans, 560

- Kabiljo, Isak, 547
 Kádár, János, 326
 Kádár, József, 365
 Kadari, Abdelkader, 284
 Kahane, Max, 229
 Kahlenberg, Marc, 182
 Kakaes, Sotiris, 518
 Kalinicenco, 802
 Kalinov, Angel, 25, 26
 Kalitsin, Yaroslav, 9, 36
 Kálnoky, István, 337
 Kalogeropoulos, Yiouris and Nikos, 509
 Kalogeropoulos family, 509
 Kamenica, Dalip Hysen, 482
 Kamenský, Štefan, 884
 Kamenszky, Árpád, 372
 Kampler, Josef, 123
 Kamras, Féla (née Smolinska), 125
 Kantorowicz, Alfred, 176
 Kaourēs, Xrēstos (“Father Fourtouna”), 526
 Kapari, Eleni, 510, 511, 512, 520
 Kapel, René, 172, 209, 218
 Kapel, Samuel, 109
 Kaplan, J., 156
 Kaposváry, György, 343
 Karampinis, 525
 Karanika, Soula and Koula, 511
 Karayannē, Lena, 509
 Kardos, József, 343
 Kardoš, Ladislav, 884
 Karmasin, Franz, 843, 871, 885
 Karoly, Vera, 341
 Kartano, Arvo, 87
 Kasabov, Georgi Künchev, 42
 Kassay, János, 336
 Kassler, Ionas, 757
 Kasztner, Rudolf “Rezső,” 315, 326, 335, 339, 342, 348, 356, 372, 379
 Katan, Isak, 67
 Katramis, 516
 Kats, Moses, 176
 Katsounotos, Giannis, 524
 Katz, Antal, 337
 Katz, M. (in Moghilev), 822
 Katz, Magda, 342
 Katz, Moise (in Ŝargorod), 804
 Katz, Mór, 337
 Katz, Moses (in Djourin), 667
 Katz, Moses (in Moghilev), 644, 688, 757
 Kaufman, Kitty (née Reichl), 402
 Kazachevici, Mihail, 670
 Kečkemet, Duško, 546
 Kecskeméti, Izidor, 344
 Kehrer, Walter, 675
 Keller, George, 376
 Kerekes, Lajos, 376
 Kershner, Howard E., 172
 Kertesz, Elszabeth, 330
 Kertesz, Imrene, 345
 Kesler, Hugo, 537
 Kessler, Arthur, 811
 Kestelman, Moise, 604
 Kezsmarki, 382
 Khager, Barukh, 667
 Khaldei, Yevgeny, 301
 Khelifati, Mohand Amokrane, 266
 Khibner, 269
 Kiessel, Georg, 836
 Kirenman, Marcu, 775
 Kiril (archbishop), 11, 28
 Kiril (prince), 22
 Kirschbaum, Jozef, 871, 885
 Kirschen, Rudolf, 690
 Kirshner, Oscar, 368
 Kiseleva, Tat'iana (née Mironova), 86
 Kissinger, Ruth, 202
 Kister, Lew, 76
 Kitinchev, Spiro, 31
 Klain, Slavko, 76
 Klajič, Emil, 75
 Klarsfeld, Serge, 124, 135, 214, 220, 236
 Klein, Amerigo, 428
 Klein, Erich, 709
 Klein, Gyula, 348
 Klein, Juraj, 889
 Klein, Károly, 353
 Klein, Oszkár, 355
 Klein, Slavko. See Klain, Slavko
 Klein, Toivi, 596
 Klein family, 567
 Klesken, Ján, 857
 Klotz, 283
 Kluger, Nechemia and Esther, 203
 Kmet'ko, Karol, 847
 Knochen, Helmut, 95
 Koblas family, 748
 Koch (doctor), 771
 Koch, Jana, 74
 Kočović, Bogoljub, 50
 Köcsey, Sándor, 334
 Koen, Iosif, 24
 Koen, Marko, 20
 Koen, Merkado David, 20
 Koen, Mois Avram, 40
 Koen, Raphael, 235
 Koestler, Arthur, 171
 Kohn, Alfred. See Kuhn, Alfred
 Kohn, Esther, 158
 Kohn, Maks, 76
 Kokavec, Poručík, 863
 Kolb, Charles, 753
 Kolevski, Raicho Boichev, 8, 25, 26, 39, 40
 Kolm, Emanuel, 883
 Kolpensky, Sergei, 719
 Koltay, László, 306
 Kom, Hugo, 555
 Kon, Hugo, 67
 Kon, Ljudevit, 67
 Konka, Gejza, 879
 Kontsevich, Fedor, 675
 Konyuk, Jozsef, 351
 Kopony family, 792
 Korálnik, Gershel, 667
 Koseček, Eduard, 884
 Kosenfeld, Alazár, 884
 Kosidois, Karl, 445
 Koth, Jozef, II, 858
 Kotlárík, Jozef, 869, 884
 Kotsman, 745
 Kountouriōtēs, Pavlos, 509
 Kountouriōtēs, Theodōros, 509
 Kourakin, Ivan, 406
 Koutsodimos, Yannis, 518
 Kovac, Edit, 350
 Kováč, Tibor, 848
 Kovács, Tamás, 343
 Kovács-Nagy, István, 363
 Kovesi, Joseph, 369
 Kovesi, Vera, 376
 Kraft, 676
 Krajnović, Bogdan, 369
 Krakopolskiy, Ezra, 766
 Král, Štefan, 863
 Kramer, Nathan, 365
 Krammer, Viktor, 372
 Krasňanský, František, 880
 Kraus, Hela (née Mismser), 402
 Kraus, Henry, 371
 Kraus, Karl, 833
 Krausz, Béla, 372
 Krausz, Moses Aaron, 357
 Krausz, Szuzsana, 339
 Krengel, Hugues, 266
 Krishaber, B., 367
 Križanová-Pivková, 866
 Krkoška, Jozef, 860
 Kruk, Samuel, 781
 Kruliš (engineer), 864, 865
 Krupa, Vojtech, 856
 Kuales, Norbert, 319
 Kubala, Otomar, 874
 Kučo, Isak, 547
 Kuhn, Alfred, 255, 291
 Kula, Arthur, 771
 Kumar, Stane, 433
 Kun, Béla, 302
 Kun, Lajos, 385
 Kundt, Ernst, 91, 151, 166, 168, 171, 175
 Kunovits, Jenő, 337
 Kurlak, 275
 Kurtag, Ladislav, 869
 Kvaternik, Eugen “Dido,” 46, 48, 59, 62
 Kyzonois, 278
 la Chapel, Michel de, 157
 La Laurencie, Léon Benoit de Fornel de, 139
 La Monica, Mario, 417
 La Rocca, Jean, 297
 Labbro, Vittorio, 401
 Lacelle, Jean, 234
 Lacroix, Émile, 158, 230, 231
 Lagocheilas, 516
 Laid ben Mohamed, Amar, 263
 Lakadár, József, 336
 Lakatos, 724–725
 Lamb, Charles, 282
 Lammers, Hans, 560
 Landau (rabbi), 750
 Landau, Bernhard, 692
 Landau, Edmond, 537
 Landau, Ernő, 364
 Landau, Helmut, 24, 25
 Landau, Herbert, 424
 Landau, Izu, 611, 612
 Landesberg, Hans, 295
 Lang, Carlo Alberto, 542
 Láng, Ernő, 364
 Langbein, Hermann, 171, 172, 218
 Langer, Marcel, 108
 Langfelder, Otto, 58, 62, 63, 64

- Langley, J. M., 282
Lansill, 449
Lapsker, Efsel, 766
Larsen, Alfred, 291
Lasselle, Jean. See Lacelle, Jean
Laszlor, Jambor, 386
Latibalu, Dejazmach, 503
Lattarulo, Angelo, 431
Laufer, Josef, 757
Laurelli, 208
Laurens, Maurice, 168
Laurent, 162
Laurian, A., 574
Lautier, Henri, 536
Laval, Pierre, 90, 92, 96, 169, 533
Lazăr, Ion, 634, 684, 699, 700, 742, 769, 805, 807
Lazăr, Lazăr D., 648
Lăzăroiu, Ion, 797
Lazarov, Leon, 17
Lazarovici, Cristea, 615
Lazarovici, Frida, 604
Lazarovici, Iancu, 594, 604, 690, 775
Lazarovitch, Shmuel David, 340
Lazzaroni Matteucci, Fedora, 450
Le Bideau, 168
Le Brun, Pierre, 533
Le Cuen, 111
Le Picard, Veuve, 106
Léb, Zsigmond, 348
Lebègue, Robert, 137, 200, 201, 234, 235, 237
Lebrun, Albert, 90
Lecache, Bernard, 253, 265, 266
Lecal, Albert, 139
Lecca, Angelo, 426
Lecher, Ghidion, 704
Leclercq, Louis, 179, 180
Léderer, Manó, 372
Lederman, 700
Legeay, 132
Legovi, Jakov, 530
Lehnár, Zsigmond, 336
Lehrer, Gheorghe, 740
Lehuraux, 250
Leibl, Franz. See Liebl, Franz
Leibovici, Lua, 687
Lemberg, Leon, 640
Lemoine, Antoine, 124
Lentić, Boris, 437
Leon, Heisner, 607
Leonaș, Virgil, 820
Leonhard, Rudolf, 118
Leoveanu, 781
Lerner, Gizela, 208
Lesage, Gilbert, 104, 116, 133
Leszmann, 361
Letko, Mikuláš, 869
Levak, Zlato, 399
Levi, Annette, 408
Levi, Heinrich (Hajnrh), 546
Levi, Nisim Isak, 43
Levi, Primo, 401, 431
Levi, Sami Moshe, 39, 40
Levine, Laure, 218
Levy (biologist), 262
Lévy (capitan), 220
Levy, Kurt, 567
Lévy, Paul, 203
Levy, Rachel Philipson, 120
Lévy, Simone, 154
Levy, Zdenka, 425
Lew family, 229
Leyser, Margot, 189
L'Huillier, G., 203
Li Voti, Salvatore, 473
Liberi family, 446
Libot, Gerard, 171
Lichgott, 208
Lichtman, Annie, 208
Lie, Jonas, 561
Liebl, Franz, 719, 777
Liebray, 271, 296
Limousin, 113, 207
Lindseth, Leif, 565
Lippolis, Pietro, 432
Lischka, Kurt, 95
List, Wilhelm, 831
Liszka, Béla, 344
Litman, David, 687
Littaye, Jack, 214
Liubnetskaya family, 748
Ljotić, Dimitrije, 832, 839
Lo Spinoso, Guido, 458
Lods, Marcel, 134
Loëwe, Eric, 276, 277
Loffler, Katalin, 374
Loghin, Constantin, 634, 635, 643, 652, 688, 689, 699, 700, 701, 713, 715, 721, 731, 742, 743, 752, 756, 766, 769, 799, 804, 805, 807, 808
Loinger, 154
Loirat, F., 222
Lončar, Pavao, 70
Lorković, Mladen, 47
Lospinozo, Guido, 544
Lothe, Arthur, 555
Louis XVI (king), 106
Loustaunau-Lacau, Georges, 139, 140
Lovinescu, I., 649
Lövy, Oscar, 870
Löw, Béla, 337
Löwinger, Judith, 339
Löwy, Oskar, 869
Lozovský (engineer), 855, 856, 859, 860, 861
Luburić, Vjekoslav Maks, 48, 54, 58, 59, 60, 61, 66, 69
Lucianschi, Ifim, 766
Lucký, Štefan, 863
Luino, Gaston, 123
Luketić, Vera, 74
Lulay, Leó, 306
Lulchev, Todor, 32, 33
Lumbroso, Elia, 432
Lunchin, Marc, 766
Lupașcu, Dumitru, 686, 695, 702
Lupescu, Avram, 670
Lupini family, 445
Luptovský, Izidor, 887
Lupu, Ștefan, 574
Lupy, 271, 279, 281
Luras, 222
Lusena, Delfina. See Ortona, Delfina
Lusignoli, Ado, 460
Lussu, Emilio, 439–440
Lusztbaum, Béla, 335
Luță, Mircea, 673
Mach, Alexander “Șaño,” 842, 843, 844, 846, 847, 848, 861, 863, 877, 882, 889, 890
Machado, Antonio, 131
MacNabb, 509
Maczky, Emil Borbély, 353
Maestro, Jozef, 546
Maganini, 460
Magaș, Ljubo, 58
Maggio, Aiutante, 474
Maiello, Mario, 422, 443
Maier, Marcu, 795
Maillard, 292
Majay, Ferenc, 352
Makúch, Pavol, 865
Malaguti, Bruno, 415
Malamad, Șmul, 640
Malek, Teresa, 373
Maleron, Yona, 816
Malraux, Clara, 209
Malvasi, Bartolomeo, 449
Malý, 889
Mancini, Irma, 466
Mancuso, Vincenzo, 456
Mandea, Gheorghe, 601
Mandel, Georges, 144
Mandel-Mantello, George, 167
Mandil, Maier, 20
Mandler, Iosif, 692
Mandler, Otto, 875
Mandušić, Mate, 69–70
Manea, Petre Donca, 601
Mânecuța, I., 631, 759
Manen, Henri and Alice, 169
Manescau, Roland, 179, 180
Mănescu, Vasile, 588, 611, 612, 670, 717
Manfreda, Laminjan, 410
Mangin, Joël, 181
Maniadakēs, Kōnstantinos, 521
Manolescu, Sandu, 764
Manoliu, Constantin, 797
Manousakas, Giannēs, 513, 514, 518, 525, 526
Mäntykivi, T. A., 86
Mara-Michalakea, Toula, 510, 511
Marányi, Ede, 320, 321
Maraș, Martin, 58
Maratheas, 512
Marc, Sandra, 155
Marček, Rudolf, 889
Marchak, Eli, 607
Marchesini, Luisa, 466
Marcos, Juanito, 214
Marcos, Violette, 214
Marcovski, Abram, 597
Marcus, Vexer, 607
Margoș, Panait, 677, 758, 759
Margotti, Carlo, 476
Marić, Ante, 59
Marin, Léopold, 160
Marinelli, Leonardo, 402
Maritz, Grigore, 749
Mark (doctor), 631
Márk, Antal, 348

- Markó, István, 344
 Markov, Georgi, 40
 Markovits, 340
 Marcenko family, 748
 Marosy, Andre, 165
 Maroulis, Ioannis, 512
 Marsalos, 516
 Marshall, 278
 Marsiglia, Truzzi Eva, 453
 Martin, 140
 Martin, Alphonse, 127
 Martin, Henri (doctor), 118, 139, 140
 Martin, Henry (Général des Corps d'Armée), 250, 263
 Martinez, Nicola, 466, 467
 Martiradonna, 441
 Martire, 482
 Martoň, 860
 Márton, Aron, 310
 Marton, Ernő, 348
 Marton, Zsigmond, 352
 Martone, Giuseppe, 414
 Mass, 699
 Masse, Pierre, 135
 Masson, 133
 Mateescu, Alexandru, 793, 794
 Mateev, Matei, 18
 Matieș, Emil, 710
 Matijević, Jozo, 53, 61
 Matković, Ivica, 61
 Matošić, Dane, 440
 Mattéoli, Jean, 92
 Mättö, J. E., 86
 Matuščin, Jozef Juraj, 882
 Maulavé, Robert, 168, 169
 Mauskop, László, 340
 Mautner, Žiga, 76
 Mauvais, Léon, 130
 Maximoff, Matéo, 164
 May, Andreas, 835
 Mayer, Dragutin, 53
 Mayer, Karl, 101
 Maynard, R., 222
 Mazza, Bernardo, 402
 Mazzali, Giulio Guido, 435
 Mazzi, Pasquale, 418
 McFadden, Allan Robert, 280
 McNiff, Kelsey Williams, 171
 Mechurova, Jolana, 350
 Meculescu, Teodor, 613, 614, 637, 638, 651, 652, 734, 748, 768, 783, 785, 786
 Médecin, Jean, 531, 537
 Medici, Carmine, 422
 Mednicov, Sara, 807
 Meggyesi, Lajos, 306, 309
 Megye, Somogy, 343
 Melamad, Šmulji, 640
 Melamed, Isak Avram, 26
 Meletic, Tiron, 820, 821
 Melinescu, Niculae, 611, 612
 Ménager, 283
 Menahemov, Buko, 19
 Ménard, 101, 121, 218
 Meneses, Pesa, 596
 Mendel, Martin, 221
 Mendel, Segal, 747
 Mendès-France, Pierre, 173
 Menè, Augusto, 417
 Menna, Enrico, 441
 Menorval, Conte de, 294
 Meo, Francesco, 473
 Mercalli, Camillo, 481, 482, 488, 493, 499
 Mercier, François, 156
 Merel, Samuel, 138
 Mérey, László, 368
 Merker, Paul, 171
 Merlika Kruja, Mustafa, 491, 496
 Mermans, Antoon, 171
 Mesarciuc, Neculae, 747
 Messingerova, Marta, 360
 Mészáros, Hugó, 379
 Metaxas, Ioannis, 505, 507, 521, 522
 Mett, Ida, 212
 Mettoudi, Elie, 899
 Metzger, 266
 Meuret, 111
 Meyszner, August, 835, 836
 Mezerna, Ahmed, 266
 Miaskovshi, Iacov, 640
 Michael I (king), 582, 619
 Michel, Charles, 130
 Michelson, M., 827
 Michos, Dimitris, 516
 Micillo, Abdon V., 479
 Mickovic, Mikuláš, 860
 Migdal, André, 237, 238
 Migilevski family, 748
 Migliavacca, 537
 Migliorati family, 419
 Mihăiescu, Ion, 710, 711
 Mihail, Boulescu, 602
 Mihail, Ioan Z., 691
 Mihail, Mihail Șandor, 747
 Mihail, Schrențel, 607
 Mihăilescu, Eugen, 710
 Mihăilescu, Vasile, 643, 713, 804
 Mihailov, 19
 Mihailov, B., 18
 Mihailovici, Victor, 684, 699, 700, 731, 805, 807
 Mihalache, 786
 Mihčić, Andro Vid ("Fra Vid"), 547
 Mikuleczky, Gyula, 353
 Milač, Metod, 541
 Milchev, Milcho, 3
 Mileta, Girolamo, 553
 Miller, Anton, 382
 Millozzi, Paola, 450
 Miloš, Ljubo, 61, 70, 76
 Milthorp, Fred S., 280
 Milutin di Arso, Giucchin, 452
 Mindel, Helene. See Joffe, Helene
 Minev, Metodi, 40
 Mironova, Tat'iana. See Kiseleva, Tat'iana
 Mirski, Law, 425
 Mirti family, 466
 Mișcă, Ștefan, 620
 Mismar, Hela. See Kraus, Hela
 Misrahi, Roger, 104
 Misrahi, Suzanne, 104
 Misuri, Alfred, 470–471
 Mittelman, Janö, 343
 Mittérand, François, 141
 Moatti, 899
 Mocanu, 821
 Modestino, Guerriero, 528
 Modigliani, Lazaro, 519
 Mohammed ben Youssef, Sidi, 240
 Mohammed V (king), 240
 Moine, André, 127, 253, 266
 Moisev, Alexandru, 713, 715
 Moldauer, Maria Luisa, 437
 Moldoveanu, Sandu, 600, 601, 653
 Molière, 216
 Mollier, Jean-Yves, 531
 Momigniano, Eucardio, 469
 Moncho, Vincente Ferrer, 108
 Moneger, 138
 Monod (in Beaune-la-Rolande), 111
 Monod (with French Red Cross), 237
 Monod, Maurice, 288
 Môquet, Guy, 130
 Môquet, Prosper, 130
 Moranne, Jacques, 152, 162
 Moraru, M., 716
 Morávek, Augustín, 845
 Moreau, 237
 Moreau, Charles, 129, 179, 237, 238
 Morelli, George, 647
 Moreno (Hadjerat M'Guil prisoner), 271
 Moreno (Kersas prisoner), 278
 Morin, André, 208
 Moritz, August, 538
 Mormino, 406
 Morpurgo, Attilio, 460, 461
 Morsero, Michele, 402
 Morvai, János, 355
 Mosca, 271, 272
 Moshe, Shemuil Iosif, 38
 Mošić, Alexander, 546
 Moskona, Albert, 43
 Mosner, Samuel, 806, 807
 Moșoiu, Gheorghe, 610, 686, 696n2
 Mosso, Alberto, 401
 Matora, Savin (Sabin), 687, 811, 812
 Moulinet, Emile, 182
 Mpirkas, Kostas, 507
 Mpourogianēs, Lampros, 523
 Mucenica, Aurel, 764, 765
 Muhammed, Allel, 263
 Müller (SS-Obersturmbannführer), 642, 719
 Müller, Erwin, 262
 Muller, Katherine, 341
 Müller, Ladislav, 869
 Mumdzhiiev, Tsvetan, 7, 8, 10, 12, 20, 23, 24n6, 28, 34, 37, 38
 Munin, Milam Mudev, 43
 Munzi, Valentino, 447, 448
 Murgescu, Ilie C., 811, 812
 Musolino, Eugenio, 435
 Musso, Fernand, 124
 Mussolini, Benito, 46, 390, 391, 392, 393, 400, 401, 406, 410, 412, 416, 418, 420, 423, 428, 434, 435, 439, 441, 445, 449, 452, 454, 455, 460, 463, 465, 468, 469, 473, 476, 491, 502, 513, 517, 518, 528, 535, 543, 545, 546, 548, 552, 553, 554, 896
 Mustăciosu, I., 764
 Mútňanský, 889
 Muttel, 276

- Nadžer, Antun, 73, 74
 Nagler, Moritz, 791
 Nagy (főhadnagy), 320
 Nagy (from Lucenek), 424
 Nagy (zászlós), 321
 Nagy, Bela, 321
 Nagy, István, 364
 Nagy, Jenő, 357, 358
 Nagy, László, 385
 Nahmias, Paul, 266
 Nakov, 39
 Napovnici, Riven, 804
 Nasta, Alexandru, 792
 Năstase, Ion, 662
 Năsturaș, Constantin, 630, 643, 688, 699,
 700, 713, 715, 721, 731, 742, 752, 756, 757,
 769, 799, 804, 805, 807
 Natali, Oliviero, 473
 Natijević, Miro, 70
 Nazzariáz, 278
 Neaga, Ion, 749
 Nedić, Milan, 833, 835, 836, 839
 Nehring, Walther, 894, 895
 Neiger, Marcel, 169
 Neiner, Ana, 766
 Nemec, Martin, 68
 Németh, Imre, 362–363
 Németi, Sándor, 364
 Nenezić, Dragan S., 489
 Neri, Giuseppe, 448
 Neszemély, Zoltán, 339
 Neufeld, Simon, 352
 Neuhausen, Franz, 832
 Neumann, Bernard Peter de, 298
 Neumann, Oskar, 848, 875
 Neumann, Peter de, 260, 274
 Nica, Vasile, 597, 616, 662, 706, 707, 732,
 754, 787, 790, 810, 816
 Nicleşte, Constantin, 806
 Nicoraă, Augustin, 618
 Nicod, René, 139
 Nicolay, Joseph de, 280
 Niculescu, Dumitru, 754
 Niculescu, M., 728
 Niculescu-Coca, Mihail, 728
 Niersmann, 281
 Nikolayeva family, 748
 Nissim, Giorgio, 405
 Nistreanu, Anghel, 730
 Nişescu, Vasile, 764
 Nitti, Francesco Fausto, 439
 Nižňanský, Eduard, 846
 Nizza, 500–501
 Njemirovski, Fedor and Boris, 547
 Noguès, Charles, 240, 294
 Nonno, Domenico, 475
 Normand, 121
 Nouă, Jucica, 150
 Noura, Hedi, 144
 Novak, Franz, 346
 Ntavas, Vaggelis, 518
 Numahamed, 280
 Nuremberg, Iosif, 802
 Nyíregyházy, Pál, 364
 Oancea, Octavian, 693, 715, 756
 Oberg, Karl, 96
 Obranec, Štefan, 857
 Očić, Maks, 57
 Ohlendorf, Otto, 592
 Oiring, Moise, 692
 Oláh, András, 353
 Oliel, Jacob, 247, 269, 273, 284, 288
 Oling, Max, 138, 220
 Oliva, Remei, 107
 Ollier, 262
 Ollivier, Abbot, 132
 Oppetit, Christian, 175
 Oprea, Ion, 820
 Oprişoiu, Dumitru, 615
 Orain, René, 129
 Orăşeanu (Orăşanu), Romeo, 625, 713–714,
 715, 721, 752, 756–757, 799, 804
 Orban, László, 306
 Ordentlich, Ferenc, 336
 O'Reilly family, 160, 186
 Orel, Inka, 468
 Órendi, Gusztáv, 319
 Orešković, Joco, 58
 Orgoványi, József, 358
 Orlando, Taddeo, 432
 Ornstein, Fabius, 645
 Orsini (at Bedeau), 249
 Orsini (at Larissa), 519
 Orthman (Orthmann), Richard, 284,
 296, 297
 Ortona, Delfina (née Lusena), 409
 Oşanu (Oşeanu), Gheorghe, 741, 760, 821
 Osváth, Zoltán, 358
 Otaz, Giovanni, 468
 Ottani, Agostino, 448
 Ottolenghi, Adolfo, 472
 Ottolenghi, Silvio, 405
 Oube, Dejzasmach, 503
 Outselini, R., 516
 Ouzegane, Amar, 266
 Ovcharov, 21
 Pădure, Aristide S., 588, 589, 610, 611, 612,
 658, 659, 670, 680, 682, 686, 695, 696,
 717, 718, 802, 803, 827
 Paiser, Ilie, 789
 Paitashev, Asen Vladimirov, 33
 Paitashev, Ivan, 16
 Pajas, Janko, 70
 Pajes, 412
 Paksy-Kiss, Tibor, 306, 310, 348, 349
 Pál, Endre, 337
 Palatucci, Giuseppe Maria, 412
 Palermo, Domenico, 399
 Palm, 592
 Pałți, Sonyah, 739
 Palumbi, Nicola, 466
 Palumbo, Lorenzo, 415
 Pamfil, Gheorghe, 673
 Pamphili, Filippo Doria. See Doria
 Pamphili, Filippo
 Pampuri, Angelo, 435
 Panait, Victor, 677
 Panaitescu, Traian, 817
 Panaiţiu, Constantin, 637, 638
 Panapolous, Petra, 279
 Panariello, Antonio, 399, 407, 414, 475
 Pandrea, Dumitru, 719, 777
 Panea, Aurel, 647
 Paneth, József, 336
 Panicacci, Jean-Louis, 536, 537
 Pansoya, Umberto. See Ransava, Umberto
 Pantar, Franc, 433
 Pântea, Gherman, 728
 Panza, Stefano and Caterina, 468
 Papini, Guido, 443
 Papo, Avram, 546
 Papon, Maurice, 178
 Papp, Géza, 348, 349
 Papp, Rogozi, 374
 Papp, Zoltán Rogozi, 374
 Pappagallo, Vito, 448
 Paraschivescu, Ion, 638
 Paraşciuc, Ivan, 659
 Pärmi, Nikki, 87
 Parrini, Eugenio, 416, 424, 449, 468
 Partenie, Andrei, 723, 807
 Paschkusz, Salamon, 372
 Pascu, Dumitru, 739
 Pascu, Ion, 673
 Pasha (Pascià), Hessein Queri, 470
 Paskai, 860
 Pasqualoni, Olinto Tiberi, 408
 Passavanti, Pasquale Alessandro, 410
 Pastor, Felix, 196
 Pastore, Riccardo, 441
 Paszternák, Sándor “Shlomo,” 353
 Pászthói, Ernő, 319
 Pataki, Sándor, 321
 Pătrăşcanu, Lucretiu, 582
 Pătrăşcoiu, Nicolae, 599, 600, 747
 Pătraşcu, 600
 Paul (prince), 46
 Păun, M., 773
 Paun, Vitan, 749
 Pavelić, Ante, 46, 47, 49, 50, 54, 61, 64, 418
 Pavlík, Július, 854
 Pavlov, Nikifor Mladenov, 19, 38
 Pavlova, Maria, 33
 Paxton, Robert O., 90
 Pečanac, Konstantin Kosta Milovanović,
 833
 Pecher, Iancu, 733
 Pečúch, Július, 847, 857
 Peev, Peio Draganov. See Draganov, Peio
 Pelosio, Leopoldo, 424
 Peltier, Laurent, 106
 Pereles, Maximilian, 425
 Perényi, Zsigmond, 361
 Perets, Perets Haim, 40
 Peretti, Louis de, 235
 Péri, Gabriel, 135
 Périnat, Paul, 177
 Perlorentzos, Manolis, 507
 Perrouault, René, 130
 Perşen, Mirko, 64, 69
 Persin, Raymond, 222
 Pertini, Alessandro “Sandro,” 451, 473
 Peschanski, Denis, 114, 139, 211, 234, 235
 Peshev, Dimităr, 9, 35
 Pétain, Henri-Philippe, 90, 94, 114, 127,
 139, 140, 144, 145, 196, 220, 225, 240,
 241, 247, 248, 271, 276, 280, 286, 297
 Petală, Marcel, 616, 617
 Péterffy, Jenő, 310

- Pethes, István, 378
 Petkovich, Martino and Maria, 468
 Petrenciu, N. V., 648
 Petrenciu (Petrenciu), Victor, 604, 641, 642, 652, 690, 719, 777
 Petrescu, C., 691
 Petrescu, Mircea, 600, 601
 Petri (engineer), 860, 866
 Petriccione, Domenico, 450
 Petřík, Jozef, 879
 Petrikovski, Benjamin Yakov, 43
 Petruc, 820
 Peyrouton, Marcel, 207
 Philipson-Levy, Rachel, 120
 Picard, Roger, 216
 Picciotto, Liliana, 404, 405, 474
 Picco family, 538
 Piccolini Costa, Isabella, 450
 Picili, Dominik Hinko, 61
 Picot, Marcel, 188
 Pierson, Jean "Sarcelle," 156
 Piguet (bishop), 223
 Pilat, Bruno, 402
 Pilissy, Tamás, 343
 Pillet, Maurice, 130
 Pilnák, Jozef, 882
 Pinalov, Georgi Stoimenov, 38
 Pincas, Mayer, 806, 807
 Pincherle, Gino, 469
 Pinkas, Marko, 43
 Pinot, 171
 Pirkler, Ernő, 374
 Pirozzi, Vito, 403
 Pistiner, Arthur, 806
 Pistone, Eduino, 408
 Pistone, Giuseppe, 454
 Piton, Henri, 204
 Pius XII (pope), 439
 Pizzuti, Anna, 438
 Platnic, Abraham, 704
 Ploteanu, Grigore, 730
 Plugar family, 748
 Podd'umbierský, Ján Gál, 864
 Podestà, Agostino, 438
 Poenaru, Costică, 700
 Poesio, Camilla, 471
 Pohl, Sándor, 343
 Polak, Arnold, 327
 Polátsik, Jenő, 337
 Polea, Renblid, 633
 Polgár, 340
 Polhora, Mikuláš, 874, 876
 Pollak, Clara. See Dreyfuss, Clara
 Pollak, Paul, 469
 Pollák, Róbert, 856
 Pollock, Maida, 379
 Pompiliu, Georgescu, 687, 795
 Pop, Eugen, 792
 Popa, Augustin, 654
 Popa, Marin, 739
 Popescu, Cristodor, 811, 812
 Popescu, Dumitru, 761
 Popescu, Ioan Adrian, 690
 Popescu, Ion, 594, 604, 606, 641, 775, 777, 778, 789, 813, 817
 Popescu, Ion D., 747
 Popescu, Ionel, 795
 Popescu, Lucian, 763
 Popiști, Mihai, 679
 Popoiu, Constantin, 736, 749–750
 Popović, Miladin, 492
 Popović, Milovan, 839, 840
 Popovici, E., 691
 Popovici, P., 768
 Popovici, Traian, 631, 632
 Popovici, Victor, 677, 678
 Popovici, Virgil, 672, 677, 758
 Popović-Ostojić, Dragojla, 839–840
 Popp, Leonida, 594, 604, 606, 641, 642, 643, 690, 719, 720, 775, 777, 778, 813
 Poras, 278
 Poropane, Georges, 900
 Pospišil, 863
 Possiel, P., 274, 275
 Posteučá, Eugen, 820
 Potier, Christophe, 182
 Potocki family, 742
 Potočnik, Franc, 542
 Pozdniakova family, 748
 Pozner, I., 694
 Prast, Hauptmann von, 602, 603
 Pratz, 171
 Pressburger, Alexander, 882
 Prévôt, M., 200
 Prezioso, Vincenzo, 435
 Printzou, Eutychia, 516
 Prizant, Zvi, 340
 Prodanejishi, Mordeo, 747
 Prpić, Mihajlo, 56
 Puk, Mirko, 47
 Pusztaffi, 332
 Quast, Cläre, 212
 Quisling, Vidkun, 560, 561, 562, 566
 Raab, Franz, 118
 Rabà, Ivo and Vasco, 421
 Rabia, Ali, 266
 Rabinovici, Israel, 822
 Rabinovits, 362
 Raccah, Raymond, 899
 Rachlițchi, Serghie, 822
 Rácz, Zoltán, 337
 Radenović, Radmila, 65
 Radnóti, Miklós, 321
 Rado, Alexandru, 733
 Rado, Ernest, 67
 Radu, Lazăr, 749
 Rădulescu, Dumitru, 648
 Rădulescu, Mihai, 764, 765
 Raev, Dr., 31–32
 Raf, Țalic, 604
 Raff, Leiba, 604
 Rahn, Rudolf, 895
 Raiber, Fișel (Fishel), 737
 Rako, Ivan, 59
 Ramadan, Victor, 651, 768
 Ramel, 113
 Randall, Fred D., 794
 Randow, Anita, 414
 Ransava, Umberto, 556
 Rapetti-Engler, Huguette, 157
 Rashev, P., 28
 Rasp, Herman, 726
 Rath, Joseph, 806
 Ratz, Elsa, 475
 Rauff, Walter, 895
 Raullet, 131
 Rausa, Manuel, 107
 Rauschbach, Maurice, 118
 Ravaoli, Giuseppe, 466
 Ravera, Camilla, 451
 Reynaud, Henri, 130
 Rediess, Wilhelm, 561, 562
 Reich, Albert, 176
 Reicher family, 110
 Reichl, Kaethe. See Kaufman, Kitty
 Reinerová, Lenka, 212
 Reinisch, Martin, 791
 Renard, Jean, 160, 186
 Renaud, Ernest, 238
 Renzoni, Guido, 414
 Reviczky, Imre, 357
 Reymond, Albert, 537
 Reynaud, Paul, 144, 145
 Reynier, Elie, 122
 Rhodes, Dusty, 280
 Ricardo, Auguste, 264
 Ricci, Riccardo, 545, 548, 554
 Richter, 889
 Richtmann, Zvonimir, 67
 Ricko, Pierre de, 266
 Riegner, Gerhard, 229
 Riepp, 271, 272
 Rigas, Yannis, 507
 Riisnæs, Sverre, 561
 Risterucci, François, 140, 226, 232
 Ristović, Milan, 545, 548
 Ritter, Rubin, 694
 Rivelis, Baca, 733
 Roatta, Mario, 391, 432, 555
 Robert, Edmond, 118
 Robotti, Mario, 550
 Rocchi, Luciana, 456
 Roddellec du Porzic, Maurice Anne Marie de, 169
 Rodogno, Davide, 486, 489, 494, 544, 545, 549, 554
 Rodriguez, Stalislao, 439
 Rogalle, Jean-Baptiste, 109
 Rogalle, Jeanne, 109
 Rogozarov, 7, 17
 Roisman, Leib, 596
 Roittmann, Rubin, 723
 Roizman, Haim, 747
 Roman, Avram, 547
 Romani, Rafael, 900
 Romano, Jaša, 56, 68, 69, 71, 76, 543, 549, 554, 555
 Romano, Leon, 547
 Romita, Giuseppe, 470
 Roncoroni, Alfredo, 547
 Rosati, Carlo, 419, 451
 Rosati, Giulio Panvini, 402
 Roșca, Augustin, 677, 758–759
 Rosemberg family, 679
 Rosén, Gunnar, 86
 Rosenbaum, 340
 Rosenberg, Albert, 296
 Rosenberg, József, 372

- Rosenberg, Lajos, 370
 Rosenberg, William, 870
 Rosenberg, Walter. See Urbam, Rudolf
 Rosendal, Alfred, 382
 Rosenheim, Zsigmond, 372
 Rosenstrauch, Max, 667
 Rosenwasser, Kálmám, 364
 Rosenzweig, Laszlo, 322
 Roşianu, Lazar, 740
 Rosmarin, Solomon, 646, 647
 Rosner, István, 357
 Rosselli, Carlo, 439
 Rosselli, Nello, 470
 Rossi (corporale), 519
 Rossi (maggiore), 454
 Rossi, Ernesto, 451
 Rossi, Mario, 550
 Rössler, Bernad, 726
 Rössler, Deborah, 104
 Rössler, Eisig, 104
 Rothenberg, Aurel, 811
 Röthke, Heinz, 95, 134, 135
 Rothschild, Germaine de, 154
 Rothschild, Hans, 229
 Rothschild, Herman, 291
 Rothstein family, 679
 Roubakine, Alexandre, 269
 Rouep, 454
 Rougeron, Georges, 224
 Rousseau, André, 186
 Rousseau, René, 178
 Roussillon, Jean, 149, 157, 187
 Royer (captain), 186
 Royer, Louis, 171, 172, 177
 Rozorea, Elizeu, 658, 660, 802
 Rubal, Leea, 640
 Ruben, Martin, 425
 Rubin, Iulia, 692
 Rubin, Samoil, 692
 Rubinić, Stjepan, 48, 54, 55, 56
 Rubinstein, Pinkas, 597
 Rucker, Hans, 743
 Ruda, Alice, 385
 Ruggieri, Mario, 481
 Rupp, 274
 Rupprecht, Antal, 372
 Rusca, Ion, 736
 Rusnac, Lida, 747
 Rusu, Dimitrie (Dumitru), 643, 713, 721, 752, 773, 804
 Rusu, Mihail, 769
 Rusu, Vladimir, 750
 Ruttkay, Endre, 322
 Ruxandra, Constantin, 732
 Ryan, Clifford C., 274, 275
 Ryan, Donna, 175, 176
- Sabille, Jacques, 895, 899
 Sabol, Jan, 856
 Săceleanu, N., 764
 Sachter, Filip, 646, 647
 Saddock, Mohammed, 263
 Saevecke, Theodor, 528, 529
 Safir, Mihail, 740
 Safrany, Jozef, 888
 Saftenco, Traian, 750
 Sági, József, 368
- Sagnières, Eustache, 139
 Sajer, Eduard, 61, 62
 Šakić, Dinko, 61, 64
 Salamon, Helen, 373
 Salamon, Reichard, 370
 Salczer, David, 337
 Saliège, Jules-Géraud, 120, 193, 208
 Šallay, Ján Eugen, 891
 Sallès, Bartho, 120
 Salon, Nicole Weil, 173
 Salvatore, Paolo, 424
 Salzer, Israël, 169
 Samler, Ludvig, 604
 Samuilov, Leon Iosif, 38
 Sanchez, Jean, 263
 Sandelman, Ruvin, 726
 Šándor, Elo, 864
 Santin (bishop), 439
 Santini, Ernesto, 400, 431
 Santoni family, 445
 Santucci, 271, 272
 Sanzo, Carmine, 422
 Sapis, Ze'ev, 357
 Şaraga, Fred, 628, 629, 666, 723, 746, 767, 771, 822, 826
 Sarah (saint), 228
 Sârbu, Macarie, 732
 Sarcueil, Jean, 158
 Sardan, Pierre-Olivier de, 214
 Sargala, Visco, 713
 Sárosi, Gyula, 336
 Sashalmi, Imre, 353
 Satloff, Robert, 258, 297
 Sattler, Bruno, 835, 836
 Saule, 127
 Sauvageon, Jean, 183
 Săvecke, Theodor, 895
 Savin, Maks, 547
 Savorgnan, Enzo, 459–460
 Scalarini, Giuseppe, 435, 470
 Scamboli, E., 513
 Scassellati Sforzolini, Francesco, 482
 Schaeys, 208
 Schäfer, Emanuel, 835, 836
 Schäffer, László, 321
 Schafranov, Sofia, 464
 Schaul, Dora, 212
 Schchori, Schoschanna, 333
 Schechter, Felix, 755
 Schechter, Joseph H., 738
 Scheffer, Laszlo, 320
 Scheid, Pierre, 160
 Schiberna, Ferenc, 385
 Schickler, Oscar, 807
 Schiffer, Alessandro, 409
 Schiffer, B., 716
 Schildt, Rolf, 86
 Schiller, Fred, 547
 Schilling, János, 336
 Schindler, József, 344, 345
 Schirach, Baldur von, 842
 Schlesinger, Isu, 740
 Schmidt (obersturmführer), 339
 Schmidt, Abraham, 595
 Schmidt, Imre, 373
 Schmidt, Jean, 137
 Schmolka, Marie, 872
- Schobert, Erich Ritter von, 602
 Schoenberger, Moritz, 169
 Schoenblum, David, 328
 Schönberger, Dezső, 344
 Schor, Iacob, 640
 Schorr, Albert, 698
 Schosmann, Louis, 263
 Schossberger, Herman, 555
 Schreiber, Simon, 338
 Schröder, Ludwig von, 832
 Schroeder, Tibor, 361
 Schteinberg family, 679
 Schulhof, Ilana, 342
 Schulsinger, Max, 664
 Schulz, Ludovít, 884
 Schwab, Hugo, 738
 Schwartz, Beniamin, 747
 Schwartz, Bertha (née Teitelbaum), 236
 Schwartz, Heinrich, 872
 Schwarz, Wladimir, 183
 Schwesig, Karl, 218
 Scoccimarro, Mauro, 473
 Scorza, Carlo, 423
 Secchia, Pietro, 451
 Secuianu family, 679
 Seelig, Rudolf, 438
 Sefa, Qemil, 489
 Segal, Gustav, 604
 Segal, Iulius, 740
 Segall, A., 822
 Segre, Adele Regina, 408
 Segre, Spartaco, 409
 Seibermann, I., 733
 Seidl, Siegfried, 364
 Seliko, Salvator Rafailov, 26
 Sello, Ernest, 255
 Sellyey, Vilmos, 306
 Sénard, Yvette, 148, 194, 195, 196
 Senise, Carmine, 392, 438, 473
 Senoist, 111
 Separavac, Ivo, 468
 Separavic, Mara, 468
 Sereni family, 447
 Serghie, Covila Covata, 662
 Şerpuleţ, Constantin, 604, 641, 690
 Seynave, 253
 Sfez, Henry, 899, 901
 Sforza, Caterina, 428
 Shaulov, Albert, 20
 Shehu, Mehmet, 171
 Shonkin, Aleksii Ivanchev, 40, 41
 Showell, 275
 Shtivelman, Loew, 771
 Shumanov, Pane, 40
 Sicor, Jeni and Hasia, 607
 Sidar, Eugen, 598
 Sideridis, Yannis, 519
 Sideris, Ilias, 512
 Siebuer, Moritz, 726
 Sienko, Galaction, 642
 Sigfried, Wittner, 608–609
 Sigot, Jacques, 153, 184, 186, 188, 204
 Silberberg, Móric (family), 886
 Silberman, Izrael, 795, 796
 Silman, Aron, 780
 Silvestri, 519
 Silvestro, 496

- Sima, Horia, 570
 Simeonov, 12
 Šimitchiev, Ivan Iotov, 12, 26
 Šimko, Jozef, 865
 Simojoki, M., 86
 Simon, István, 385
 Simon, László, 343
 Simon, Magda, 333
 Singer, 703
 Singer, Milan, 555
 Singer, Vlado, 64
 Singer, Zoltán, 336
 Sinkó, Ervin. See Spitzer, Franjo
 Sirca, Eugen A., 591
 Sireteanu, Gabriel, 739
 Sirmayov, 19
 Skachkov, Nikola, 19, 20, 39, 40
 Smetansky, 742
 Šmil, Puchki, 607
 Smochină, Alexandru, 641, 642, 687, 690,
 719, 775, 777, 813
 Smolenszki, László, 319
 Smolinska, FÉla. See Kamras, FÉla
 Smolka, Heinrich, 319
 Sobl, Samoil, 714
 Sofian, Dumitru, 616, 718, 726, 787
 Sokoly, Laszlo, 374
 Solignac, Yves, 139
 Solomon, Iosub, 604
 Solomon, Schneider, 607
 Sommer, Carlo, 552
 Sommer, Erwin, 248
 Sommer, R., 124
 Somogyi, Joseph, 345
 Somorlyai, János, 336
 Sontag, Sali, 704
 Șor, Iacob, 640
 Sorge family, 436, 437
 Soulier, 168
 Soustelle, Jacques, 284, 289
 Soutter, William, 298
 Spada, Annunziata, 450, 451
 Spadazzi, Anna, 403
 Spănu, Radu, 648
 Speiser, Benjamin (Beniamino), 443
 Spinelli, Altiero, 473
 Spinone, Giuseppe, 552
 Spira-Ruschin, Steffie, 212
 Spitz, Mozes, 319
 Spitzer, Franjo, 543
 Spritzman, Samuel, 459
 Sprung, 545
 Srebrnić, Jože, 455
 Stabile, Rosario, 441
 Stagnetti, Spartaco, 470, 471
 Stalin, Joseph, 80, 83
 Stamatiu, I., 788
 Stamboli family, 319
 Stamboliiski, Aleksandŭr, 4
 Stamm, Gunther, 209
 Stan, Ion, 776
 Stănculescu, Ion, 682–683, 688–689, 696,
 701, 792
 Starciuc, 734
 Starinský, Peter, 863, 884
 Stark, Arpád, 890
 Stathopoulos, Kostas, 506
 Stavrat, Olimpiu, 783
 Stavrescu, Nicolae, 654, 655, 656
 Stazzi, Santo, 58
 Ștefan, Solomon, 599
 Ștefanec (engineer), 855, 856, 859, 860, 861
 Ștefănescu (inspector), 825
 Ștefănescu (locotenent), 755
 Ștefănescu, Ion, 648, 670, 686, 695
 Stegaru, Ștefan, 591, 739
 Stein, Margot, 174
 Steinberg, Heinz, 283
 Steinberg, Israel, 67
 Steinberg, Saul, 465
 Steiner, Andrew “Ondrej,” 848
 Steiner, Emil, 372
 Steiner, Sándor, 355
 Steinfeld, Bercu, 791
 Stephaich, Pál, 343
 Stéphan, Roger, 139, 140, 141
 Ștern, Iosif, 716
 Stern, Julia, 354
 Stern, Ludwig, 221
 Stern, Nicolae, 733
 Sternberg, Arnold, 71
 Sternberg, Julio, 76
 Stihl, Ion, 710
 Stino, Laurentiu, 592
 Stiper, Ivan, 75
 Stolar, Moise, 597
 Stolerman, Elias, 766
 Stolerman, Nukhem, 712
 Stoleru, Aron, 704
 Stössler, Karl, 278
 Stournas, Kostas, 523
 Străchinescu, 599
 Stracke, Fritz, 833, 835
 Straka, 854
 Strătulat, 742
 Stratulat family, 748
 Strauss, Bela, 76
 Strohschneider, Walter, 348
 Struffi, Umberto, 408
 Stuchman, Nachman, 747
 Stucinscaia, Tania, 659
 Stŭlpnagel, Karl-Heinrich von, 130
 Stŭlpnagel, Otto von, 94, 130
 Suarez, Camus, 528
 Suchet, 258
 Sudre, Antonin, 232
 Șuhotnăi, Leib, 640
 Sulewic, Henri, 233
 Šuljić, Josip, 448
 Suppa, Ercole, 448
 Șut, Mendel, 747
 Suutari, Viljo, 87
 Svarc, Jeti, 549
 Švitler, Jozef, 876
 Swimmer, Klara, 354
 Sydney, Thomas, 457
 Szabó, Gyula, 335
 Szajkowski, Zosa, 268
 Szálasi, Ferenc, 305, 306, 312, 330
 Szall, Antal, 321
 Szász, Ferenc, 348
 Szegő, Luigi, 428
 Székely, József, 348, 349
 Szenes, Catherine, 326
 Szenes, Hannah, 326, 328
 Szentandrásy, András, 329
 Szentandrásy, Pál, 370
 Szentivanyi, Gavril, 371
 Szerkely, Valeria, 327
 Sziller, Károly, 341
 Szlávy, László, 353
 Szmuck, Henrik, 370
 Szmulewicz, Jacob, 217
 Szofer, Mór, 370
 Szoka, László, 374
 Szoó, Tibor, 343
 Szttern, Aba, 111
 Taar, Kázmér, 348
 Taba, 278
 Tache, Duru, 764
 Tadzher, Zhak Solomon, 39
 Tagliatela, Mario, 430
 Tahar, Cheikh Azoug, 266
 Takács, Jenő “Emil,” 336
 Tálas, András, 320, 321
 Talis, Iakov, 607
 Tamás, Károly, 357
 Tamási, Lajos, 336, 348
 Tanacs, Dziga, 132
 Tănăsescu, Constantin, 646, 647
 Tánzer (Tanger), 412
 Tarján, Kálmán, 343
 Taslitzky, Boris, 226
 Tassart (Tassard), 101
 Tassaux, 234
 Tattersall, Richard, 330
 Tăutu, Ștefan, 636, 664, 714
 Taylor, Wallace C., 794
 Tchang, Antonio, 435
 Tedeschi, Davide, 441
 Teich, Meir, 752
 Teitelbaum, Bertha. See Schwartz, Bertha
 Tekeres, Lajos, 385
 Temime, Isaac. See Temimi, Isaac
 Temimi, Isaac, 249
 Ténine-Michel, Nadia, 103
 Tepavski, Ivan, 19
 Terboven, Josef, 560, 561, 562
 Terracini, Umberto, 448, 451
 Testa, Temistocle, 437, 438
 Theis, Édouard, 225
 Thiano, David, 489
 Thomas, Charilaos, 506
 Thompson, William Frank, 31
 Thoretton, Georges, 130
 Timbaud, Jean-Pierre, 130
 Tiso, Jozef, 318, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846,
 847, 848, 849, 861, 871, 872, 880,
 885, 886
 Tiso, Ștefan, 849
 Tito, Josip Broz, 39, 41, 49, 50, 553, 793
 Tloka, Alexandra, 800
 Togliatti, Palmiro, 393
 Tölgyesy, Győző, 306
 Tomaschoff, 866
 Tomášek, Vincenc, 884
 Tomasevich, 50n4
 Tomislav II, 46
 Tomulescu, Victor, 764
 Tonnot, Marc, 142

- Tontysh family, 748
 Topor, Ion, 603, 638, 749, 783
 Torchio, 408
 Torgan, Moise, 747
 Torma, Frigyes, 320
 Torrigiani, Domizio, 440
 Torrini (archbishop), 405
 Toshkov, Todor Hristov, 19, 20
 Tóth, Ernő, 385
 Toth, Lajos, 351
 Tourelle, Pierre Charles, 284
 Toussaint, 119
 Tracou, Jean, 157
 Trandafirescu, Alexandru, 600, 601
 Trathman, Baba, 596
 Traz, David de, 620, 708
 Treas, 272
 Trencsényi, József, 364
 Trevisani, Guido, 422
 Trocmé, André, 224, 225
 Troise, Pasqualina, 463
 Tsan Wong-ling, 156
 Tsion, Daniel, 36
 Tsirkas, Kostas, 505
 Tsolakoglou, Georgios, 505
 Tudosie, D., 637, 638
 Tuka, Vojtech, 843, 844, 845, 846
 Tumarchin, Sergei, 653
 Tumin, Leopold, 694
 Turanec, Jozef, 847
 Turcanu, Mihail, 691
 Turcu, Titus, 654
 Turner, Harald, 832, 833, 836
 Tursun, Nikola, 69
 Turturescu, T., 824n1
 Tvrđý, Vojtech, 889
 Tzamaloukas, Nikos, 508
 Tzupani (Tzulpani), 519
- Ubrizsi, Pál, 330, 346
 Újlaky, László, 343
 Ullman, Julius, 255
 Ulman, 691–692
 Ungár, Béla, 364
 Ungar, Rosie, 374
 Ungárova, Alžbeta. See Forgáčova, Alžbeta
 Ungváry, Krisztián, 328
 Urbán, László, 348, 349
 Urruty, François, 156
 Urseanu, I., 811
 Ursu, Aristide, 764, 765
 Ursu, Nicolae S., 670
 Ursuleanu, Marin, 690
 Ursuleanu, Octavian, 641, 775, 813
 Usaurou, 144
 Uzan, Maurice, 899
- Vadnai, Georges, 172
 Vaisman, 626
 Vajai, Imre, 358
 Vajai, Sándor, 357
 Vajda, Ernő, 332
 Vajda, János, 344
 Vajna, Gábor, 312, 324
 Valensi, Marcelle, 203
 Vallat, Xavier, 95
 Vallet, Joseph, 266
- Vallot, 211
 Valobra, Lelio Vittorio, 491, 496
 Văluță, 747
 Vanderstocken, Gaston, 288
 Vannay, Béla, 315
 Varetto, Giacinto, 448
 Várhelyi, Tibor, 357–358
 Váró, Indár, 370
 Vásárhelyi, János, 310
 Vásárhelyi, László, 348, 349
 Vasdényei, István, 346
 Vašek, Anton, 847, 848, 890
 Vasilescu, 700
 Vasiliu, Constantin Z., 573, 582, 610, 749, 782
 Vasiliu, Ștefan, 764
 Vašina, Imrich, 854, 855, 881
 Vassallo, Sebastiano, 452
 Vasslas, Moti, 640
 Vastagh, 364
 Vautier, Camille, 256, 283, 285, 294, 296
 Vazitaris, 505
 Vazquez Sanchez, Jose, 257
 Vecchio, Antonio, 458
 Vecchio, Giorgio, 423
 Vechi, Filip, 638
 Veiserbergher, Isac, 714
 Veisman, Avraham, 822
 Veissid, Albert, 179
 Vekemans, Paul, 285
 Velkov, Zahari, 31
 Venengoni, Mauro, 435
 Venne, Vincenzo, 541
 Verbrugghen, Jacques, 537
 Verbrugghen, Lucien, 537
 Veress, Jenő, 336
 Vergne, 132
 Vermont, Victor. See Glasberg, Vila
 Verneiges, Noël, 168
 Vernerey, 106
 Véték, György. See Kaposváry, György
 Vetu, Ion, 786
 Vicder, Lupu, 741
 Viciot, 247, 271, 272, 278, 281, 296
 Vidala, 144
 Vidmar, Drago, 455
 Vieil, M., 206
 Vieillescazes, Claude, 129
 Vielcazat-Petitcol, Marie-Juliette, 116, 124
 Viest, Rudolf, 849
 Vieux, Marcellin, 134, 135
 Vignjević, Ivan, 60
 Vigor, Georges, 130
 Viguier, Henri, 155
 Vijnievschi, Bertha, 742
 Vijnievschi, Huna, 742
 Villa, Alberta, 466
 Villy, Louis, 266
 Vilner, Benjamin, 811, 812
 Vincelet, 262
 Vincze, Stefan, 371
 Vindisch, Iancu, 726
 Vinea, Emanoil, 811
 Viner, Hariton, 827
 Viningher, Siegmund, 692
 Viniola, 512
- Vion, Pascal, 153
 Viranyi, Andrei, 371
 Vitaliani, Cirillo, 402
 Vitcu, Nicolae, 761, 762
 Viterbo, Carlo Alberto, 469
 Viterbo, Gina, 460, 461
 Vitez, Ivan, 675
 Vittorio Emanuele III (King Victor Emanuel III), 402, 550
 Vizintin, Milo, 429
 Vladimirov, Ivan M., 25
 Vlasov, Andrey, 589, 720, 747
 Vlček, Tomáš, 870, 891
 Vodă, Ion, 644, 650, 688, 699, 700, 723, 745, 772, 807
 Voiculescu, Constantin, 614, 637, 638, 734, 735, 749, 827
 Voigt, Klaus, 58, 402, 546, 548, 554
 Voinea, 820
 Vojtaššák, Ján, 843
 Volár, Karol, 858
 Volner, Žiga. See Wolner, Žiga
 Volokh, 640
 Volosievici, Sergiu, 648
 Volpini, Gilberto, 460
 Vourtsanis, Alekos, 517
 Vovacovi, Emilio and Iecla, 468
 Vozár, Jozef, 881
 Vranik, Vladimir, 555
 Vrbam, Rudolf, 848
 Vrbam, Ante, 64
 Vujković, Svetozar, 836
 Vulesica, Marija, 68
- Wagner, Robert, 148, 151
 Wallenberg, Raoul, 324
 Wallestad, Eivind, 561, 562, 565, 566
 Walter (doctor), 189
 Walter, Bernard, 602–603
 Ward, James Mace, 844, 847
 Wax, Aladár, 364
 Wayne, Benjamin, 327
 Weil, Nicole. See Salon, Nicole Weil
 Weil, Richard, 536
 Weill, Clementine, 235
 Weill, Joseph, 145
 Weill-Raynal, S. M., 175
 Weinberger, Hillel, 337
 Weinberger, Jenő, 337
 Weinberger, Manó, 336
 Weinberger, Miksa, 335
 Weinberger, Mózes, 348
 Weinberger, Pál, 337
 Weinberger, Samu, 336
 Weinberger, Yechiel, 337
 Weiniseck, Hers, 791
 Weinstein, Moise, 645
 Weinstock, Samu, 364
 Weisman, Haim, 596
 Weiss, Harry, 169
 Weiss family, 181
 Weissmandel, Michael Dov, 848
 Weisz, Hedy, 361
 Weisz, Icuka, 361
 Weisz, József, 337
 Weisz, Mór, 364
 Weisz, Pál, 335

- Weisz, Sándor, 361
 Weisz family (Hungary), 318
 Weitman, Israil, 640
 Wenger, Victor, 140
 Wennholz, Erich, 362
 Wertheimer, 220
 Weschler, 808
 Wetzler, Alfred, 848
 Wetzler, József, 337
 Whalley, George, 261, 274, 280
 Whealy, Aniko, 349, 350
 Wider, Náthán, 364
 Wider, Shulem, 364
 Wiener, Ladislav, 61
 Wiesel, Elie, 351
 Wiesenthal, Mendel, 604
 Wildmann, Hannelore, 148, 149
 Wildmann, Heinrich, 198
 Wildmann, Hugo, 148, 165
 Wildmann, Manfred, 148, 149
 Wildmann, Margot, 148
 Wilhelm, Schimmel, 608–609
 Williamson, 298
 Winkler, Ernő, 358, 359
 Wisliceny, Dieter, 330, 351, 845, 847, 848
 Wittner, Herbert, 806, 807, 808
 Wodowski, Félix, 105
 Wodowski, Regine, 105
 Wojtowicz, Richárd, 349
 Wolf, Friedrich, 171
 Wolf, Mátyás, 342
 Wolf, Maurice, 233
 Wolk, Salomon, 165
 Wollheim, Heinrich, 189
 Wolner, Ziga, 76
 Worms, Marcelle, 139, 140
 Worms, Roger. See Stéphane, Roger
 Wyss-Dunant, 251, 252, 254, 255, 259, 265, 267, 272, 273, 276, 277, 282, 284, 285–286, 288, 289, 290, 294, 296
 Xydeas, Michalis, 517
 Yeörgios I (king), 508
 Zagami, Leopoldo, 439
 Zaharia (camp commander), 730
 Zaharia, Gheorghe, 827, 830
 Zaharia, Sali, 755
 Zahariev, Ivan, 32
 Zaidel, Ana, 661
 Zakani, Kamos, 530
 Zakratsek, Karl, 291
 Zambra, 764
 Zamfir, Georgescu, 764
 Zamfirescu, P., 788
 Zamorani, Emilio and Massimo, 428
 Zancu, Justin, 739
 Zanetc, Marco, 468
 Žanić, Milovan, 47
 Zannas, Alexandros, 509, 510n3, 510n14
 Zaslavskii, Iosif, 640
 Zavodský, Vojtech, 890
 Zeberou, Jacob, 266
 Zei, Alberto, 424
 Zelleke Agadew, Bejirond, 503
 Zhdanov, Andrey, 83
 Zilberman, Iulius Haim, 41
 Zilberman-Lipcani, Motel, 742
 Zilberstein, Marcel, 105
 Zimriev, Lioben Petrov, 37
 Zins, Bogdan, 411
 Zinsenheim, Karol, 858
 Zirojević, Voja, 468
 Živaković-Kerže, Zlata, 76
 Zlătescu, Gheorghe, 781
 Zloezower, Mina, 807
 Znamenák, Ján, 880
 Zogu, Ahmet (Zog I), 500
 Zöldi, Márton, 306, 357
 Zoltán, Péter, 355
 Zolyomi, Lajos, 372
 Zorić, Zdravka, 74–75
 Zsari, Arpad, 381–382
 Zsidegh, Ferenc, 379
 Zuber, 72
 Zurian, Ludovít, 864
 Züszmann, Alfréd, 353

PLACES INDEX

This index lists place names; organizations are included in the Organizations and Enterprises Index. The page numbers corresponding to each ghetto/camp essay are in bold type, and alternate names and spellings are in parentheses. Page numbers in italics refer to illustrations and their captions.

- Ääninen Lake. See Onega Lake
 Äänislinna (Petrozavodsk), 79, 81, 82, 86, 87
 Abadla (Abdala, Ksar El Abadla), 247, 271, 278, 281
 Abano Terme, 477
 Abaújszántó, 353
 Abaúj-Torna County, 343
 Abbazia Pattuglie train station, 438
 Abdala. See Abadla
 Abony, 345
 Abruzzo, 406, 434, 436, 445, 449
 Acmecetca (Acmicetca, Ahmecetca, Akmechets'ki Stavky, Akmechetka, Akmecetca), 579, 588–589, 610, 614, 641, 681, 718, 827
 Adakamre, 503
 Adale, 504
 Addi Ugri (Adi Ugri), 503
 Addis Abeba (Addis Ababa), 503, 504
 Adeleni (Ardeleni) farm, 730
 Adige River, 474
 Adi Keyn (Adi Caieh), 503
 Adi Kuala, 503
 Adi Ugri. See Addi Ugri
 Adrar, 251
 Adriatic Sea and islands, 46, 49, 435, 445, 464, 467, 540, 542, 543, 546, 547, 548, 553
 Adrien Bonnefoy-Sibour, 102
 Aegean Region and Archipelago, 507, 521, 522
 Aeolian Islands, 439, 470
 Aetolia-Acarnania region, 525
 Aflo, 264
 Africa, 30, 462. See also East Africa; French West Africa; Italian East Africa; North Africa; Tunisia; Vichy Africa
 Africa Orientale Italiana. See Italian East Africa
 Afrique occidentale française. See French West Africa
 Agafievca, 702
 Agde, 101–102, 146, 183, 214
 Agdz (Agdt), 247–248, 285
 Agen, 124
 Ágfalva, 372
 Aghia Moni, 523
 Agnone, 399–400, 408, 434
 Agordat, 503
 Agoût River, 225
 Aguillon, 115
 Ahmecetca. See Acmecetca
 Aholahhti, 82
 Aidussina. See Ajdovščina
 Aigio, 516
 Aigio-Kalavryta, 517
 Ain al-Ouraq, 254, 255
 Ain Beida, 254
 Ain Beni Mathar. See Berguent
 Aincourt, 102–103, 130, 237
 Ain Département, 139, 143
 Aïn el-Ouraq, 287
 Ain Guenfounda (Guenfouda), 248
 Ain Séfra (Ain Sefra), 248–249, 266, 270, 271, 277, 278, 284, 285, 296
 Airvault, 112
 Aït Ammar (Ait Amar), 283, 289
 Aix-en-Provence, 175, 178
 Aix-sur-Vienne, 230
 Ajdovščina (Aidussina), 477
 Ajosaari, 82
 Akaki Radio Station, 503
 Akbou, 249
 Akmechetka (Acmecetca). See Acmecetca
 Akmechets'ki Stavky. See Acmecetca
 Aknasugatag, 317
 Aknaszlatina, 351
 Akrach. See Oued Akreuch
 Akraion, 514–515
 Akronafplia (Akronauplia), 505–507, 518, 519, 521, 524, 525
 Al Jubaybīnah. See Djebibinia
 Al Kaf. See Le Kef
 Al Khums. See Homs
 Al Marsa. See La Marsa
 Al Parco Hotel, 437
 Alam Bakagni Prison, 503
 Al-Aricha (Al-Arisha). See El-Aricha
 Alatri. See Le Fraschette di Alatri
 Alavoinen (Il'inskiy), 81
 Alba Adriatica. See Tortoreto Stazione
 Alba-Iulia, 310, 599
 Albania, 46, 49, 72, 392, 425, 437, 452, 464, 471, 479, 540, 833, 835
 Albania (Italian-occupied), 479–501, 832
 Albergo Commercio (hotel), 428
 Alberobello (La Casa Rossa, The Red House), 400–401, 431
 Albi, 221
 Alboussière, 103–105
 Alexandria, 646
 Alexandrodar (Aleksandrodar, Oleksandrodar), 589–591
 Alexandrovca (Alexandrovka, Oleksandrivka), 591–592, 612, 739, 771, 819
 Alexandru cel Bun, 749, 783
 Alexianu, 576
 Algeria, 118, 128, 205, 224, 226, 240, 241, 242, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 253, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 261, 262, 263, 264, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 273, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 296, 297, 298, 896, 900
 Alghero, 426
 Algiers, 128, 240, 252, 253, 259, 266, 268, 269, 270, 272, 276, 277, 289
 Allez-et-Cazeneuve, 123
 Allier Département, 94
 Almyros, 509, 520
 Alpes-de-Hautes-Provence Département, 210, 226, 232
 Alpes-Maritimes Département, 92, 122, 129, 169, 214, 531, 532, 535, 536, 537
 Al-Qasrayn. See Kasserine
 Alsace, 126, 233
 Alsace-Lorraine, 115, 127, 158, 177, 227
 Alsace-Moselle, 165
 Alsóferenezely, 358
 Alsólendva, 359
 Altillac, 124
 Altötting, 849
 Alžbetín dvor. See Miloslavov
 Ambo, 503
 Anafi Island, 507–508, 521
 Ananiev (Ananyev), 575, 576, 592–593, 686, 768, 830
 Anchetta, 443
 Ancona, 420, 423, 432, 458, 460, 461
 Angers, 157, 186, 187
 Anghiari. See Renicci di Anghiari
 Angoulême, 167, 168, 187
 Annecy, 105–106, 149, 229
 Annemasse, 105
 Antella, 406
 Antivari, 540
 Antonio CodinCEO, 731
 Anvers, 110
 AOF. See French West Africa
 AOI. See Italian East Africa
 Aosta (Mottino barracks), 401
 Apagy, 364
 Apatin, 381
 Apennine Mountains, 404, 453, 455
 Aprica, 401–402
 Aprica Pass, 401
 Apuseni Mountains, 654
 Aquitaine region, 115
 Arad, 761, 789, 818
 Aravecchia, 402–403
 Arbe (Campora, Kampor, Rab Island), 49, 392, 393, 416, 433, 442, 454, 476, 540–543, 545, 546, 548, 549, 550, 553, 554, 555
 Arc River, 535
 Arc-et-Senans, 106–107, 143, 181
 Arcipitovca, 610, 702
 Arciz (Artsy), 615

- Arctic Ocean, 81
 Ardeal, 682
 Ardèche Département, 103, 104, 122, 166, 168, 173
 Ardeleni farm. See Adeleni farm
 Ardino, 4, 27
 Arezzo province, 418, 427, 454
 Argelès-Gazost, 120
 Argelès-sur-Mer, 107–108, 113, 114, 131, 164, 165, 183, 197, 205, 214, 219, 227
 Argentina, 50
 Argeş, 646
 Argeş River, 646
 Argirocastro (Gjirokastër), 500, 501
 Ariano Irpino, 403–404, 420
 Ariège Département, 109, 117, 118, 119, 120, 131, 156, 165, 171, 172, 226
 Arles, 178
 Armăşoaia, 814
 Arpajom, 130
 Arsiero, 464
 Arta, 515
 Artsyz. See Arcisz
 Arva farm, 593
 Ascoli Piceno, 432, 461
 Asenovgrad, 2, 18
 Asker, 567
 Asmara, 503
 Aspe Valley, 144
 Assab, 503
 Aş Şawwāf. See Saouaf
 Aş Subaykhah. See Sbikha
 Asti, 404
 Atachi (Otaci), 601, 629, 630, 632, 636, 645, 651, 664, 674, 677, 714, 715, 721, 723, 731, 745, 751, 752, 756, 758, 759, 760, 770, 774, 820, 829
 Athens, 506, 507, 516, 519, 522; Averöf Prison, 508–510, 511; Empeirikeio, 510–512; Kallithéa, 512–513
 Atia, 3
 Atlas Mountains, 247, 273
 Attica, 508, 522
 Aube Département, 222, 234, 235
 Auberive, 142
 Aubervilliers, 130
 Auchères (at Rosiers d'Égletons). See Égletons
 Audaux, 108–109
 Aude Département, 112, 113, 213, 225
 Augsburg, 74
 Aulus-les-Bains, 109–110, 120, 121
 Aunus (Olonets), 82
 Aurillac, 128
 Auschwitz, 61, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 91, 96, 103, 104, 105, 111, 114, 116, 118, 123, 124, 135, 138, 141, 147, 150, 152, 155, 157, 163, 167, 169, 175, 177, 179, 184, 185, 188, 194, 198, 199, 200, 203, 208, 210, 226, 230, 233, 235, 236, 303, 305, 315, 316, 317, 318, 322, 323, 327, 328, 329, 330, 333, 334, 337, 338, 339, 341, 342, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 354, 355, 359, 360, 361, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 371, 373, 374, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 383, 384, 386, 387, 389, 404, 405, 406, 408, 409, 421, 428, 431, 444, 456, 459, 461, 465, 474, 477, 542, 555, 561, 847, 848, 849, 855, 871, 877, 879, 889
 Auschwitz II-Birkenau, 49, 109, 120, 132, 151, 169, 184, 203, 315, 319, 322, 329, 331, 333, 335, 337, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 356, 358, 359, 360, 361, 365, 366, 368, 372, 374, 375, 381, 385, 411, 432, 472, 883
 Auschwitz III-Monowitz, 220
 Aussois, 535
 Austerlitz train station (Gare d'Austerlitz), 96, 111, 199
 Australia, 31, 154, 169, 457
 Austria (Ostmark), 50, 83, 108, 120, 125, 145, 151, 171, 207, 234, 291, 302, 323, 327, 329, 333, 342, 366, 368, 369, 372, 379, 382, 404, 438, 836, 842, 846, 849, 891
 Austria-Hungary, 64, 341, 343, 349, 350, 384, 386–387, 570, 842, 862
 Auvergne region, 154
 Auzon, 220
 Avaspatak, 361
 Avellino, 403, 420, 444, 462, 463
 Averöf Prison (Efëveion Averöf), 508–510, 511
 Avrillé-lès-Ponceaux, 157, 160. See also La Morellerie
 'Ayn Jalulah. See Djelloula
 Azemmour. See Sidi El Ayachi
 Azov Sea, 579
 Babek, 29
 Bacău, 599, 648, 789
 Bačka, 46, 302, 832
 Bačka Palanka, 381
 Backa Topola. See Topolya
 Bački Monoštor, 381
 Bácsalmás, 311, 315
 Bács-Bodrog County, 381, 382, 383, 387
 Bácska, 311, 315, 382, 383
 Bács-Kiskun County, 315
 Baden, 151, 177, 183
 Bad Schwabach, 221
 Bagatelle. See Saint-Germain-les-Belles
 Bagnères-de-Bigorre, 110, 120
 Bagnères-de-Luchon, 110
 Bagneux, 133
 Bagni Caldi, 404
 Bagni di Lucca, 404–405, 421, 439
 Bagno a Ripoli (Villa La Selva), 405–407, 464, 531
 Bagnolo in Piano. See San Tomaso della Fossa
 Bagólyuk, 337
 Baia, 571, 818
 Baia-Mare. See Nagybánya
 Băița, 654
 Báj, 364
 Baja, 311, 315, 383, 387
 Bajšar, 381
 Bakar. See Buccari
 Balaiciuc (Balaichiuk), 594–595
 Balanovca (Balanovka), 595–596, 610, 651, 707, 714
 Balassagyarmat, 311, 315–316, 374
 Balaton, Lake, 345
 Balatonalmádi, 385
 Balchi (Balki, Balky), 596–597, 636, 664, 713, 714
 Baldovinești, 574
 Balkans, 25, 31, 43, 49, 387, 391, 392, 393, 422, 439, 451, 452, 458, 471, 562, 620
 Balkány, 364
 Balki (Balky). See Balchi
 Balmazújváros, 335
 Balsa, 364
 Balta, 575, 576, 577, 578, 581, 592, 595, 597–598, 606, 607, 610, 616, 617, 621, 635, 640, 651, 662, 674, 682, 686, 691, 706, 707, 709, 711, 718, 719, 724, 726, 732, 733, 737, 750, 754, 755, 768, 778, 779, 790, 791, 809, 816, 824, 827, 830
 Balta 120 Labor Battalion/Detachment (BL 120), 599–600, 608, 747
 Băltăreți, 668
 Bălți, 620, 648, 686, 710, 751, 782, 815
 Bălți/LPRS No. 7, 600–602, 620, 656
 Bălți/Rauțel, 602–604
 Bamako, 261
 Banat, 302, 792, 832, 833, 835
 Bánffyhunyard, 348
 Banja Luka, 57
 Banjica, 833, 835, 836, 839, 840
 Bánovce nad Bebravou, 868, 886
 Bánréve, 353
 Banská Belá, 869
 Banská Bystrica, 849, 862, 890
 Banská Štiavnica, 864, 888
 Baq-Baq. See Buqbuq
 Bar, 540, 596, 713, 743, 799
 Baranya County (Baranja), 46, 302, 311, 353, 366, 371
 Barbat, 58
 Barbu Catargiu castle, 764
 Barcarès, 227
 Barcs, 316, 343, 366, 371
 Bârdfalva (Berbești), 317
 Bardufoss, 562
 Barenton, 110, 186
 Bari, 400, 424, 432, 438, 468, 482, 484, 499, 540, 542, 547, 552
 Bârlad, 678, 814
 Bars and Hont County, 310, 341, 350, 385
 Basque region, 150
 Bas-Rhin region, 115, 211
 Bassans, 189
 Basse-Normandie region, 110
 Basses-Alpes Département (Hautes-Alpes), 92, 122, 226, 531, 537
 Basses-Pyrénées Département. See Pyrénées-Atlantique Département
 Batak, 29
 Bătinești, 762
 Baumettes, 179
 Bavaria, 73, 849
 Bayonne, 168
 Bazzano, 412–414
 Beau-Désert, 177, 178
 Beaumont-La-Ronce, 160
 Beaune-la-Rolande, 92, 96, 111–112, 125, 135, 153, 198, 199, 200, 201
 Beauséjour Hotel, 103, 104
 Béchar. See Colomb-Béchar

- Bedeau (Râs el Ma), 249–250, 262, 268, 269, 283, 284
- Begeč, 381
- Beicușul Mare, 589
- Bejirond Zelleke Agadew prison, 503
- Békásmegyer, 312
- Bekecs, 370
- Békés County, 317
- Békéscsaba, 311, 317–318
- Beklemeto Pass (Trojanski Pass), 3, 30
- Belaevca (Bilaevka, Bilaievca, Bilyavka), 731, 739, 740, 797, 818
- Beled, 372, 379
- Belene, 3
- Belene Island, 39
- Belgian Congo, 293
- Belgium, 91, 101, 109, 110, 120, 123, 146, 184, 206, 207, 218, 230, 233, 236, 261, 285, 293, 296, 537
- Belgrade, 47, 73, 74, 75, 491, 496, 547, 832, 833, 835, 836
- Belgrade Fairgrounds. See Semlin
- Beli Manastir, 381
- Belovo, 22, 29
- Ben Arous, 894
- Ben-Chicao (Ben-Chica), 250–251, 252, 257, 258, 292
- Bencovazzo, 468
- Bender. See Tighina
- Benghazi (Bengasi), 413, 425, 528, 896, 900
- Béni Abbès (Beni-Abbas), 251
- Benin. See Dahomey
- Beni Snassen Mountains, 267
- Ben Slimane. See Boulhaut
- Berat, 479, 484, 488, 496, 497
- Berbești. See Bárdfalva
- Bereg County, 318, 355
- Beregkövesd, 318
- Beregovo. See Beregszász
- Beregsurány, 318
- Beregszász (Berehovo, Berehove), 308, 318–319
- Beregvégardó, 318
- Berehovo (Berehove). See Beregszász
- Berettyóújfalú, 311
- Berezhanka, 787
- Berezin (Berezan'), 818
- Berezovca (Berezivka), 575, 576, 579, 581, 588, 592, 594, 604–606, 607, 611, 614, 638, 641, 642, 652, 653, 690, 719, 720, 728, 766, 768, 775, 776, 777, 778, 813, 821
- Berg, 559, 561, 562, 565–566, 567
- Bergamasca Settlement. See Celle Ligure
- Bergame. See Berguent
- Bergeggi (Spotorno camp), 407, 410
- Bergen, 562
- Bergen-Belsen, 315, 330, 333, 335, 345, 347, 351, 352, 360, 376, 386, 419, 420, 431, 883
- Berguent (Bergame, Ain Beni Mathar), 251–252
- Berhida, 385
- Berkovitsa, 11
- Berlin, 2, 48, 120, 125, 241, 425, 560, 562
- Berlin (Bor subcamp), 320, 321
- Berlin-Plötzensee prison, 118
- Bern, 418, 794
- Bernandovca (Berandovka, Chyzhove), 606
- Berrouaghia, 241, 252, 278
- Berșad (Bershad), 575, 577, 578, 595, 606–608, 662, 706, 707, 709, 737, 754, 778, 779, 780, 809, 810, 824, 825
- Besañçon, 106
- Bessarabia, 570, 574, 575, 576, 580, 589, 592, 593, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 605, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 620, 621, 622, 626, 628, 629, 630, 633, 636, 637, 640, 644, 645, 648, 650, 651, 655, 657, 660, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 670, 672, 673, 674, 675, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 694, 697, 698, 699, 702, 703, 704, 709, 710, 712, 714, 715, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 728, 730, 732, 734, 735, 739, 742, 746, 747, 748, 749, 751, 752, 753, 755, 756, 758, 759, 763, 767, 768, 771, 772, 776, 778, 780, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 790, 791, 797, 799, 801, 803, 808, 809, 810, 812, 813, 815, 816, 822, 825, 826, 827, 829, 830
- Beszterce (Bistrița, Bistritz), 309, 319
- Beszterce-Naszód County, 309, 319
- Bethlen, 336
- Beysseyre St. Mary, 220
- Bezdan, 381
- Béziers, 101
- Biard Hill (Butte de Biard), 216
- Bihar County, 309, 362
- Bihardiószeg, 362
- Bijelina, 59
- Bilaevca (Bilaevka, Bilaievca). See Belaevca
- Bilke, 318
- Bilyavka. See Belaevca
- Biograd na Moru. See Zaravecchia
- Birzula (Kotovsk, Podilsk), 608–609, 675, 797, 821
- Bischoffler, 115
- Bistrița (Bistritz). See Beszterce
- Bitola, 31, 32
- Bivert, 169
- Bivolari, 789
- Bizanet, 236
- Bizerte, 894, 899
- Bjelovar, 68
- Bjørkelangen, 562
- BL 120. See Balta 120 Labor Battalion/ Detachment
- Black Sea and coast, 3, 25, 575, 591, 728, 738, 823
- Blacksmiths' Synagogue, 679
- Blagoevgrad. See Gorna Dzhumaya
- Blatta, 468
- Blechhammer, 217, 220, 230, 236
- Blida, 252, 264
- Blois, 162
- Bobric (Bobrick, Bobrik), 609–611, 695, 714, 747
- Bocche di Cattaro, 551
- Bodrogeresztúr, 370
- Bodrogköz, 368
- Bog-Bog. See Buqbuq
- Bogdanovca (Bohdanivka), 579, 588, 590, 591, 604, 610, 611–613, 614, 641, 661, 680, 681, 686, 702, 714, 720, 728, 739, 785, 816, 827, 830
- Boghar, 252–253, 257, 258, 262, 278
- Boghari (Boughari, Ksar Boukhari, Ksar El Boukhari, Morand), 252, 253, 257, 263
- Bogopol, 680
- Bohdanivka. See Bogdanovca
- Bohemia, 842, 843, 846
- Boiano, 399, 407–408
- Bojková, 854
- Bol (Boli, Vallo della Brazza), 543
- Bolgrad (Bolhrad), 613–615, 785
- Bolgrad/LPRS No. 8, 615–616
- Bolgrad/Turnu Măgurele, 615
- Bolhrad. See Bolgrad
- Boli. See Bol
- Bologna, 413, 430
- Bolzano, 392, 459, 463
- Bon Hepos Hotel, 547
- Bondurovca (Bondurovka, Bondurivka), 599, 616–618
- Bonga, 503
- Bonifi ca della Vittoria, 429
- Bonyhád, 367
- Bor, 304, 320–322, 354
- Borcea River, 624
- Bordeaux, 140, 144, 157, 177, 178, 216
- Bordighera, 471
- Bordj-Chandez, 250
- Bordo, 273, 274–275
- Borgo Piave barracks. See Visco
- Borgo San Dalmazzo, 408–409, 534
- Borpatak (Valea Burcutului), 358
- Borshchi, 608
- Borsod County, 310, 352, 353
- Bortniki, 714
- Bosanski Brod, 75
- Bosnia, 47, 48, 55, 69, 484, 545, 549, 554
- Bosnia-Herzegovina, 46, 47, 49, 50n4, 61, 69, 75, 545, 548, 554
- Bossuet (Dhaya), 253–254, 265, 266, 268, 278, 283
- Botoșani, 571, 574, 600, 622, 627, 644, 673, 782, 789, 814
- Bou Arfa (Bouarfa), 241, 251, 254–255, 258, 286, 287, 296
- Bou Azzer (Moulay Bou Azza/Bouazza), 255–256, 291. See also Oued Zem and Moulay Bouazza
- Bouche-du-Rhône Département, 94, 122, 129, 168, 169, 174–176, 178, 215
- Bou Denib (Boudenib, Bou Dnib, Haricot, Mèknes camp), 256
- Boughari. See Boghari
- Boulhaut (Bouhaut, Ben Slimane), 256
- Bourget, Lake, 217
- Bourgogne region, 181
- Bourrasol Castle, 144
- Bou-Saada, 264
- Boussais, 112, 182
- Bov, 17. See also Gara Bov
- Boyanovo, 32
- Bozen-Gries, 429
- Brač Island. See Brazza Island
- Brad, 654, 655
- Brăila, 574, 620, 674, 680, 731, 740, 789, 818

- Brailov, 625, 766
 Bram, 112–113
 Branč, 857
 Branița-Moghilev (Bronnytsya), 618
 Brașov, 789, 793, 794, 814, 823
 Bratislava, 844, 846, 849, 856, 858, 863, 864, 867, 868, 869, 871, 872, 873, 874, 881, 882, 885, 886
 Bratislava-Patrónka, 847, 854–855, 881, 886
 Brașlav, 725
 Bratslav, 579
 Brazza Island (Brač Island), 543–544, 549
 Brche, 468
 Brébant Prison, 145. See also Marseille
 Bredtveit, 561, 566–567
 Bregenz (Bor subcamp), 320, 321
 Breil-sur-Roya, 532, 535
 Bremen, 345, 386
 Bremen-Farge, 238
 Brenner Pass, 416
 Brens, 113–115, 133, 212, 236
 Breslau, 862
 Bretagne region, 130, 132, 167, 204, 210
 Brétigny-sur-Orge, 184
 Bretonneau General Hospital, 161
 Briceni, 650, 677, 758
 Britain. See Great Britain
 Britava, 791
 Britavca, 599
 Brive, 125, 189, 207
 Brive-la-Gaillard, 138, 207
 Bročice. See Jasenovac II
 Brodoc, 814
 Bronnytsya. See Branița-Moghilev
 Bronska-Balca, 594
 Broût-Vernet, 110
 Bruchsam, 104
 Brünn (Bor subcamp), 320, 321
 Buccari (Bakar, Kakar), 427, 544
 Bucharest (București), 570, 574, 575, 578, 579, 582, 589, 599, 600, 601, 611, 612, 614, 617, 618–620, 632, 640, 643, 647, 650, 655, 656, 659, 661, 670–671, 678, 681, 686, 687, 689, 694, 696, 711, 716, 718, 720, 722, 729, 730, 733, 735, 736, 739, 740, 743, 744, 751, 755, 757, 759, 763, 774, 778, 782, 793, 794, 796, 800, 803, 804, 807, 812, 817, 818, 819, 824
 Buchenwald, 144, 145, 167, 203, 226, 238, 315, 351, 365, 409
 Buchenwald/Magdeburg-Rothensee, 365
 Bucovăț, 792
 București. See Bucharest
 București/LPRA No. 12 and No. 13, 618–620
 Buda, 323
 Budafok, 311, 322
 Budakalász, 312, 322, 323, 331, 354
 Budapest, 301, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 309, 310, 311–312, 318, 323–325, 332, 333, 334, 340, 346, 348, 349, 354, 355, 356, 366, 367, 376, 887; Columbus Street, 325–326; Conti Street Prison, 326; KISOK, 326–327; Magdolna Street, 327–328; Margit Boulevard, 328; Mosonyi Street, 328–329; Obuda, 329–330; Röck-Szilárd Street, 330, 332, 333; Szabolcs Street, 327, 329; Tattersall, 330–331
 Budești/LPRS No. 7 and 13, 620–621
 Budi (Budy), 621–622
 Budiény farm, 813
 Büdzentmihály, 364
 Budy. See Budi
 Bug-Bug. See Buqbuq
 Bug River, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 588, 590, 592, 595, 596, 599, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 615, 625, 629, 634, 635, 636, 640, 645, 652, 658, 662, 667, 670, 680, 682, 684, 686, 687, 690, 691, 695, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 703, 706, 707, 709, 712, 713, 719, 720, 722, 723, 727, 731, 742, 743, 745, 747, 753, 754, 757, 762, 766, 769, 770, 771, 778, 779, 780, 790, 795, 798, 799, 801, 803, 806, 807, 810, 813, 816, 824, 825, 826
 Buj, 364
 Bukbuk. See Buqbuq
 Bukovina, 570, 575, 576, 577, 580, 589, 593, 595, 596, 598, 605, 607, 608, 609, 611, 615, 621, 622, 626, 628, 629, 630, 633, 636, 640, 644, 645, 650, 655, 656, 657, 660, 663, 665, 666, 667, 670, 672, 673, 674, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 692, 694, 697, 698, 699, 700, 702, 703, 704, 709, 710, 712, 714, 715, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 726, 728, 731, 732, 742, 746, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 755, 758, 759, 760, 763, 769, 771, 772, 773, 774, 776, 778, 780, 783, 786, 787, 790, 791, 801, 804, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 813, 816, 817, 820, 822, 825, 826, 827, 829
 Bulgaria, 1–44, 131, 485, 570, 621, 832, 833
 Bumbesti, 781
 Bungur, 336
 Buqbuq (Baq-Baq, Bog-Bog, Bug-Bug, Bukbuk), 527–528, 530
 Burgas, 3, 11, 13n14
 Burgenland, 302
 Burilova, 658
 Burrell, 481, 482, 486, 499. See also German
 Butte de Biard. See Biard Hill
 Buzău, 600, 818, 823
 Buzet-sur-Baïse, 115
 Byala Slatina, 11
 Byal Izvor, 4, 27
 Bystré, 844, 855–857, 861, 865
 Bzenica, 887
 Čabar, 541
 Čačak, 835
 Cadale, 504
 Čadca, 855, 874, 879, 889
 Cadrilater, 570
 Cahors, 119, 206
 Cahul, 784, 785, 786
 Cairo, 298
 Cairo Montenotte, 409–410, 450
 Caïs, 145
 Cajarc, 206
 Calabria, 416, 424
 Calafat, 571, 622–623, 672. See also Dornești and Calafat/LPRS No. 6
 Călan, 655
 Călărași, 571, 601, 620, 623–625, 824
 Călărași Târg, 648
 Calvados Département, 152, 162
 Calvari di Chiavari, 410–411, 423, 471
 Camaione, 405, 421
 Camp Boulhaut. See Boulhaut
 Camp de Fanlac. See Château du Sablou
 Camp du Ramram. See Ram Ram
 Camp Joffre. See Rivesaltes
 “Camp of La Pierre.” See Coudrecieux
 Campagna (San Bartolomeo and Immaculate Conception convents), 411–412, 415, 418, 419, 432, 434, 436, 440
 Campania, 449
 Câmpina, 571
 Campobasso, 399, 407, 414, 433–434, 475
 Campo Concentramento Internati Civili—Padova. See Chiesanuova
 Campora (Kampor). See Arbe
 Câmpu lui Neag, 655
 Câmpulung, 629, 715, 752
 Camugnano, 412–414
 Canada, 31, 457
 Cantal Département, 93, 128, 219, 220
 Căpățâneni (Căpățineni), 646
 Capdenac, 121
 Capodistria, 410, 439
 Capo Marino, 556
 Caporotondo, 448
 Capusteani (Căpușteni). See Capustiani
 Capusterna (Copesteren, Copistern, Copistrin, Kopystyryn), 579, 625–626
 Capustiani (Capusteani, Căpușteni, Kapustiani, Kapustyany), 626–627, 701
 Caracal, 571, 627–628
 Caraș, 761
 Carbonara, 547
 Cariera de Piatră. See Ladijin/Stone Quarry
 Carișcov (Karyshkov, Karyshkiv), 628–629
 Carnot, 256–257
 Carpathian Mountains, 316
 Carpathian Ukraine, 843
 Carpatho-Ruthenia, 302, 306, 307, 308–309, 310, 318, 340, 360, 361, 380, 384, 842, 843
 Čarug, 381
 Casablanca, 241, 248, 255, 265, 272, 273, 275, 280, 285, 289, 294, 295, 296, 297
 Casacalenda, 414–415
 Casa Concordia, 429
 Casale Montferrato, 408
 Casa Mirti. See Tossicia
 La Casa Rossa. See Alberobello
 Caserma di Carabinieri di Addis Abeba. See Addis Abeba
 Caserma Diaz. See Diaz Barracks
 Caserma Mottino. See Aosta
 Caserma Vittorio Emanuele III. See V. E. barracks
 Caserne Forty. See Forty Barracks
 Caserne Salel, 537
 Caserne Vallier de Lapeyrouse, 531
 Casoli, 415, 417, 421
 Casseneuil (Sauvaud, Spanish, or Train Station camp), 116–117, 123, 124
 Cassino, 449
 Castagnavizza, 415, 450

- Castellino, 423
 Castel di Guido, 401, 416, 429
 Casteljalous, 124
 Castello Sereni. See Pietrafitta-Tavernelle
 Castelnuovo di Garfagnana, 404, 405
 Castiglione della Valle, 447
 Castres, 117–119, 139, 146, 147, 172, 226
 Cațmazov (Catmazov, Katsmaziv, Kotmazov), 629–630, 771
 Cattaro (Kotor), 484, 486, 494, 551
 Catus, 119, 206
 Catzmozov. See Cațmazov
 Caucasus Mountains, 579
 Cauterets, 109, 120–121
 Caylus, 121–122, 182
 Cazaciocva, 629, 630–631, 685
 Cazaubon, 122
 Cegléd, 345
 Cehei. See Somlyócséhi
 Celldömök, 339
 Celle Ligure (Bergamasca Settlement), 407
 Ceneșeuți, 749, 750
 Ceremosh River, 820
 Čerhov. See Csörgő
 Cernăuți (Chernivtsi, Czernowitz), 576, 600, 608, 628, 631–633, 635, 674, 677, 699, 700, 715, 721, 722, 726, 731, 745, 750, 751, 758, 760, 771, 774, 786, 799, 804, 807, 811, 817, 818, 820, 821
 Cernoviți (Cernevti, Chernevtsy, Chernivitz), 633–634
 Certovca, 590
 Čertovica, 867
 Certvertinovca, 701
 Červený Most, 854
 Cetatea Albă, 613, 615, 739, 785, 786
 Cetinje (Cettigne), 540
 Četnik, 382
 Cettigne. See Cetinje
 Cetvertinovca (Chetvertinovka), 634–636, 732, 805
 Chabanet, 122
 Chaffaut, 226
 Chagal, 503
 Chaidari, 511
 Chain Bridge, 329
 Chalabre, 213
 Chalchida, 509
 Châlons-sur-Marne, 235
 Châlons-sur-Saône, 169
 Chambéry, 105, 217
 Champagnole, 106
 Chanonat Villa, 167
 Charente, 168, 203
 Charente-Maritime, 168, 203
 Charles III prison, 137
 Charolles, 156
 Chartres hospital, 237–238
 Chartreuse-de-Prémol, 205
 Châteaubriant, 103, 129, 157, 161, 179, 199, 204, 237
 Château de Bégué, 122–123
 Chateau de Flageac, 220
 Chateau-de-Grammont. See Grammont
 Château de la Pierre. See Coudrecieux
 Château de Tombebouc, 123–124
 Château d'en Bardou, 214
 Château-Doux, 124–125
 Château du Coudeau, 159, 231
 Château du Roc, 125–127
 Château du Sablou (Camp de Fanlac), 92, 127–128, 224
 Château Royal de Collioure. See Collioure
 Chatzëkösta, 516
 Chaudes-Aigues, 128–129
 Chautagne, 217
 Chauvinerie. See Montsürs
 Chaux forest, 106
 Chechelnyk. See Cicelnic
 Cheragas (Cheraga), 258
 Cherchel (Cherchell, Cherchelles), 258–259
 Cher Département, 152
 Chernevtsy (Chernivitz). See Cernoviți
 Chernivtsi. See Cernăuți
 Chervona. See Grabivți
 Chetroșica Veche, 601
 Chetvertinovka. See Cetvertinovca
 Cheylard, 173
 Chiana Valley. See Civitella della Chiana
 Chianovca (Chianivca, Kiianovka, Kyyanivka), 579, 636–637
 Chiaravalle di Fiastrea, 469
 Chibron, 122, 129, 226
 Chiesanuova (Padua), 416–417, 432, 433, 449, 454, 471, 541, 557
 Chieti, 415, 417, 420, 435, 436, 464
 Chiianivca. See Chianovca
 Chilia, 613, 784, 785, 786
 Chilia Nouă, 784, 785
 Chinon, 160
 Chirnasovca, 701
 Chișinău (Kishinev), 576, 588, 612, 615, 637–640, 651, 670, 686, 730, 734, 749, 768, 785, 786, 815, 827, 830
 Chiusi, 447
 Chmel'ov, 870
 Choisel, 129–130, 179, 180, 199, 237
 Chop. See Csap
 Chuchulgovo, 8
 Chust. See Huszt
 Chychykliya River, 719, 813
 Chyhyryn. See Cihrin
 Chyzhove. See Bernandovca
 Chyžnian Voda, 880
 Cicelnic (Cicelnic, Chechelnyk), 626, 640–641
 Cigánd, 370
 Cighino (Čiginj), 433, 545, 550
 Cigliana. See Jasenovac III
 Cihrin (Chyhyryn), 641–642
 Gimiez, 532
 Ciobănița, 571, 738
 Cirova, 867
 Cité de la Muette (“The Silent City”), 134
 Città del Duca. See Forlì
 Cittaducale, 447
 Città Sant'Angelo, 417–418
 Cittavecchia. See Stari Grad
 Ciuc, 371
 Ciușlea, 679
 Civitella della Chiana (Chiana Valley, Mazzi Villa, Oliveto Villa, Val di Chiana), 413, 418–419
 Civitella del Tronto (Santa Maria dei Lumi monastery), 419–420, 466
 Clairfond Center, 183
 Clairvaux prison, 130
 Clayes-sous-Bois, 103
 Clermont-Ferrand, 167, 223
 Cluj-Napoca. See Kolozsvár
 Cobadin. See Osmanca and Cobadin
 Cocioc, 620
 Colfiorito, 403, 420–421
 Colle di Compito, 405, 421
 Collioure, 131–132
 Colomb-Béchar, 241, 247, 254, 259–260, 270, 271, 276, 278, 281, 284, 286, 287, 296
 Colombes Stadium, 92, 94
 Colonia alpina Umberto I. See Tonezza del Cimone
 Colonia Bergamasca. See Celle Ligure
 Colosovca (Kolosivka), 579, 642–643
 Columbus Street (Budapest), 325–326
 Comando Piazza, 509
 Compiègne, 103, 111, 135, 145, 170, 203, 216, 238
 Compiègne-Royallieu, 92
 Conakry, 241, 260–261, 273, 274, 279, 280, 298
 Conatchiveț. See Conotcăuți
 Condat, 128
 Conotcăuți (Conatchiveț, Conatcăuți, Kanatchivți, Konatkiivtsi, Konatkovtsy), 643–644
 Consolata, 404
 Constanța (Constantza), 571, 574, 620, 738, 764, 814, 823
 Constantine, 240, 241, 261–262, 263, 268, 290, 297
 Continvoir, 160
 Conti Street Prison (Budapest), 326
 Copaigorod (Kopaigorod, Kopaygorod, Kopaihoroda), 575, 628, 629, 644–646, 650, 683, 685, 688, 689, 704, 723, 724, 745, 746, 772
 Copesteren (Copistern, Copistrin). See Capusterna
 Copusteni. See Capustiani
 Coray, 132
 Corbeni/LPRS No. 10, 583, 646–648
 Corbul, 601
 Coreglia Ligure, 410
 Corfù (Kérkyra), 448, 452, 513, 514, 526
 Corfù-Lazaretto Island, 513–514, 526
 Cornești Târg (Cornești Tg.), 601, 648–650
 Cornil, 207
 Corrèze Département, 124, 125, 138, 182, 206, 233
 Corropoli, 406, 415, 419, 422, 440, 445, 461, 464
 Corsica, 427
 Coșariniți (Coșarineti, Cozariniți, Kosharyntsi), 650–651
 Cosăuți, 651–652, 677, 691, 710, 751, 756, 768, 783, 820
 Cosenza, 391, 400, 404, 415, 424, 425, 459
 Cosmești, 668

- Cossovo. See Kosovo
 Costiugeni Hospital, 827
 Côte d'Azur Département, 181
 Côte d'Ivoire (Ivory Coast), 240
 Côtes-d'Armor Département, 202
 Côtes-du-Nord, 202
 Côte Radieuse, 218
 Côte Vermeille, 107
 Cotonea, 579
 Cotul-Lung, 680
 Coudrecieux ("Camp of La Pierre"),
 132–133, 188, 202
 Courgenay, 222
 Covaliovcă (Covalevca, Covaleovca, Kovaliovka, Kovalivka), 652–654, 690
 Covasna County, 371
 Covurlui, 571, 679, 696, 824
 Covurlui Territorial Circle, 574
 Cozarinți. See Coșarinți
 Cozmești, 814
 Crăciunești/LPRS No. 9, 654–656
 Craftsmen's Synagogue, 679
 Craiova, 571, 599, 656–657, 673, 674, 789
 Crampel, 262–263
 Crângăși, 620
 Crasna (Crasnoe, Crasnoie, Krasne, Krasnoe), 657–658, 756, 757, 799, 800,
 825
 Crasneanca (Cransnencoe, Crasnei, Krasnen'ke, Krasnenchi), 658–659, 718
 Crasnoie. See Crasna
 Crete, 235, 507, 510, 521
 Creuse Département, 94, 109, 136, 139
 Crișopol (Kryzhopil', Krizhopol', Kryzho-pol'), 659–660, 707, 711, 828
 Crikvenica, 554
 Crimea, 615
 Crișul Alb River, 761
 Crivoi Ozero (Krivoye-Ozero), 575, 592,
 608, 610, 658, 659, 660–662, 680, 686,
 747, 802
 Croatia, 45–77, 311, 391, 411, 426, 427, 433,
 437, 446, 465, 468, 476, 484, 485, 543,
 545, 546, 547, 548, 551, 552, 553, 554, 832,
 833, 835
 Croatia-Slavonia, 302
 Crușinovca (Krushynivka, Krushynovka),
 662–663
 Csáktornya, 311, 359
 Csallóközkürt, 337
 Csap (Chop), 347
 Csepel, 311, 331
 Csepel Island, 323, 330, 331–333
 Csepreg, 372
 Csík, 309, 373
 Csillaghegy, 323
 Csobaj, 364
 Csongrád, 333, 375
 Csörgő (Čerhov), 303, 334
 Csorna, 372
 Csurgó, 316, 343
 Cubei (Kubey), 614
 Cucavca (Kukavka), 663–664
 Cudznea, 579
 Cumpăna, 646
 Cuneo, 408, 534
 Cupari (Kupari), 545–546, 548, 554
 Curtea de Argeș, 646
 Curzola Island (Korčula Island), 546–548
 Cuzminți (Cuzminț, Cuzmineț, Kuz'myntsi), 664–665
 Czovdavca. See Vazdovca
 Cyclades Islands, 507, 521
 Cyrenaica, 528
 Czechoslovakia, 131, 151, 218, 302, 318, 336,
 338, 340, 341, 342, 343, 349, 350, 361,
 368, 377, 380, 382, 384, 385, 425, 842,
 844, 849, 862, 871, 872, 873, 886
 Czernowitz. See Cernăuți
 Dabat, 503
 Dachau, 74, 76, 134, 145, 172, 210, 330, 349, 351, 352, 366, 416, 459, 515
 Dachau/Mühldorf, 366
 Dahomey (Benin), 240
 Dakar, 240, 241, 247, 248, 261, 271, 274,
 276, 280, 286, 293, 297, 298, 299
 Đakovo (Đjakovo), 48, 49, 53–54, 76
 Dalmatia, 46, 47, 403, 417, 422, 423, 436,
 446, 451, 459, 464, 468, 494, 542, 543,
 544, 547, 551, 552, 557
 Dalnik, 728, 730
 Dâmbovița, 789
 Danane. See Dhanaane
 Danica. See Koprivnica
 Danube River, 307, 311, 323, 329, 331, 349,
 353–354, 383, 570, 615, 622, 623, 672, 764
 Dărăbani, 627, 644, 673, 741, 742, 809, 822
 DE 102. See Șiria/102 Brigade for Jews
 Debra Sina, 503
 Debre Birhan, 503
 Debrecen, 304, 307, 311, 334–335
 Debre Libanos, 504
 Debre Tabor, 503
 Dedinje, 833
 Degeš (Rastislavice), 857
 Dej. See Dés
 Dejazmach, 503
 Dekemhare, 503
 Deleni, 814
 Dél-somogy, 359
 Délvidék, 311
 Demarcation Line, 111, 116, 125, 128,
 193, 218
 Demecser, 364
 Demir-Hisar, 3, 6, 8, 9
 Derebin (Derebchin, Derebchyn),
 665–666
 Derlo River, 756
 Derventa, 75
 Dés (Dej), 309, 335–336
 Detached Battalion 21 (Er.P 21), 80, 87–88
 Detașamentul de Evrei 102. See Șiria/102
 Brigade for Jews
 Deux-Sèvres Département, 112, 182, 203
 Deva, 654, 656
 Devínska Nová Ves, 857–858
 Dhanaane (Danane), 502, 504
 Dhaya. See Bossuet
 Diaz Barracks (Caserma Diaz), 427, 433, 476
 Dibrano, 482, 487
 Dieppe, 534
 Dijon, 161
 Diósgyőr, 353
 Divdyadovo, 3
 Đakovo. See Đakovo
 Djebel Chambi, 899
 Djebel Dejjeloud railway station, 899
 Djebel-Felten, 263–264
 Djebibinia (Al Jubaybīnah), 899, 902
 Djelfa, 118, 241, 250, 252, 253, 263,
 264–265, 266, 268, 269, 278, 281, 287,
 900
 Djelfa Bedeau. See Fort Caffarelli
 Djelloula ('Ayn Jalulah), 899
 Djenien Bou Rezg, 248, 253, 266–267,
 287
 Djerrada (Jerada), 248, 267
 Djougar (Jougar), 899, 901
 Djurin (Dzhurin, Dzhuryn), 577, 666–668, 821
 Dniester River, 575, 577, 591, 599, 600, 602,
 608, 613, 618, 629, 630, 632, 636, 638,
 645, 651, 659, 664, 676, 677, 687, 691,
 693, 694, 710, 711, 714, 715, 718, 723, 731,
 733, 741, 745, 747, 748, 749, 751, 752, 756,
 758, 759, 760, 767, 768, 770, 783, 785, 795,
 797, 801, 803, 820, 821
 Doaga, 668–670
 Doboj, 545
 Dobra-Nadejda (Sofivka), 690
 Dobrovolyatz, 369
 Dobrudzha, 2, 7
 Dobruja, 570
 Dochna (Dokhno), 617
 Dokhna River, 616
 Dokhno. See Dochna
 Dolenja Trebuša. See Trebussa Inferiore
 Dolha, 318
 Dolj, 622, 656, 672
 Dolna Oryahovitsa, 13, 14, 19–20
 Domanovca (Domanevca, Domanevka, Domanivca, Domaniovcă), 579, 588, 610,
 611, 614, 641, 658, 670–671, 680, 682,
 702, 717, 718, 720, 763, 815, 827, 830
 Döme Sztójay, 306
 Domokos, 522
 Dömsöd, 331
 Donja Gradina, 61
 Donji Milhoja, 76
 Donkha River, 809
 Don River, 179
 Dordogne, 125, 127, 128, 224
 Dorian House, 679
 Dornești and Calafat/LPRS No. 6, 671–673
 Dorog, 329
 Dorohoi, 571, 576, 579, 580, 593, 623, 628,
 629, 630, 634, 636, 640, 644, 656, 657,
 665, 673–675, 678, 694, 699, 703, 705,
 706, 709, 715, 716, 721, 722, 723, 733, 742,
 746, 752, 753, 755, 760, 771, 772, 782, 789,
 799, 800, 804, 806, 807, 809, 818, 822,
 826, 829
 Doroshich, 305
 Dospat, 29
 Dospatski Prokhod. See Tash Boaz
 Dotrščina Park, 67
 Douadic, 125, 126, 133–134
 Doubs Département, 106, 143, 181, 222
 Dournazac, 231
 Dragomirovo, 13n14

- Drama, 38
 Drancy, 91, 92, 94, 96, 102, 104, 109, 111, 116, 118, 124, 133, 134–136, 137, 138, 145, 147, 151, 155, 157, 163, 167, 169, 172, 175, 177, 178, 179, 184, 188, 194, 196, 203, 208, 214, 217, 220, 229, 230, 233, 236, 408
 Dráva River, 311
 Dresden, 320
 Drniš, 543
 Drobeta-Turnu Severin. See Turnu Severin
 Drôme Département, 173, 183
 Drütte, 238
 Dubăsari (Dubossary), 575, 608, 675–676, 797
 Dubina (Dubyna), 727
 Dubnica nad Váhom/Concentration Camp for Roma, 844, 858–860, 881, 885
 Dubnica nad Váhom/Work Unit, 844, 856, 860–861, 865, 869, 885
 Dubossary. See Dubăsari
 Dubrovnik, 484, 544, 545, 546, 548, 553
 Dubyna. See Dubina
 Duderstadt, 333
 Dulcigno, 496
 Dumbrăvița, 823
 Dunajská Streda. See Dunaszerdahely
 Dunamocs, 359
 Dunaszeg, 329
 Dunaszerdahely (Dunajská Streda), 311, 336–337
 Dunavecse, 342
 Dupnitsa (Dupnitsa), 9, 11, 16, 19, 37
 Durazzo (Durrës), 481, 484, 487, 494, 499
 Đuša Street prison, 839
 Dve-Mogili, 13
 Dvoreanca, 579
 Dzhurin (Dzhuryn). See Djurin
 Dzygovka (Dzyhivka). See Jigovka
- East Africa (Italian-occupied), 502–504
 Eaux-Bonnes, 136, 167, 189, 223
 Écrouves, 137–138, 207, 237
 Edelény, 353
 Edineți (Ediniți, Ediniț, Edinet), 601, 651, 676–678, 751, 758, 774, 820
 Efëveion Averöf. See Averöf Prison
 Eger, 311, 337–338
 Egercsehi, 337
 Egersee. See Zalaegerszeg
 Égletons (Auchères camp, Rosiers d'Égletons), 138–139, 220, 233
 Egypt, 298, 527, 530, 896
 El Agareb. See Tniet-Agarev
 El Bayadh. See Géryville
 El Karit (El Karib, El Kartit, El Karrit, Oulmès), 291
 El Kef. See Le Kef
 El Kheither. See Le Kreider
 El Ksabi. See Ksabi
 El Meridja. See Méridja
 El Salvador, 167
 Elanet (Yalant'), 692
 El-Aricha (Al-Aricha, Al-Arisha, El-Arisha), 267–268
 Elba Island (Isola d'Elba), 422–423
 Elbasan, 483, 492, 496
 Élesd, 362
- El-Guerrah (El-Guerre), 268
 El-Guettar, 900
 Ellera. See Pietrafitta-Tavernelle
 El-Méridj. See Méridja
 Elna, 108
 El-Oued, 258
 Elsass, 797
 Elvenes, 82
 Embrun, 531–532, 535, 537, 538
 Emilia Romagna, 453, 457, 470
 Emilia Way, 428
 Empeirikeio, 510–512
 En Cimeraux, 181
 Encs, 353
 Enda Medani Alem, 503
 Enfidaville (Enfidha), 895, 899
 Enikioi. See Krústopole
 Enying, 385
 Epirus, 513, 514, 525
 Eraclea, 429
 Erdöbénye, 370
 Erillinen Pataljoona. See Detached Battalion 21
 Eritrea (Italian-occupied), 502–504
 Érmihályfalva (Valea lui Mihai), 362
 Er.P 21. See Detached Battalion 21
 Érsekújvár, 311, 360
 Esen, 351
 Esino River, 423
 Eso Piccolo (Iž Mali), 552
 Espeland, 562
 Esoila. See Jessoila
 Essonne Département, 183
 Este, 477
 Estonia, 80, 179
 Esztergom, 304
 Ethiopia (Italian-occupied), 502–504
 Eure Département, 147, 152, 157, 173, 237
 Eure-et-Loire Département, 152, 237
 Évaux-les-Bains, 139–140
- Fabriano, 420, 423, 458
 Fadd, 365
 Făgăraș, 599, 789
 Fălcui, 571, 669, 782
 Făleşti, 603, 648
 Fallingbostel, 560
 Falstad SS penal camp (SS Strafgefängenenlager), 562, 567
 Fancsika, 361
 Fanlac. See Château du Sablou
 Fara Sabina, 424
 Farfa, 401, 424, 445, 459
 Făurei, 679
 Fedala, 285
 Fejér County, 310, 376
 Feketepatak, 361
 Felnémét, 337
 Feodorovca farm, 731
 Ferdinand, 11, 16–17, 28
 Ferēsti, 814
 Ferizaj. See Uroševac
 Ferma de Stat Suha Balca. See Suha Balca
 Ferramonti di Tarsia, 391, 393, 400, 404, 415, 416, 419, 424–426, 431, 432, 434, 435, 436, 438, 445, 446, 459, 468, 484, 528
- Ferrara, 432
 Fertilia, 426–427
 Fertőszentmiklós, 372
 Fier (Fieri), 479–480, 488, 492, 493
 Fierbinți, 708, 764
 Filești, 679
 Filip farm, 593
 Finistère Département, 132
 Finland, 79–88
 Finnish Lapland, 82, 83
 Finnmark, 562
 Fit-Ber Prison, 504
 Fiume (Rijeka), 302, 410, 411, 427–428, 433, 437, 438, 440, 445, 446, 448, 454, 458, 465, 476, 541, 557
 Flavian, 532
 Florence, 405, 406, 419, 427, 430, 437, 443, 447, 464
 Florești, 574, 710, 768, 783
 Flossenbürg, 321, 409
 Foçşani, 669, 679
 Foçşani-Nămoloasa-Brăila Zone, 574
 Foggia, 403, 420, 440, 467
 Foix, 94
 Folegandros. See Pholegandros
 Foligno, 420
 Foltești, 679
 Fontignano, 447
 Forbidden Zone, Vichy France (zone interdite), 106, 137, 213, 234
 Förgepatony, 337
 Forlì (Forlì-Cesena, Città del Duce, City of Mussolini), 428–429, 519
 Fort-Barraux, 117, 127, 129, 140–141, 226, 236
 Fort Caffarelli (Fort Cafarelli, Djelfa Bedeau), 127, 224, 265, 269–270
 Fort-de-Peigney, 142–143, 181
 Fort de Romainville, 194
 Fort-de-Vancia, 143–144
 Fort du Hâ, 140, 144, 177, 178
 Fort du Portalet, 144–145
 Forte di Mandida, 503
 Fort Montluc, 144
 Fort Ontario, New York, 438
 Fort Sisteron. See Sisteron
 Fort St. Nicolas, 144
 Fort Vittorio Emmanuel, 535, 546
 Forty Barracks (Caserne Forty), 535
 Fossalon, 429–430
 Fossoli (Fossoli di Carpi), 389, 392, 393, 401, 403, 408, 410, 413, 419, 420, 421, 428, 429, 430–431, 439, 444, 447, 451, 456, 459, 461, 472, 474, 477
 Foum-Deflah, 254
 Fqih ben Salh. See Settlat
 France, 250, 251, 253, 262, 266, 392, 448, 457, 463, 555, 842, 844
 France (Italian-occupied), 531–539, 546
 France/Vichy, 89–239. See also Vichy Africa
 Franciscan Sisters of Mary, Mission of the, 186
 Frankfurt an der Oder, 189
 Free Zone, Vichy France, 114, 116, 183
 Freetown, 261, 274, 298
 Fréjus, 94, 145–146
 French Caribbean, 298

- French Guinea (French Guyana), 241, 260, 273, 274, 279, 298, 330
- French Sudan (Mali, Soudain Français), 240, 241, 251, 274, 279, 280, 298
- French West Africa (Afrique occidentale française, AOF), 240, 241, 260, 273, 274, 279, 280, 298
- Friedenthal (Myrnopillya), 615
- Friuli-Venezia Giulia. See Venezia Giulia
- Frontignan, 146
- Frosinone, 438
- Frystak, 104
- Fumone, Mount, 438
- Furnaza, 57
- Fushë Arrëz (Fush Arstit, Fusha Arsit), 480–481, 482, 490, 494, 498, 499
- Füzesabony, 337
- Füzesséry estate, 332
- Gaalkacyo (Rocca Littorio), 504
- Gabès (Qābis), 896, 899
- Gabrovitsa, 28, 30
- Gacko, 545
- Gaeta. See Gulf of Gaeta
- Gaillac, 113, 117, 118, 146–147
- Gaillon, 130, 147–148, 237
- Gaisin, 698
- Galata, 3, 18
- Galați, 614, 620, 656, 669, 679–680, 696, 789, 818, 824
- Galați Jewish Community High School, 679
- Galcinți. See Halcinți
- Galicia, 848
- Gallion, 157
- Gara Belitsa, 8, 37, 38
- Gara Bov, 4, 17–18
- Gara Chepino, 4, 18
- Garany (Hraň), 303, 338–339, 341, 368
- Gara Pirin, 8, 37, 38
- Gara Rupel, 8, 37, 38
- Gara Udovo, 32
- Gard Département, 122, 168
- Gare d'Austerlitz. See Austerlitz train station
- Gassion Castle, 109
- Gaysin, 579
- Gèdre, 136
- Gelle, 337
- Gelsa (Jelsa), 548, 549
- Gelse, 364
- Gelsenkirchen, 351
- Genale. See Janaale
- General Todorov, 8
- General Todorov railway station, 14
- Genete Le'ul Palace, 503
- Geneva, 167, 229, 406, 413, 629, 848
- Génévrey de Vif, 537
- Gennevilliers, 130
- Genoa, 407, 410, 411, 471
- Germaines, 142
- Gërman (Germani, Ghermani, Burrel), 481–484, 486, 487, 490, 491, 494, 495, 496, 498, 499, 540
- Germany, 2, 5, 10, 18, 24, 38, 40, 46, 49, 67, 70, 72, 76, 80, 107, 108, 120, 125, 131, 133, 151, 207, 211, 234, 250, 291, 302, 308, 327, 335, 354, 382, 387, 391, 404, 408, 409, 415, 425, 438, 442, 448, 456, 457, 462, 485, 502, 552, 560, 561, 562, 565, 570, 579, 582, 619, 647, 669, 792, 793, 836, 842, 843, 846, 849, 871, 872, 887, 889, 894, 895
- Gers Département, 116, 122, 123, 124, 164, 177
- Géryville (El Bayadh), 270
- Gesztely, 370
- Gevgeli, 32
- Ghardaïa, 264, 266, 269
- Gharian (Ghuryan), 528, 529
- Gherășeni, 600
- Ghermani. See Gërman
- Ghidighici, 638
- Ghidirim, 599, 747
- Ghindești-Soroca, 601
- Ghiroac, 761
- Ghuryan. See Gharian
- Giado (Jadu), 528–529
- Gibraltar, 289, 413
- Gigen, 3
- Gioia del Colle, 400, 431–432, 435
- Gironde Département, 177, 178
- Giulianova, 445
- Giumiurdzhina. See Komotini
- Giurgeni, 672, 764
- Giurgeni-Urziceni highway, 764
- Gizeau, 160
- Gjakova (Gjakovë), 482, 490
- Gjirokastrë. See Argirocastro
- Glina, 48
- Glück lumberyard, 384
- Gnivan, 826
- Goa, 251
- Gödöllö, 322
- Goga-Cuza, 319
- Golcinți. See Halcinți
- Golikovka. See Äänislinna
- Golta, 576, 579, 581, 588, 589, 591, 592, 604, 606, 609, 610, 611, 612, 614, 638, 641, 642, 658, 660, 661, 670, 680–682, 683, 685, 686, 695, 696, 702, 711, 717, 718, 720, 735, 739, 740, 755, 763, 785, 795, 797, 798, 802, 803, 815, 819, 827, 830
- Golta/LPRS and Labor Camps, 682–683
- Gonars, 416, 427, 432–433, 442, 447, 454, 476, 541, 545, 550
- Gönc, 353
- Gonda Voda, 3, 18–19
- Gönyü, 329
- Gorai (Horai), 683–684
- Gordievca (Gordievka, Hordiivka), 684–685
- Gorica (Nova Gorica), 545
- Gorizia, 415, 429, 442, 449, 450, 458, 460, 476, 477
- Gorizia Hills, 442
- Gorj, 781
- Gorna Dzhumaya (Blagoevgrad), 9, 11, 19, 38, 39
- Gorna Oryahovitsa, 13, 14, 19–20, 42
- Gornja Rijeka, 66, 71, 72
- Gorski Kotar, 541
- Gospic, 48, 54–55, 58, 59, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70
- Gospic/Jadovno, 48, 49, 54, 55–56
- Gospic/Pag Island (Isola da Pago), 54, 55, 57–58, 59, 69, 70
- Gottesman School, 679
- Grabivți (Chervona), 685
- Grado, 429
- Gradovca, 579
- Grammont (Chateau-de-Grammont), 148–149
- Granik, 61
- Gran Sasso Island, 432, 434–435, 436, 461
- Gravosa (Gruž), 545, 546, 548, 554
- Great Britain, 31, 169, 274, 285, 393, 401, 457, 794, 842, 844, 894
- Greater Romania. See Bessarabia; Bukovina; Cadrilater; Dobruja; Romania; Transylvania
- Great Synagogue, 679
- Greece, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 16, 19, 24, 28, 31, 36, 37, 38, 46, 49, 95, 125, 235, 392, 479, 484, 485, 488, 496, 500, 835
- Greece (Italian-occupied), 505–526
- Grenoble, 236
- Grež-en-Bouère (Mauditière, Meslay), 149, 188
- Grigoriopol, 676
- Grinăuți, 648
- Grini, 562, 567
- Grosdovca (Grozdovka, Gvozdočka, Vtoraya), 608, 685–687, 695
- Gross Betschkerek. See Petrovgrad
- Grosseto, 455, 456, 459
- Gross-Rosen, 167, 315, 339, 347, 386, 459
- Grosulovo (Grossolovo, Grosulova, Velyka Mykhailivka), 687–688, 812
- Grubišno Polje, 68
- Gruž. See Gravosa
- Gudovac, 47, 48
- Guenfouda. See Ain Guenfounda
- Guéret, 136
- Guerrah. See El-Guerrah
- Guiche, 198
- Guinea. See French Guinea
- Guir River, 247
- Gulaievca. See Hulievca
- Gulf of Gaeta, 472
- Gulf of Salerno, 412
- Gulianca, 620
- Gunskirchen, 306
- Gura-Humorului, 752
- Gurs, 89, 92, 94, 96, 97n16, 101, 103, 104, 109, 114, 116, 120, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 133, 136, 141, 148, 150–152, 155, 156, 164, 169, 172, 177, 183, 184, 189, 190, 207, 215, 217, 219, 221, 229, 230, 234, 236
- Gusen, 410
- Guyana, 332
- Gvozdirovca (Hvozdvavka Persha), 592
- Gvozdočka. See Vazdočka
- Gvozdočka Vtoraya. See Grosdovca
- Gyergyószentmiklós, 373
- Gyöngyös District, 337
- Győr, 310, 311, 339–340
- Győr-Moson-Pozsony County, 339
- Győrsziget. See Sziget
- Hadjerat M'Guil (Hadjeret et Meguil), 247, 251, 270–272, 276
- Hagymásláros, 358

- Haidari, 508
Hajdú County, 334, 335
Hajdúböszörmény, 304, 311, 335
Hajdúdorog, 311, 335
Hajdúhadház, 311, 335
Hajdúnánás, 311, 335
Hajdúsámson, 335
Hajdúszentgyörgy, 334
Hajdúszoboszló, 311, 335
Halcinți (Halcintz, Galcinți, Golcintți, Shevchenkove), 688–689
Hanko, 80, 82
Hanušovce nad Topľou, 844, 855, 856, 861–862, 874
Harangláb, 318
Harangod plain, 364
Harar, 503
Haricot. See Bou Denib
Háromszék, 309
Hârșova, 764
Hartonen, 87
Haskovo, 11–12, 20–21, 22, 27
Hassloch, 189
Hatvan, 305, 310, 311, 366
Haute-Barde, 160
Haute-Garonne Département, 110, 114, 155, 156, 177, 191, 206, 212, 236
Haute-Loire Département, 219, 220, 234
Haute-Marne Département, 142, 181
Haute-Normandie, 173
Hautes-Alpes. See Basses-Alpes Département
Haute-Saône Département, 148
Haute-Savoie Département, 105, 148, 217, 228, 229, 533, 534
Hautes-Pyrénées Département, 109, 110, 120, 163, 164
Haute-Vienne Département, 115, 122, 124, 125, 128, 133, 138, 159, 177, 189, 209, 221, 224, 226, 230, 231, 233
Hegyshalom, 306, 327, 329
Hegyhát, 366
Heidelberg, 104, 126
Heidenau (Bor subcamp), 320, 321
Hejósaba, 353
Helmos Hotel, 517
Helsinki, 83, 87
Helylä, 22, 82
Heraklion, 521
Hérault Département, 101, 146, 158, 183, 198
Herend, 385
Herminamajor, 332
Hertza (Herța), 570, 758
Herzegovina, 69, 551. See also Bosnia-Herzegovina
Heves, 310, 337
Hiadel', 862
Hidalmás, 348
Hidasnémeti, 353
Hidegség, 306
Hîncești, 734
Hobyaa, 504
Hódmezővásárhely, 304, 311
Hodonín, 858
Holíč, 847
Homorod. See Vlădeni-Homorod/LPRS No. 2
Homs (Al Khums, Khoms), 530
Hôpital Psychiatrique de Lannemezan (Psychiatric Hospital of Lannemezan, HPL), 164
Hôpital Saint-Jean (Saint-Jean Hospital), 198, 218
Hôpital Saint-Louis (Saint-Louis Hospital), 149, 197, 198
Horai. See Gorai
Hordiivka. See Gordievca
Horodkivka. See Miascovca
Horthyliget (Újtelep), 332, 333
Hôtel Atlantique, 174
Hotel Benkovski, 30
Hôtel de Bompard. See Marseille
Hotel des Marquisats. See Marquisats Hotel
Hôtel-Dieu, 216
Hôtel du Tourisme, 120
Hôtel le Terminus du Port. See Marseille
Hôtel Levant, 174
Hôtel Sarthe, 120
Hôtel Szabadság, 383
Hotel Tiranë, 496
Hotin, 601, 629, 636, 650, 676, 677, 715, 745, 758, 759, 774, 820
Hoțului, 593
HPL. See Hôpital Psychiatrique de Lannemezan
Hraň. See Garany
Hrinovca (Hrinivca, Hrinova, Khrenovka), 689–690
Hrvatska Mitrovica (Sremska Mitrovica), 64
Huelgoat, 130
Huittinen, 82
Hulievca (Huliaevovka, Hulyaivka, Gulaievca), 690–691, 777
Humenné, 864
Hunedoara, 654, 655, 656, 761
Hungarian Gendarmerie camps: District I, 307, 311, 368; District II, 307, 310; District III, 307, 311, 359, 372, 385; District IV, 307, 311, 316, 343, 385; District V, 307, 311, 335; District VI, 307, 311, 335; District VII, 307, 310, 311, 337, 353, 374; District VIII, 306, 307, 356, 384; District IX, 306, 307, 309, 319, 348, 357; District X, 306, 307, 309
Hungary, 46, 47, 64, 68, 125, 131, 218, 301–387, 438, 570, 792, 832, 833, 843, 844, 847, 871, 872, 873, 876, 878, 885, 886. See also Austria-Hungary
Huși, 614, 814
Hussein-Dey, 277
Huszt (Chust, Khust), 308, 340–341, 377
Hvar Island. See Lesina Island
Hvozdvavka Druha. See Vazdovca
Hvozdvavka Persha. See Gvozdzioavca
Iabocricior. See Zabocrici
Ialomîța, 620, 672, 707, 764
Iampol (Yampil, Yampol), 569, 595, 618, 651, 691–693, 697, 709, 718, 751, 756, 759, 768, 783, 790, 829
Iarișev (Yarishev), 741, 760, 821
Iaroșinca. See Yaroshenka
Iaruga (Jaruga, Yaruha), 693–695, 756
Iași (Iassy, Yassy), 571, 574, 600, 624, 648, 740, 744, 745, 768, 789, 804, 807, 814, 818
Iasinova (Iașii Noi 1 and 2, Yasenove), 695–696, 702
Iassy. See Iași
Ibrány, 364
Igal, 343
Ignon Forest, 181
Ihtiman, 7, 12, 21–23
Ilava, 844, 859, 860
Ilava/Detention Center (Zaist'ovaci tábor v Ilave, ZTI), 848, 854, 856, 862–864, 880, 889
Ilava/Work Center for Jews, 864–865
Ilava/Work Unit, 865–866
Ile-de-France, 146
Ilfov, 618, 620, 707, 764, 824. See also Călărași
Il'ichevo. See Jalkala
Il'inskiy. See Alavoinen
Ilkamajor, 306
Ille-et-Vilaine Département, 167, 210
Illépuszta, 342, 374
Ilmajoki, 82
Im-Fout (Imfoud, In-Fout, In-Foud), 272–273
Immaculate Conception convent. See Campagna
Immouzer des Marmoucha (Imouzzer), 273
Imperia, 471
Imperia Prison, 531, 532
Impilahti, 82
Independent State of Croatia (Nezavisna Država Hrvatska, NDH). See Croatia
Independența/LPRS No. 16, 620, 656, 696–697
Indre Département, 133
Indre-et-Loire Département, 156, 157, 160, 161, 186
In-Fout. See Im-Fout
Innsbruck, 320, 321
Inotești, 624
Iōannina (Yannena), 514–516
Ionian Islands, 513
Ipoly River (Ipel'), 315
Ipolyság (Šahy), 341–342
Isère Département, 140, 205, 226, 236
Isernia, 433–434
Iskür River, 4, 17
Isla di Mezzo. See Mezzo Island
Island of Rhodes. See Rhodes
Ismail, 613, 614, 615, 784, 785
Isokyrö, 82
Isola da Pago. See Gospić/Pag Island
Isola del Gran Sasso. See Gran Sasso Island
Isola d'Elba. See Elba Island
Isola di Ustica. See Ustica Island
Isolotto Calogero, 468
Isontino, 450
Isonzo River, 429, 449, 477
Israel, 12, 788
Istonio Marina (Vasto Marina), 435–436
Itala, 504
Italian East Africa (Africa Orientale Italiana, AOI), 502–504

- Italy, 30, 46, 50, 58, 69, 92, 105, 131, 151, 250, 302, 335, 389–478, 482, 484, 486–487, 489, 491, 493, 494, 495, 496, 499, 500, 502, 509, 511, 512, 513, 515, 528, 529, 531, 532, 535, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 547, 550, 552, 555, 556, 570, 647, 832, 833, 842, 843, 871; Albania (occupied), 479–501, 832; East Africa (occupied), 502–504; France (occupied), 531–539, 546; Greece (occupied), 505–526; North Africa (occupied), 502, 527–530, 894–897, 898, 899–902; Yugoslavia (occupied), 400, 401–402, 404, 418, 420, 427–428, 432, 454, 485, 540–557
- Itter Castle, 145
- Iuch Bunar, 7, 8, 35, 36
- Ivalo, 82
- Ivangorod, 579
- Ivánka, 857
- Ivánka pri Dunaji, 866–867, 869
- Ivanovka. See Vazdovca
- Ivory Coast. See Côte d'Ivoire
- Ivrea, 401
- Iž Mali. See Eso Piccolo
- Izvorche, 26
- Jablanac, 49, 64
- Jablonica, 867, 869
- Jabocrici. See Zabocrici
- Jacques Cartier prison, 211
- Jadovno. See Gospić/Jadovno
- Jadu. See Giado
- Jageršek. See Zalaegerszeg
- Jalkala (Il'ichevo, Yalkala), 87
- Janaale (Janale, Genale), 504
- Jäniskoski, 82
- Jánoshalma, 315
- Japy Gymnasium, 96
- Jarabá, 867–868
- Jargeau, 106, 142, 152–154, 157, 162, 173, 187, 201, 210
- Jaruga. See Iaruga
- Jasenovac (camp complex), 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53, 55, 59, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76
- Jasenovac I (Krapje), 48, 58–60
- Jasenovac II (Bročice), 48, 58–60
- Jasenovac III (Cigłana), 48–49, 59, 60–62, 63, 76
- Jasenovac IV (Kožara), 48, 59, 62–63
- Jasenovac V (Stara Gradiška), 48–49, 53, 55, 64–65, 66, 68, 70, 72, 74
- Jastrebarsko, 48, 49, 55, 65–67, 74, 75
- Jászberény, 320
- Jászkarajenő, 345
- Jász-Nagykun-Szolnok County, 378
- Jaz Cove, 552
- Jebel ech Chambi, 899
- Jefren (Yefren), 528, 529
- Jegersek. See Zalaegerszeg
- Jelsa. See Gelsa
- Jerada. See Djerrada
- Jerusalem, 144
- Jessoila (Essoila), 82
- Jieť. See Petrošani
- Jigovca (Dzygovka, Dzyhivka), 697–698
- Jijia River, 673
- Jiu-Paroseni. See Lupeni
- Jiu River, 655, 781
- Jougar. See Djougar
- Józsa, 335
- Jugastru (Zhugastru), 575, 577, 659, 687, 691, 692, 697, 711, 712, 777, 782, 800, 801, 802, 811, 828. See also Iampol
- Juigné-des-Moûtiers, 179
- Juks Ferry School, 234, 235
- Junimea School, 745
- Jura, 106
- Juralevca, 775
- Kadarkút, 343
- Kaid El Ayachi. See Sidi El Ayachi
- Kailüka (Kaylaka), 21, 28, 36, 37
- Kakar. See Buccari
- Kál, 337
- Kalamata, 516, 524
- Kalavryta, 516–518, 524
- Kallithéa, 512–513
- Kalocsa, 311, 342
- Kälviä, 82
- Kamenets-Podolsk, 303, 348, 352, 362, 364, 368, 370
- Kampor (Campora). See Arbe
- Kanatchivți. See Conotcăuți
- Kangasjärvi (Kangasjärvi), 87
- Kankan, 241, 260, 261, 273–275, 279, 298
- Kannus, 22
- Kaplaneios, 515
- Kapnikbánya, 358
- Kápolnokmonostor, 358
- Kaposvár, 311, 342–343
- Kapušany, 878
- Kapustyany (Kapustiani). See Capustiani
- Kapuvár, 372
- Karcag, 311
- Karelia. See Soviet Karelia
- Karhumäki (Medvezhyegorsk), 82
- Karkkila, 82
- Karla Lake, 519
- Karlobag, 57
- Karlovac, 49, 68
- Karlovo, 2
- Karnobat, 11, 33
- Kartaika (Kuhnersdorf), 690
- Karvia, 82, 87
- Karyshkiv (Karyshkov). See Carișcov
- Kasbah Tadla (Kasba Tadla), 275–276
- Kaspichan, 14
- Kassa (Kosiče), 304, 306, 308, 310, 339, 343–344, 352, 363, 366, 367, 378, 380
- Kasserine (Al-Qasrayn), 899
- Katelina, 590
- Katō Chōra, 521
- Katouna, 506, 513, 518–519, 525, 526
- Katsmaziv. See Cațmazov
- Katunitsa, 14
- Katyn forest, 20
- Kavajë (Kavaja), 481, 482, 484–486, 487, 489, 491, 496, 497, 498, 540
- Kavala, 19, 38
- Kaylaka. See Kailüka
- Kazanlık, 10
- Kea Island (Tzia Island), 508, 522
- Kecel, 311
- Kecskemét, 305, 311, 318, 344–345
- Kef. See Le Kef
- Kék, 364
- Kékes, 336
- Keleti Railway Station, 328, 329
- Kellomäki, 87
- Kenadsa (Kenadza, Kenadzan), 241, 251, 254, 259, 268, 271, 276–277, 278, 279, 291
- Kenyérmező (Kenyermezo), 310, 373
- Kerch, 615
- Kerecsend, 337
- Kerestinec, 48, 67–68
- Kérkyra. See Corfù
- Kerpape sanatorium, 163
- Kersas (Kersah, Kerzaz, Khersas, Kerras), 247, 277–278, 281
- Keszthely, 345, 386
- Khenchela, 278–279
- Khoms. See Homs
- Khotin, 667
- Khrenovka. See Hrinovca
- Khust. See Huszt
- Kiev, 604, 606, 766, 771, 827
- Kiianovka. See Chianovca
- Kilkis, 524
- Kilometric Point 384 (Point Kilométrique 384, PK 384), 286
- Kindia (Kinda), 241, 279
- Kingdom of Hungary. See Hungary
- Kingdom of Italy. See Italy
- Kingdom of Piedmont-Sardinia, 535
- Kingdom of Romania. See Romania
- Kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. See Yugoslavia
- Kingdom of Yugoslavia. See Yugoslavia
- Kinnasvaara, 81
- Kiostendil, 9, 35
- Királyerdő, 332
- Kirkova, 26
- Kirnasovca, 701
- Kirovograd, 579
- Kirvu, 82
- Kishinev. See Chișinău
- Kiskálló, 364
- Kiskőrös (Kiskörös, Kiskörös), 311, 345
- Kiskunfélegyháza, 311
- Kiskunhalas, 306
- Kiskunlacháza, 331
- KISOK (Budapest), 326–327
- Kispest, 323, 331
- Kistarcsa (Toloncház II), 303, 328, 329, 330, 333, 345–347, 369, 382
- Kisvárdá, 347
- Kitee, 82
- Kiuruvesi, 82
- Kivennapa (Pervomayskoye), 87
- Kjesäter, 566
- Klausenburg. See Kolozsvár
- Klos, 481, 482, 484, 486–488, 498, 540
- Kočevje, 442
- Kodyma (Kodima), 640
- Kodyma River, 592, 695
- Kokkola, 22
- Kolašin, 540
- Kolónia Alžbeta. See Miloslavov
- Kolonjë (Kolonja, Kolonia), 479, 488–489, 492

- Kolosivka. See Colosovca
 Kolosjoki, 82
 Kolosovca, 799
 Kolozsorsa, 348
 Kolozs County, 309, 347, 348
 Kolozsvár (Cluj-Napoca, Klausenburg), 304, 307, 309, 310, 319, 326, 336, 347–348, 678
 Kolvasjärvi (Kolvasozero), 81
 Komanto Piatsa, 510
 Komárom (Komárno), 304, 310, 311, 336, 337, 349–350, 360, 382
 Komotini (Giumiurdzhina), 16
 Komsí, 481
 Konatkivtsi (Konatkovtsy). See Conotcăuți
 Koncetračné stredisko Židov Bratislava-Patrónka. See Bratislava-Patrónka
 Kondas (Kondar), 899, 900
 Konitsa District, 500
 Kopaigorod (Kopaihoroda, Kopaygorod). See Copeigorod
 Koprivnica (Danica), 56, 68–69
 Kopystyryn. See Capusterna
 Korčula Island. See Curzola Island
 Korem–Quoram, 503
 Körmend, 379
 Kőrösmező, 368
 Korosten, 305
 Kosharyntsi. See Coșarínți
 Kosiče. See Kassa
 Kosolovca, 720
 Kosovo, 46, 452, 481, 482, 484, 486, 487, 488, 490, 491, 494, 495, 496, 498, 832
 Kostinbrod, 13
 Kostolná, 868–869, 870, 884
 Kőszeg, 304, 306, 327, 379
 Kotmazov. See Cațmazov
 Kotor Bay, 551
 Kotovsk. See Birzula
 Koulikoro (Koulikorro), 241, 274, 280–281, 298
 Kovačić Hotel, 549
 Kovaliovka (Kovalivka). See Covaliovca
 Koveri (Kovero, Kovera), 82, 87
 Köyliö, 82
 Kožara. See Jasenovac IV
 Kozirca, 590
 Központi, 331
 Kozubivka. See Moldavca
 Kragujevac, 835
 Krakau (Kraków), 849
 Krakau-Plaszów, 352
 Kraków. See Krakau
 Kraljevica. See Porto Re
 Kral'ovany, 869–870, 883, 891
 Krapje. See Jasenovac I
 Krasmenca, 661
 Krasne. See Crasna
 Krasnen'ke (Krasnenchi). See Crasneanca
 Krasnoe. See Crasna
 Krasnoznamenka. See Riihisyriä
 Krasnye Okna, 675
 Kremnička, 849
 Kresna, 38
 Kriniski, 579
 Kristiansand, 562
 Kristiansund, 567
 Kriva Palanka, 32
 Krivorushiko, 719
 Krivoye-Ozero. See Crivoi Ozero
 Krizhopol'. See Crijopol
 Krøkebørsletta, 562
 Kruja (Krujë), 481, 485, 489, 491, 496, 501
 Krupnik, 8
 Kruščica, 48, 49, 55, 69–70, 71
 Kruševac, 835
 Krushynivka (Krushynovka). See Crușinovca
 Krüstopole (Enikioi), 3, 4, 24–25
 Kryve Ozero, 658, 718
 Kryzhopil' (Kryzhopol'). See Crijopol
 Ksabi, 247, 251, 277, 278, 281
 Ksar Boukhari. See Boghari
 Ksar El Abadla. See Abadla
 Ksar El Boukhari. See Boghari
 Kuban, 620
 Kubey. See Cubei
 Kudryavtsivka, 720
 Kuhnersdorf. See Kartaika
 Kukavka. See Cucavca
 Kukës (Kukes), 489–490, 492
 Kukonmäki. See Äänislinna
 Kula, 13n20
 Kulata, 8, 37
 Kumanovo, 32
 Kupa River, 73
 Kupari. See Cupari
 Kurievka, 579
 Kurkijoki, 82
 Kürnare, 30
 Kurtovo Konare, 8, 12, 13n20
 Kurzbach, 350
 Kuzmintsy, 636
 Kuz'myntsi. See Cuzminți
 Kvarner Bay islands, 448
 Kyustendil, 11
 Kyyanivka. See Chianovca
 La Bourboule, 136, 154, 167, 223
 La Brenne Regional Park, 133
 La Castelleta, 446
 La Ciobat, 169
 La Forge Neuve. See Moisdon-la-Rivière
 La Goulette, 895
 La Guette, 154
 La Guiche, 156
 La Lande-à-Monts, 94, 156–158, 161
 La Marne, 283
 La Marsa (Al Marsa), 900
 La Meyze (La Meyse), 158–160, 230
 La Mine, 110
 La Morellerie (Avrillé-lès-Ponceaux), 157, 160–162, 186
 La Pergola, 120
 La Petite Roquette prison. See Paris
 La Plaine du Lac, 122
 La Prairie, 120
 La Roquebrussane, 169
 La Roquette prison, 130
 La Route de Limoges, 178
 La Santé prison, 130
 La Seyne, 122
 La Spezia, 405
 La Tourette, 138
 La Tréfilerie, 116
 La Verrie, 181
 Laatokka Lake. See Ladoga Lake
 Láb, 845, 868, 870
 Labergement-lès-Moloy. See Moloy
 Lacaune-les-Bains, 155, 177
 Laconia, 524
 Ladijin (Ladajin, Ladizin, Ladigeni, Ladyzhin, Ladyzhyn), 626, 634, 635, 698–700, 701, 805
 Ladijin/Stone Quarry (Cariera de Piatră), 699, 700–702, 731, 805, 806
 Ladoga Lake (Laatokka Lake), 81
 Ladyzhin (Ladyzhyn). See Ladijin
 Lagărul de prizonieri de război americani (LPR). See POW camps (Romania)
 Lagărul de Prizonieri de Război Sovietici (LPRS). See POW camps (Romania)
 Lager Kalbert. See Salzgitter
 Laghouat (Nili), 241, 264, 281–282, 900
 Lagos, 298
 Laibach. See Lubiana
 Laihia, 82
 Lakatnik, 4, 17, 18
 Lama dei Peligni, 436
 Lamač, 855
 Lamalou-les-Bains, 158
 Lamartine School, 197
 Lamotte-Beuvron, 162–163
 Lanciano (Sorge Villa), 436–437
 Landau, 592, 642, 652, 653, 719, 777
 Landes Département, 123
 Landshut, 459
 Langeac, 220
 Langenbielau, 315
 Langhe, 407
 Langon, 218
 Langouhède, 202
 Langres, 142
 Languedoc-Roussillon, 101, 174
 Lannemezan, 163–164
 Lapland. See Finnish Lapland
 Láposbánya, 358
 Lappeenranta, 22
 Lăpușna, 601, 637, 648, 677, 734
 Larissa (Larisa), 506, 511, 519–521, 523, 524
 Laruns, 136
 Latina, 472
 Latva, 22
 Laurana (Lovran), 437–438
 Lauria, 438
 Laval, 149
 Lavour, 113
 Lazaretto (Lazaretta) Island, 508, 513–514, 515, 526
 Lazio, 449
 Laznica, 320
 Lazy Trnavy, 878
 Le Barcarès, 148, 164–166
 Le Brébant. See Marseille
 Le Chambon-sur-Lignon, 225
 Le Cheylard, 166–167
 Le Domaine du Pin de la Légue, 145
 Le Fraschette di Alatri (Alatri), 410, 438–439, 452, 471, 552
 Le Kef (Kef, El Kef, Al Kaf), 250, 900
 Le Kreider (El Kheither), 283

- Le Mans, 132, 186, 188
 Le Marche. See Marches
 Le Mont-Dore, 136, 167, 223
 Le Mourtier, 537
 Le Sers, 250
 Le Vernet d'Ariège, 96, 117, 118, 119, 131, 156, 165, 171–173, 183, 212, 226, 265
 Lecce, 412
 Leipzig, 221
 Leningrad (Saint Petersburg), 81, 87
 Lepoglava, 48, 49, 70–71
 Lepsény, 385
 Les Alliers, 167–168
 Les Marquisats. See Marquisats Hotel
 Les Milles, 94, 96, 123, 168–170, 174, 175, 178, 207, 217, 221, 232
 Lesbos, 510
 Lesina Island (Hvar Island), 543, 548–550
 Leskovac, 835
 Lespezi, 782
 Létrástető, 353
 Leucate, 165
 Léva (Levice), 311, 350–351, 385
 Levadeia, 522
 Levanger, 562
 Levice. See Léva
 Lévigny, 234
 Levunovo, 3
 Lhomeau, 149
 Libos, 206
 Libya, 242, 404, 406, 412, 418, 419, 422, 425, 431, 438, 470, 527, 528, 529, 530, 894, 895, 896, 899, 900, 901
 Lichtenfeld, 777, 778
 Light School, 679
 Liguria, 407, 409, 427, 471
 Lika, 54
 Lillestrøm, 567
 Limani, 61
 Limbenii Noi, 603, 710
 Liminka, 82
 Limoges, 124, 128, 140, 157, 189, 190, 221, 231
 Limousin region, 124, 230
 Limoux, 213
 Linas-Monthéry. See Monthléry
 Lipari Island, 69, 418, 437, 439–440, 459
 Lipcani, 650, 759
 Lipníky, 856, 870–871, 878
 Lipovăț, 814
 Liptovský Svätý Peter, 845
 Litheos River, 523
 Lithuania, 179
 Littoria, 451–452, 473
 Liubașevca (Lyubashevka, Lyubashivca, Lyubashivka), 608, 609, 610, 659, 686, 695, 702–703, 815
 Liubopol (Lyubopil), 731
 Livezeni, 781
 Livne, 468
 Livorno, 421, 422, 432
 Ljubljana. See Lubiana
 Lobor, 72
 Lohograd, 48, 49, 53, 55, 69, 70, 71–73, 76
 Łódź, 138
 Lohja, 82
 Loire-Atlantique Département (Loire-Inférieure), 129, 133, 157, 161, 179, 204, 237
 Loir-et-Cher Département, 162–163
 Loiret Département, 111, 135, 142, 152, 153, 163, 173, 198, 200, 201, 237
 Lom, 16, 19, 36, 37
 Lombardy (Lombardia), 441, 463
 London, 298
 Longueau, 130
 Lonja River, 58, 60
 Lonjsko polje, 58, 59
 Lopud Island. See Mezzo Island
 Lorient, 204
 Loriol, 173
 Lorraine, 92, 168
 Losonc, 374
 Lot Département, 119, 205
 Lot-et-Garonne Département, 93, 115, 116, 123, 124, 208, 232
 Lot River, 116, 206
 Louviers, 173–174
 Lovech, 8, 12, 25–27, 39, 40
 Lövö, 372
 Lovran. See Laurana
 Low Tatras mountains, 862
 Lozen, 29, 43
 Lozère Département, 114, 174, 211
 Lozova, 703–704
 Lozovac, 552
 LPRA. See POW camps (Romania)
 LPRs. See POW camps (Romania)
 Lubeník, 880
 Lubiana (Laibach, Ljubljana), 402, 403, 416, 432, 433, 442, 476, 477, 541, 544, 545, 550–551
 Lublin, 152, 847, 874, 879, 889
 Lublin-Maidanek (Majdanek), 145, 155
 Lucca province, 404, 405, 421. See also Bagni di Lucca
 Lucenek, 424
 Luchon, 155
 Lucineț (Lucineți, Luchinets), 704–705
 Ludwigsburg, 73
 Lugo di Ravenna, 428
 Lugo, 571, 705–706
 Lugova (Luhova), 706–707, 810
 Luigi Sbaiz barracks. See Visco
 Lujeni, 759
 Lukovit, 11
 Luncoiu de Jos, 655
 Luncoiu de Sus, 655
 Lupeni (Jiu-Paroseni), 655
 Lusdorf, 730
 Luxembourg, 206
 Luz-Saint-Sauveur, 136
 Lvov, 579, 701, 807
 Lynwood Villa, 531, 532–533, 535
 Lyon, 122, 129, 143, 144, 172, 234, 240, 534
 Lyon region. See Rhône-Alpes region
 Lyubashivca (Lyubashivka). See Liubașevca
 Lyubopil. See Liubopol
 Macallè. See Mek'ele
 Macedonia, 8, 9, 11, 25, 31, 32, 33, 46, 486, 505, 508
 Macerata, 415, 432, 437, 446, 447, 450, 451, 462, 466, 469, 470
 Mád, 353, 370
 Maddalena, 452
 Magdeburg-Rothensee, 365
 Magdolna Street (Budapest camp), 327–328
 Magenta, 268, 283–284, 289
 MágoCs, 371
 Magyarlápós, 336
 Mahdiya, 288
 Mährisch Weisswasser, 316
 Maia, 764
 Maia/LPRS No. 12, 707–708
 Măicânești, 620
 Maine-&-Loire Département, 180, 182, 185, 186, 188, 202, 222
 Maiovca (Moivka), 692
 Maison-Carrée, 277
 Maitova, 579
 Majdanek. See Lublin-Maidanek, 145
 Majestic Hotel, 94, 346
 Mak'at'awa (Mek'er'ewa), 504
 Makkosjánosi, 318
 Maklár train station, 338
 Makó, 311
 Maktiwa, 504
 Malavieille, 174
 Mali. See French Sudan
 Malina Stream, 870
 Malines. See Mecheln
 Malko Bŭlovo (Malko Belovo), 13
 Malquière, 155
 Malta, 289, 413
 Mamou, 274
 Mamula Island, 551–552
 Manarov/Mândrova, 797
 Manastir, 483
 Manche Département, 110, 186
 Mândrov, 731
 Manfredonia, 417, 420, 440–441
 Manfréd Weiss Works (camp), 332, 333
 Mangalia, 823
 Mannheim (Mannheim), 731, 797
 Manicovca (Man'kivka, Man'kovca), 707, 709–710
 Mânjești, 814
 Man'kivka (Man'kovca). See Manicovca
 Mannheim. See Mannheim
 Manosque, 210
 Mans, 132
 Mantova, 441
 Mantua, 441–442, 462
 Máramaros County, 317, 351, 377, 380
 Máramarossziget (Sighet, Sighetul Marmateiei), 317, 351–352
 Mărășești, 624
 Marassi, 411
 Marcali, 304
 Marceau, 137
 Marcenat, 128
 Marcerata, 462
 Marches (Le Marche), 423
 Marcia Beach (Marcia Plage), 896, 900
 Marco Foscarini Boarding School, 472
 Mărculești, 603, 632, 651, 707, 710–711, 747, 751, 774

- Marghita. See Margitta
 Margit Boulevard (Budapest), 328
 Margit Bridge, 329
 Margitta (Marghita), 362
 Margueritte camp. See Rennes
 Marianka (Mariatal), 871
 Marienheim monastery, 792
 Marikostino (Marikostinovo), 8, 37, 38
 Marinovca (Mar'yanivka), 690
 Markivka River, 711
 Marne Département, 235
 Maros-Torda County (Mureş district), 309, 352, 373
 Marosvásárhely (Târgu Mureş), 307, 309, 352
 Marquisats Hotel, 105
 Marrakech, 247, 250, 284, 292
 Marseille, 104, 129, 144, 145, 168, 172, 179, 210, 221, 240, 248, 249, 262; Hôtel de Bompard, 94, 169, 174–175, 211; Hôtel le Terminus de Port, 94, 169, 174, 175–176; Le Brébant, 176
 Marvejols, 174
 Mar'yanivka. See Marinovca
 Marzocco, 460
 Mascara, 259
 Mas-des-Près. See Reillanne
 Massawa (Massaua), 503
 Masseria Gigante, 401
 Masseurbe, 104, 116, 124, 177
 Mat District (Rrethi i Matit), 481
 Mátéfalva, 361
 Matera, 390, 415, 416, 420, 448, 449
 Mateuți, 749, 750
 Matievka, 579
 Matkaselkä, 82
 Mat River, 486
 Matrüh, 527
 Mauditière. See Grez-en-Bouère
 Mauriac, 219, 220
 Mauritanie (Mauritania), 240
 Mauthausen, 74, 108, 168, 210, 306, 327, 345, 349, 366, 410, 435, 515
 Mauthner, 332, 333
 Max Nordau Cultural Society, 679
 Mayenne Département, 149, 180, 187–188
 Mazzi Villa. See Civitella della Chiana
 Mecheln (Malines), 91, 184, 230
 Mecheria (Méchéria), 249, 263, 266, 283, 284–285
 Medea, 250
 Mediouna, 285
 Mediouna/GTE-14539, 285
 Mediterranean-Niger railway (Mer-Niger railway, Trans-Saharan Railroad), 241, 242, 247, 248, 251, 259, 260, 271, 276, 280, 286, 287, 297
 Mediterranean Sea and coast, 131, 165, 218, 258
 Medjidia, 620
 Međustrugove, 64
 Medvezhyegorsk. See Karhumäki
 Medzianky, 878
 Mees, 169
 Megeš, 878
 Megève, 533–534, 537
 Mehedinți, 761, 808
 Mek'ele (Macallè), 504
 Mek'er'ewa. See Mak'at'awa
 Mekkès, 256, 293. See also Bou Denib
 Melada (Molat), 404, 426, 439, 459, 468, 552–553, 557
 Menabba (Menabha), 259, 285–286, 296. See also Talzaza Menabba
 Mende, 211
 Mendefera, 503
 Mendida, 503
 Mengoub, 259, 286–287, 296
 Menton (Mentone), 532, 534–535
 Meran, 430
 Mereni, 571, 738
 Méridja (El-Méridj), 268, 287
 Mérignac, 157, 177–178
 Méron. See Montreuil-Bellay
 Meslay. See Grez-en-Bouère
 Mesologgi, 515
 Mestre, 472
 Metajna, 57, 69
 Metohija, 46, 487, 490, 832
 Metsäkylä (Molodezhnoye), 87
 Meurthe-et-Moselle Département, 137, 237
 Mexico, 101, 118, 265, 287, 293
 Mezöcsát, 353
 Mezökeresztes, 353
 Mezökövesd, 353
 Mezöszila, 385
 Mezzo Island (Isola di Mezzo, Lopud Island), 545, 548, 553–554
 Miascovca (Miastrkovka, Mişcovca, Horodkivka), 711–713
 Middle Atlas Mountains, 273
 Middle East, 509
 Midi-Pyrénées region, 109, 110, 113, 121, 182, 207, 212
 Miehkikälä, 81
 Mihäileni, 673
 Mihailovca (Mykhailivka), 713
 Mikepéres, 335
 Mikre, 13, 25, 26
 Mila, 297
 Milan, 404, 405, 406, 408, 411, 418, 430, 432, 435, 441, 465, 470, 473, 474, 518, 552, 895
 Milcov Valley, 817
 Milles. See Les Milles
 Milna (Milona), 543
 Milos, 522
 Miloslavov (Kolónia Alžbeta, Alžbetín dvor), 844, 871–873, 885, 886
 Minimes Barracks, 95
 Mirabel, 101
 Miramas, 178–179
 Mirceşti, 624
 Mirti House. See Tossicia
 Mişcovca. See Miascovca
 Miskolc, 304, 307, 310, 311, 352–353
 Missour (Misur), 287–288
 Misztófalú, 358
 Mitki (Mitkii, Mitchi, Mytki, Mytky), 610, 713–715
 Mitrovica (Mitroviza), 496
 Mittelbau-Dora, 238
 Mlaka, 49, 64, 74, 75
 Modane, 531, 532, 535–536, 537, 546
 Modena, 392, 401, 408, 420, 430, 431, 453
 Mogadishu, 504
 Mogador. See Tamaranar
 Moggio. See Mojo
 Moghilev, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 592, 596, 618, 625, 628, 630, 635n5, 636, 643, 644, 650, 651, 657, 659, 663, 664, 665, 666, 674, 683, 685, 688, 689, 693, 703, 704, 713, 714, 715, 716, 721, 722, 723, 725, 731, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 745, 746, 752, 756, 757, 760, 766, 768, 770, 771, 772, 774, 797, 798, 799, 800, 803, 804, 807, 821, 822, 825, 826
 Moghilev-Podolsk, 592, 618, 629, 636, 657, 663, 664, 674, 694, 699, 703, 713, 715–717, 721, 723, 745, 752, 758, 759, 760, 770, 774, 783, 795, 820, 821, 822
 Mohács, 304, 353–354, 366, 367, 387
 Mohamedia, 900–901
 Mohyliv-Podil's'kyi. See Moghilev-Podolsk
 Moico, 504
 Moisson-la-Rivière (La Forge Neuve, “The New Forge”), 130, 133, 179–181, 188, 204, 210, 237
 Moivka. See Maiovca
 Mojo (Moggio), 504
 Molat. See Melada
 Moldava, 656
 Moldavca (Moldavka, Kozubivka), 658, 717–718
 Moldavia, 571, 624, 668, 674, 781, 782, 789, 814, 827
 Moldova, Republic of, 571, 574, 600, 602, 622, 623, 627, 628, 637, 648, 651, 676, 710, 735, 747, 748, 767, 783, 786, 795
 Molise, 399, 433
 Moll, 259
 Molocnea (Molochina, Moloknia), 579, 718–719
 Molodezhnoye. See Metsäkylä
 Moloknia. See Molocnea
 Moloy (Labergement-lès-Moloy), 106, 181
 Momina Klisura, 28, 29, 30
 Monfort Center. See Montmélian
 Monigo, 416, 433, 442–443, 447, 476, 541, 543
 Monod (Oued Monod, Sidi Allal el Bahraoui), 288
 Monok, 353
 “Monopol” tobacco warehouse. See Skopie
 Monor, 312, 323, 354–355, 368
 Monostori Fortress, 349, 360
 Mons, 124, 190
 Monsempron, 206
 Monsireigne, 181–182
 Montalbano (Rovezzano), 443
 Montana. See Ferdinand
 Montauban, 182
 Montech, 182
 Montechiarugolo, 417, 443–444, 457, 458, 459
 Monteforte Irpino, 420, 444
 Montélimar, 101, 173, 183
 Montenegro, 47, 108, 452, 464, 482, 484, 485, 486, 490, 491, 494, 495, 496, 498, 500, 540, 551, 552, 832
 Montgivray, 133
 Monticelli Terme, 444

- Montignac, 127
 Montigny-le-Roi, 142, 143
 Montlhéry (Linás-Montlhéry), 133,
 183–184, 188
 Montluçon, 94
 Montmélian (Monfort Center), 184–185
 Montpellier, 141, 158, 198, 218
 Montréal cemetery, 113
 Montreuil-Bellay (Maine-&-Loire, Méron),
 91, 110, 133, 160, 161, 180, 182, 184,
 185–187, 188, 202, 203, 210, 217, 222
 Monts. See La Lande-à-Monts
 Montsûrs (Chauvinerie camp), 149,
 187–188
 Mont-Valérien, 135
 Morand. See Boghari
 Morava River, 891
 Moravia, 842, 846, 860
 Morbihan Département, 163, 179, 204
 Morocco, 240, 241, 242, 247, 248, 249, 250,
 251, 254, 255, 256, 257, 259, 261, 262, 264,
 267, 268, 269, 271, 272, 273, 275, 276, 277,
 278, 279, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287,
 288, 289, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296,
 297, 298, 894
 Morsciano, 447
 Mortagne-sur-Sèvre, 182
 Moscow, 18, 67, 80
 Moselle, 157
 Moskovits brickworks, 384
 Moşniţa Nouă, 792
 Mosonmagyaróvár, 329
 Mosonszentmiklós, 306
 Mosonyi Street, Budapest (Toloncház I & II),
 328–329
 Mostar, 459, 547
 Most na Ostrove (Most pri Bratislave), 873, 878
 Mostovoi (Mostove, Mostovoie, Mostovoy), 579, 594, 614, 642, 643, 690, 719–721,
 777, 778, 813, 821
 Motohija, 482
 Mottino barracks. See Aosta
 Moulay Bouazza (Moulay Bou Azza).
 See Bou Azzer; Oued Zem and Moulay
 Bouazza
 Moulouya River, 287
 Mount Fumone, 438
 Movila Aviatiei, 603
 Muć, 556
 Mühlendorf, 366
 Mukačevo (Mukachevo). See Munkács
 Mulsanne, 133, 180, 184, 186, 188–189, 202
 München, 320
 Munich, 425, 842
 Munkács (Mukačevo, Mukachevo), 307,
 308, 355–357 362
 Muolaa, 22
 Muqdisho, 504
 Murafa, 577, 625, 721–723
 Murafa River, 633, 721, 770
 Muraköz, 359
 Muránska Dlhá Lúka, 880
 Murashka River, 629
 Mureş district. See Maros-Torda County
 Mureş River, 761
 Murmansk, 562
 Mussolini, City of. See Forlì
 Mustasaari, 82
 Mustio, 82
 Myjava, 854
 Mykhailivka. See Mihailovca
 Mykolaiv, 615
 Mykolaiivs'ka, 643
 Myrnopollya. See Friedenthal
 Mysen, 562
 Mytki (Mytky). See Mitki
 Mýto pod Dumbierom, 867
 Myzeqe Plains, 479, 488
 Naâma, 284
 Nádasment, 348
 Nafplio, 505, 518, 520
 Nagyatád, 343
 Nagybjajom, 343
 Nagybánya (Baia-Mare), 304, 309,
 357–358
 Nagybátony-Újlaki Brickyards. See Újlaki
 Brickyards
 Nagycenk, 306
 Nagydemeter, 319
 Nagyilonda, 336
 Nagykálló, 364
 Nagykanizsa, 303, 311, 358–360, 382
 Nagykáta, 311
 Nagykörös, 345
 Nagymegyer, 337
 Nagysikárló, 358
 Nagysomkút, 358
 Nagysurány (Šurany), 360
 Nagyszöllős (Nagyszőlös, Seleuşu Mare, Sevluş, Szelis, Vinohradov, Vynohradiv),
 308, 360–362
 Nagyvárad, 309, 310, 311, 362–364
 Nagyvázsony, 385
 Nailat, 189
 Nail Loschwitz, 189
 Nalchik College of Medicine, 662
 Nancy, 137, 264
 Nantes, 130, 179, 180, 186
 Naples, 400, 424, 438, 462, 472, 511
 Napoléon Barracks, 95
 Narvik, 567
 Naszód, 319
 Natzweiler (Struthof), 92
 Nay, 189
 NDH. See Croatia
 Nedelino (Nedüolino), 4, 27
 Nefasilk, 503
 Nefasit, 503
 Negreşti, 814
 Nemecká, 849
 Nemerci (Nemerche, Nemerti), 723–724
 Nemesabony, 337
 Nemesbük, 345
 Nemeskér, 372
 Nemirov, 579
 Nemiya River, 741, 772
 Nemours, 293
 Nepolocăuţi (Nepolokivtsi), 820
 Néresi. See Nerezisce
 Nereto, 445–446, 465
 Nerezisce (Néresi), 543
 Nestervarca (Nestervarka), 724–726,
 799, 806
 Nestore River, 447
 Nestorio Kastorias, 509
 Netherlands, the, 31, 109, 151, 206, 218, 457, 531
 Neuengamme, 238, 349, 532
 Neustadt, 350
 Neustadt an der Waag. See Nové Mesto nad
 Váhom
 Neuvéglise, 128
 Neuvic-d'Ussel, 182
 Neu Zuczka (Neyzuchka), 786
 New York, 438
 Nexon, 122, 125, 127, 133, 139, 177,
 189–191, 206, 207, 209, 221, 226, 230,
 232, 233, 237, 253
 Neyzuchka. See Neu Zuczka
 Nezavisna Država Hrvatska. See Croatia
 Nice (Nizza), 92, 408, 531, 532, 533, 535,
 536, 537, 538
 Nicolaev (Nikolayev, Mykolaiv), 598, 615,
 640, 645, 650, 716, 722, 723, 726, 743,
 798, 799, 804, 807
 Nièvre, 222
 Nigeria, 298
 Niger River, 260, 273, 280
 Nikolaev, 652
 Nili. See Laghouat
 Niš, 320, 833, 835
 Nisko, 887
 Nitra, 856, 857, 864, 871, 885, 886
 Nižný Hrabovec, 844, 861, 874
 Nizza. See Nice
 Nocra, 502, 503
 Noé, 96, 102, 114, 123, 156, 191–194, 206, 207, 208, 209, 226
 Nógrád County, 310, 315, 374
 Nogyszalonta (Salonta), 362
 Nord, 91
 Normandy, 162, 184
 North Africa, 30, 92, 101, 144, 171, 176, 411,
 413, 430, 502, 527, 528, 529, 531, 532, 533,
 535, 537, 538. See also Algeria; Morocco;
 Tunisia; Vichy Africa
 North Africa (Italian-occupied), 502,
 527–530, 894–897, 898, 899–902
 “Northern” camp. See Äänislinna
 Northern Transylvania, 302, 304, 306, 307,
 308, 309–310, 319, 335, 348, 349, 351, 352,
 357, 358, 362, 373, 377, 570
 Norway, 74, 80, 82, 559–567
 Noschiveţ (Noskivtsi, Zatiş'e, Zatişcea, Zatişa), 771
 Notaresco (Notoresco), 415, 434, 446
 Notre-Dame des Prés. See Reillanne
 Noua-Suliţă, 650
 Nová Baňa, 887
 Nova Gorica. See Gorica
 Nováky, 841, 846, 847, 862, 864, 867, 870,
 874–877, 879, 881, 882, 887, 888, 889
 Novaya Uman, 579
 Nové Mesto nad Váhom (Neustadt an der Waag), 877–878
 Nové Zámky, 360
 Novi Sad. See Újvidék
 Novi Sisak, 74

- Novi Vinidolski, 554
 Novo Mesto, 442
 Novo Obodovca, 726
 Nuove prison, 408
 Nuremberg, 356
 Nyiracsád, 364
 Nyirbátor, 364
 Nyirbogat, 364
 Nyíregyháza and Varjúlapos, 308, 364–365
 Nyírjes, 364
 Nyírjespuszta, 315
- Oancea, 574
 Oasis Territory of Quargla. See Quargla
 Obbia–Hobyaa, 504
 Obilești, 620
 Obilicev Venac, 833
 Obodovca (Obodovka, Obodivka), 598, 610, 616, 617, 621, 635, 651, 662, 701, 707, 714, 718, 719, 726–728, 754, 787, 790, 791
 Óbuda (Budapest), 329–330
 Occupied Zone, Vichy France (Zone occupée, ZO), 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 102, 116, 124, 135, 147, 156, 157, 167, 193, 202, 230, 233
 Oceacov, 575, 579, 581, 589, 590, 604, 606, 650, 726, 753, 762
 Ochacov (Ochakov), 652–653, 728, 730, 740, 803
 Očová, 873, 878
 Odaia, 797
 Ödenburg. See Sopron
 Odessa, 575, 576, 579, 589, 590, 592, 593, 594, 604, 606, 608, 612, 613, 615, 640, 641, 642, 670, 681, 690, 695, 716, 719, 728–729, 739, 763, 766, 771, 775, 777, 795, 797, 811, 813, 818, 821, 827
 Odessa/Internment and Labor Camps, 730
 Odessa/LPRS, 730–731, 797
 Odorhei, 371
 Odžaki, 381
 Oești (Oiești), 575, 583, 646, 647
 Oestringen, 104
 Oiești. See Oești
 Olaszliszka, 370
 Oleanița (Olianița, Olyanitsa), 701, 731–732
 Oleksandrivka. See Alexandrovca
 Oleksandrodar. See Alexandrodar
 Oleksiivka, 771
 Olevan Hotel, 549
 Olgopol (Oligopol, Ol'hopil'), 575, 732–734, 811
 Olianița. See Oleanița
 Oligopol. See Olgopol
 Oliveto Villa. See Civitella della Chiana
 Olonets. See Aunus
 Oloron, 189
 Olt, 627
 Oltenia, 622
 Olviopol, 680
 Olyanitsa. See Oleanița
 Olympic Theater (Teatro Olimpico), 464, 474
 Olynek River, 693
 Omiš, 543
 Onega Lake (Ääninen Lake), 81, 87
 Onești-Noi (Onești), 575, 734–735
- Onga-Muksa. See Onkamus
 Oniscova (Onyskove), 658
 Onkamus (Onga-Muksa), 87
 Onyskove. See Oniscova
 Oradea, 362
 Óradna, 319
 Oraison, 129, 225–226
 Oran, 240, 258, 262, 267, 268, 297. See also Southern Oran
 Oranienburg, 48
 Orava River, 869, 884
 Oresh, 13n14
 Orhei, 638, 735–737, 748, 749
 Orimattila, 82
 Orivesi, 82
 Orléans, 152, 153, 178, 198, 199, 237
 Orléansville, 257
 Osievca (Osiivka, Osifca), 737–738
 Osijek, 53, 76
 Osimo, 458, 460
 Oslo, 562, 565, 567
 Osmancea and Cobadin, 571, 738–739
 Østfold, 562
 Ostmark. See Austria
 Ostrava, 887
 Oswego, 438
 Otaci. See Atachi
 Ouargla. See Quargla
 Oued Akreuch (Oued Akrach), 283, 288–289
 Oued-Djerch (Oued-Djer, Pont de l'Oued Djer), 285, 289
 Oued Monod. See Monod
 Oued Zem and Moulay Bouazza, 254, 275, 284, 289–290, 294
 Oued Zeni. See Oued-Zenati-Bone
 Oued-Zenati-Bone, 268, 290
 Oujda, 255, 267
 Oulmès. See El Karit
 Oulu, 82
 Oum Rabia River (Oum er Rbia River), 272, 294
 Ountal Mountain, 284
 Ovidiopol, 575, 591, 681, 731, 739–740, 797, 818
 Oyonnax, 139
 Ozariñi (Ozarineț, Ozarenți, Ozarineti, Ozaryntsi, Ozarintsy), 740–742, 756, 821
 Ózd, 353
- Paavola, 82
 Padova, 454, 477
 Padua. See Chiesanuova
 Paget, 145
 Pag Island. See Gospić/Pag Island
 Paks, 311, 365
 Palaca Hotel, 549
 Palace District (Palotanegyed), 330
 Paladia, 601
 Palatinate (Saarpfalz), 151, 177
 Pale, 69
 Palestine, 2, 229, 242, 405, 425, 529, 580, 793, 887
 Palmanova, 476, 477
 Palotanegyed. See Palace District
 Pâncota, 761
- Panicale, 447
 Pannonian Plain, 383
 Pápa, 304, 311, 365–366
 Paráđ, 369, 372
 Paraguay, 169, 447
 Paramythia, 516
 Paris, 50, 92, 94, 95–96, 128, 129, 130, 133, 134, 135, 151, 157, 183, 184, 199, 201, 211, 216, 226, 233, 240, 439, 534, 896; La Petite Roquette, 130, 194–195, 211; Tourelles, 194, 195–197
 Pârlita-Bălți, 601
 Pârliți Târg, 648
 Parma, 400, 443, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460
 Parschnitz, 339
 Pasațeli II, 791
 Pașcani, 807
 Pas-de-Calais Département, 91, 234, 235
 Patra, 510, 516
 Patrónka. See Bratislava-Patrónka
 Pau, 94, 140, 144, 155
 Pauliș, 761
 Pavlikeni, 20
 Pavlos Melas, 506, 508, 516
 Pavlovca, 797
 Pays de la Loire region, 185, 188, 203
 Pazardzhik, 13, 14, 27–28, 30, 42, 43
 Pearl Harbor, 144
 Pec (Peć, Peč). See Pejė
 Pechora (Pechera). See Pecioara
 Peciara. See Pecioara
 Pećin. See Peqin
 Pecioara (Pechora, Pechera, Peciara, Peciora), 579, 626, 684, 694, 699, 714, 715, 725, 742–744, 805, 807
 Pécs, 304, 307, 311, 354, 366–367
 Pécsvárad, 366
 Peigney, 106. See also Fort-de-Peigney
 Pejė (Pec, Peć, Peč), 481, 482, 488, 490–492, 493, 496, 498, 499
 Peloponnese region, 505, 516, 520, 524
 Pennabilli, 463
 Penne-d'Agonais, 124
 Peqin (Pećin), 479, 488, 490, 492–494, 496
 Peräseinäjoki, 82
 Perelety, 598
 Perevalochnaya. See Äänislinna
 Périgueux, 125, 126, 128
 Perlak, 311, 359
 Pero, 87
 Perpignan, 131, 164, 197–198, 214, 215, 218
 Perșani, 823
 Perugia, 403, 447, 448
 Pervomais'k (Pervomaysk). See Golta
 Pervomayskoye. See Kivennapa
 Pesaro, 432
 Pescara, 417, 420
 Peschanaia, 607
 Peschanka (Pishchanka), 640
 Peshtera, 29
 Pessac, 178
 Pest, 323, 324, 325
 Pest County jail, 346
 Pesterzsébet, 323
 Pest-Pilis-Solt-Kiskun County, 306, 322, 323, 331, 342, 344, 345, 354, 368
 Pestszenterzsébet, 311, 367–368

- Pétervásári, 304, 337
 Petič, 844, 861, 870, 878
 Petra Olympou Sanitarium, 506
 Petriolo, 446–447, 462, 467, 470
 Petrivs'ke. See Petrovschi
 Petrošani (Jiet), 655
 Petroverovca, 593
 Petrovgrad (Gross Betschkerek, Zrenjanin), 833
 Petrovschi (Petrivs'ke), 591, 818, 819
 Petrozavodsk. See Äänislinna
 Philippeville, 242
 Pholegandros (Folegandros), 521–522
 Piacenza, 453
 Pianello, 423
 Piano, 457
 Pianura di Akaki, 503
 Piedmont, 402, 408. See also Kingdom of Piedmont-Sardinia
 Piegaro, 447
 Piemonte, 407
 Pierre-Buffière, 127
 Pierrefort, 128
 Pierre-Lévée, 216
 Pierre Levée prison, 203
 Pietrafitta-Tavernelle (Ellera, Castello Sereni, Sereni Castle), 433, 442, 447–448
 Pigny, camp of. See Bram
 Piliscsaba, 329
 Pinerolo, 519, 520
 Piraeus, 507, 509, 520
 Pirot, 19, 40
 Pirvomaik, 609
 Pisa, 404, 470
 Pisarevo, 19
 Pishchanka. See Peschanka
 Pisticci, 390, 415, 416, 420, 429, 448–449, 468
 Pitești, 661
 Pithiviers, 92, 96, 111, 130, 135, 153, 163, 198–200, 216, 237
 Pithiviers (CSS), 200–202, 216, 237
 Piuia Pietrii, 764
 PK. See Point Kilométrique 384
 Plav (Pllavë), 490, 496
 Plavecký Svätý Mikuláš, 867
 Plénée-Jugon, 188, 202
 Ples Hotel, 877
 Pleven, 8, 11, 12, 19, 25, 26, 28, 30, 36, 37, 39, 42
 Pllavë. See Plav
 Ploemeur, 163
 Ploiești (Ploesti), 30, 571, 574, 618, 619, 620, 789, 793, 794
 Plosca, 759
 Plovdiv, 2, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 18, 22, 24, 27, 28–30, 35, 37, 42
 Pod Gerlachom, 878
 Podgorica, 540
 Podilsk. See Birzula
 Podoleanca, 579
 Podravska Slatina, 76
 Podul Iloaiei, 744–745
 Poggio Nativo, 424
 Poggio Terza Armata (Third Army Hill, Sdraussina, Zdravščina), 415, 429, 449–450
 Point Kilométrique 384. See Kilometric Point 384
 Poissy prison, 130
 Poitevin, 203
 Poitiers (Route de Limoges), 112, 157, 162, 163, 178, 182, 202–204, 216
 Poitiers-La Rochelle railway, 215
 Poland, 23, 25, 26, 31, 34, 36, 38, 40, 94, 109, 120, 125, 131, 135, 145, 151, 206, 207, 217, 218, 233, 251, 302, 338, 370, 382, 425, 438, 443, 474, 485, 565, 567, 570, 579, 634, 720, 846, 848, 855, 872, 873, 874, 879, 881, 886, 887, 889
 Polgar, 364
 Poličnik, 57
 Pollenza (Villa Lauri, Villa Laura), 437, 447, 450–451, 462, 469, 470
 Pomáz, 323
 Ponente Ligure, 407
 Ponomia farm, 730
 Pont de l'Oued Djer. See Oued-Djerch
 Pontavenaux, 217, 230
 Pontcharra, 236
 Ponte a Ema, 406
 Pontedera, 421
 Pontine Archipelago, 451
 Pontivy (Toulboubou), 204–205
 Pons-et-Chaussees, 113
 Ponzá, 418, 451–453, 455, 471, 473, 494, 495, 499
 Popivți (Popivët, Popivtsi), 745–746
 Popovo, 31
 Popovți. See Popivți
 Poprad, 847, 854, 868, 869, 878–880
 Pori, 82
 Portalet. See Fort du Portalet
 Portet-Saint-Simon train station, 208
 Portoferraio, 422
 Porto Re (Kraljevica), 541, 544, 554–556
 Port-Vendres, 127, 205
 Poruchik Minkov, 8, 37, 38
 Poruchik Minkov railway station, 14
 Postire (Postira), 543
 Postumiese, 450
 Potenza, 432, 438
 POW camps (Africa), 502, 503–504
 POW camps (Albania), 479, 481, 482, 486, 488, 490, 493, 494, 498
 POW camps (Finland), 81–82
 POW camps (Greece), 519, 524
 POW camps (Hungary), 359, 369
 POW camps (Italy), 392, 405, 421, 422, 427, 428, 430, 431, 432, 435, 438–439, 461, 462, 469
 POW camps (Norway), 562
 POW camps (Romania), 574–575, 583, 600–602, 615–616, 618–619, 620–621, 646–648, 654–656, 668, 671–673, 682–683, 696–697, 707–708, 713, 730–731, 764–766, 783–784, 793–795, 797–798, 814–815, 823–824
 POW camps (Serbia), 839–840
 POW camps (Soviet Union), 305, 362
 POW camps (Vichy Africa), 270, 273, 279, 280, 292, 298
 POW camps (Vichy France), 92, 129, 134, 152, 172, 182, 185, 188, 203, 215, 237
 POW camps (Yugoslavia), 427
 Požega. See Slavonska Požega
 Pozrom County, 360
 Prahova, 571, 620, 789
 Predappio, 428
 Prémol, 205
 Presheno, 32
 Prešov, 844, 849, 855, 864, 874
 Prešov–Strážske railway, 878
 Prešov-Vranov nad Topľou railway, 870
 Preveza, 515
 Prevlaka, 476, 551–552
 Prezë (Preza), 452, 481, 482, 484, 486, 491, 494–495, 496, 498, 499
 Prievidza, 868
 Prignano sulla Secchia, 453–454
 Princess of Piedmont School, 417
 Pringy, 148, 149
 Prishtinë. See Priština prisoner of war camps. See POW camps
 Priština (Prishtinë), 479, 482, 488, 490, 491, 492, 493, 495–498
 Privas, 122, 166
 Prizren, 479, 488, 490, 491, 492, 493, 499
 Prügy, 364
 Prut River, 571, 600, 622, 627, 631, 673, 705, 785, 808, 809, 820
 Psychiatric Hospital of Lannemezan. See Hôpital Psychiatrique de Lannemezan Puglia, 440, 467
 Puhtola, 87
 Pukë (Puk, Puke, Puka), 452, 471, 481, 482, 484, 486, 490, 494, 498–500
 Punainen kylä. See Äänislinna
 Purcari-Iasca, 613, 785
 Püspökladány, 304
 Puztavám, 306
 Putila, 759
 Putna (Vrancea), 76, 648, 668, 679, 762
 Putnok, 353
 Puy-de-Dôme Département, 124, 136, 154, 167, 223
 Puy-l'Évêque, 119, 205–206
 Pyhäniemi, 81
 Pyrenees Mountains, 93, 120, 150
 Pyrénées-Atlantique Département, 101, 109, 124, 125, 133, 136, 144, 148, 150, 167, 177, 189, 198, 223
 Pyrénées-Orientales Département, 96, 107, 123, 131, 148, 164, 174, 183, 197, 205, 213, 214, 218
 Pyrgaki, 517
 Pyrgos, 516
 Qābis. See Gabès
 Quargla (Ouargla, Wargla), 250, 278, 291–292
 Queen Elisabeth Military Hospital (Spitalul Militar Regina Elisabeta), 619
 Quercy, 121
 Rab Island. See Arbe
 Rabat, 242, 259, 272, 276, 285, 286, 288, 289, 296
 Rabès, 206–207
 Râbnîța (Rybnitsa), 575, 608, 610, 686, 747–748, 749, 750, 768, 797, 812

- Ráckeve, 331
 Rădăuți, 571, 608, 622, 651, 671, 672, 677, 710, 715, 758, 810, 817, 820
 Rădăuți-Prut, 673
 Radauts, 667
 Radomir, 9, 29, 36
 Ragusa, 463
 Rahnei (Rakhny), 743
 Räsälä, 82
 Rakamaz, 364
 Rakhny. See Rahnei
 Rákoscaba, 311, 346
 Rákospalota, 311
 Ram Ram, 292–293
 Râmanicu-Sărat, 571
 Râmniceni, 620
 Râmnicu Sărat, 620
 Râs el Ma. See Bedeau
 Rastadt, 579, 642, 719, 720, 775
 Rastislavice. See Degeš
 Ratnički dom, 833
 Raudaskylä, 22
 Răuț River, 600, 602, 710, 736
 Rautalampi, 82
 Rauțel. See Bălți/Rauțel
 Ravenna, 428
 Ravensbrück, 211, 238, 315, 350, 562, 849
 Rebrovo, 4, 17
 Récébédou, 96, 114, 123, 156, 177, 193, 207–209
 “The Red House” (La Casa Rossa). See Alberobello
 “Red Village.” See Äänislinna
 Regat. See Moldavia; Romania
 Reggio Emilia, 457, 459, 460
 Reghin. See Szászrégen
 Regina Maria farm, 593
 Reguisheim, 235
 Reillanne (Mas-des-Près, Notre-Dame des Prés), 210, 232
 Reims, 896
 Reis Saltworks, 74
 Relizane (Rezaline), 257, 293
 Remetea, 792
 René-Cassin School, 101
 Renicci di Anghiari, 416, 427, 433, 452, 454–455, 471, 557
 Rennes, 180, 210–211
 Reno farm (Odessa subcamp), 731
 Republicans’ Cemetery, 107
 Reșița, 655
 Revúca, 844, 856, 880–881
 Rezaline. See Relizane
 Rezina, 599, 608, 610, 638, 677, 686, 710, 736, 748–750, 768, 783
 Rhédey Garden, 363
 Rhodes, 425
 Rhon, 320
 Rhône-Alpes region, 105, 143, 166, 173, 183, 184, 217, 229
 Ribaritsa, 3, 30
 Ribnița, 575
 Ricse, 303, 368–369
 Rieti, 445, 459
 Rieti province, 401, 424, 445, 459
 Rieucros, 93, 114, 117, 156, 211–212
 Riikhisyrjä (Krasnoznamenka), 87
 Riitasensuo, 82
 Rijeka. See Fiume
 Rillieux-la-Pape, 143
 Rimaszombat, 304
 Riom, 144
 Ripeaki, 579
 Risiera di San Sabba, 477, 542
 Rivel, 129, 212–213, 225
 Rivesaltes (Camp Joffre), 96, 102, 103, 104, 114, 116, 123, 141, 148, 156, 169, 176, 183, 197, 207, 208, 213–215, 218, 227
 Rivière des Bourbiers, 179
 Rocca Littorio. See Gaalkacyo
 Rocca of Caterina Sforza, 428
 Roccatederighi, 455–457, 459
 Rock Pass. See Tash Boaz
 Rodez, 184
 Rogozna (Rohizna), 684, 714, 742, 770
 Rökk-Szilárd Street (Budapest), 330, 332, 333
 Roland-Garros, 92
 Romagna, 428
 Romainville, 211
 Roman, 624, 818
 Romania, 2, 7, 12, 30, 34, 39, 49, 125, 131, 302, 310, 317, 340, 348, 349, 356, 357, 362, 363, 377, 569–830
 Romanian National Road, 792
 Rome, 391, 401, 424, 428, 430, 432, 439, 447, 448, 470
 Rome province, 416
 “Rooster Hill.” See Äänislinna
 Rosiers d’Égletons. See Égletons
 Rostov, 579
 Rothschild Hospital, 135, 164
 Rouen, 184
 Rouergue, 121
 Rougé, 179
 Rouillé, 103, 130, 161, 215–217, 237
 Roumeli, 522, 525
 Roussillon region, 11, 113
 Route de Limoges. See Poitiers
 Rovezzano. See Montalbano
 Royal Salt Works, 106
 Royallieu. See Compiègne-Royallieu
 Royan, 216
 Rrethi i Matit. See Mat District
 Rublenița (Rubelnița), 749, 783
 Rudiny, 889
 Rudnik, 13
 Ruelle, 168
 Ruffieux, 217–218, 229, 230
 Ruokolahti, 82
 Rupe, 69
 Rusava River, 800–801
 Ruse, 11, 37
 Russia. See Soviet Union
 Ruthenia. See Carpatho-Ruthenia
 Ružový Dvor, 857
 Rybníky, 855
 Rybnitsa. See Râbnița
 Säämäjärvi (Syamozero), 87
 Saar (Saarland), 119, 125, 177, 183, 207
 Saarpfalz. See Palatinat
 Šabac, 835
 Săbăoani, 624
 Sabinov, 845
 Săcălaz, 792
 Sachsenhausen, 203, 849, 883
 Sădăgura (Sadhora), 750–752, 774
 Sagrado, 429, 449
 Sahara, 240, 241, 249, 270, 291
 Šahy. See Ipolyság
 Saïda (Saida), 248, 262, 283. See also Le Kreider
 Saint-André-d’Allas, 125
 Saint-Brieuc, 202
 Saint-Calais, 132
 Saint-Chamas, 178
 Saint-Cyprien, 113, 123, 131, 174, 197, 207, 217, 218–219, 894
 Saint Cyr, 103
 Saint-Denis-lès-Sens, 185, 222, 234
 Saint Ecaterina Normal School for Girls, 619
 Sainte Marie du Zit, 901
 Saintes-Maries-de-la-Mer, 228
 Saint-Flour, 128
 Saint François prison, 105
 Saint-Georges d’Aurac, 219–221
 Saint-Germain-les-Belles (Bagatelle), 115, 127, 221–222, 224
 Saint-Gervais-les-Bains, 537
 Saint-Girons, 109
 St. George’s Prison, 504
 Saint-Jean Hospital. See Hôpital Saint-Jean
 St. Joseph School, 129
 St. Julien-des-Landes, 181
 Saint-Livrade, 116
 Saint-Louis Hospital. See Hôpital Saint-Louis
 St. Louis, Senegal, 280
 Saint-Marthe, 249
 Saint-Martin-Vésubie, 534, 537
 Saint-Maurice aux Riches Hommes, 181, 222–223
 Saint-Maximin, 122
 Saint-Nectaire, 136, 167, 223–224
 Saint-Nicolas, 168
 Saint-Paul-d’Eyjeaux, 122, 128, 190, 207, 221, 224–225, 226, 253
 Saint Petersburg. See Leningrad
 Saint-Pierre-des-Corps, 160
 Saint-Sulpice-la-Pointe, 114, 117, 118, 122, 129, 146, 155, 207, 213, 225–227, 253, 266
 St. Tekle Haymanot Church, 504
 Saint-Urcize, 128
 Saint-Vitte-sur-Briance, 221
 Sajmište. See Semlin
 Sajószentpéter, 353
 Sakharove. See Zahariovca
 Säkylä, 82
 Salánk, 361
 Sălărd. See Szalárd
 Sălătruc, 646
 Salerno, 411, 412, 415. See also Gulf of Salerno
 Salgótarján, 311, 374
 Saliers, 215, 227–228
 Salla, 82
 Sallanches, 228–229
 Sallertaine, 182
 Salonika. See Thessalonika

- Salonta. See Nogyszalonta
 Salsomaggiore. See Scipione di Salsomaggiore
 Saluzzo, 408
 Salzburg, 843–844
 Salzgitter (Lager Kalbert), 74
 Samobor, 67
 Samokov, 11
 Samos, 510
 San Bartolomeo convent. See Campagna
 San Domino. See Tremiti Islands
 San Lucia, 450
 San Martino. See Sumartin
 San Nicola. See Tremiti Islands
 San Pietro, 401, 402, 543
 San Pietro della Fossa. See Supetar
 San Tomaso della Fossa (Bagnolo in Piano), 457–458, 460
 San Tomè, 428
 San Vittore Prison, 404, 405, 411, 418, 470
 Sanatorium des Pins, 162
 Sandanski. See Sveti Vrach
 Sandbostel, 238
 Sangro River, 422
 Sanremo, 471
 Santa Croce, 457
 Santa Maria al Bagno, 412
 Santa Maria dei Lumi monastery. See Civitella del Tronto
 Santa Maria Maggiore, 472
 Sant'Andrea, 443
 Saône-et-Loire Département, 156, 217, 230
 Saouaf (Aş Şawwāf), 899, 901
 Saoura River, 251, 278, 281
 Saraevo, 593
 Säräisniemi, 82
 Sarajevo, 48, 53, 55, 68, 69, 70, 545, 547, 549, 554
 Saran'ovo (Septemvri), 13, 14
 Sardinia, 426, 432, 452, 455, 535, 550.
See also Kingdom of Piedmont-Sardinia
 Şargorod (Shargorod, Sharhorod), 577, 578, 625, 629, 643, 644, 665, 666, 703, 713, 721, 722, 752–754, 803, 804
 Šariš, 856
 Šariš-Zemplín County, 845, 879
 Sárospatak, 370
 Sarre Département. See Saar
 Sarthe Département, 132, 133, 180, 184, 186, 188, 202
 Sárvár, 303, 311, 333, 369–370
 Sashalom, 311
 Sassari province, 426
 Sassoferato, 458
 Sathonay-Village, 143
 Sátoraljaújhely, 308, 334, 338, 370–371
 Satu Mare. See Szatmárnémeti
 Satu Nou, 668
 Sauvaud camp. See Casseneuil
 Sava, 64
 Sávár, 346
 Sava River, 49, 58, 61, 62, 64, 73, 835
 Săveni, 673, 742, 822
 Savières Canal, 217
 Savigny par Valleiry, 217, 229–230
 Savoie Département, 184, 217, 531, 535, 537
 Savona province, 407, 409, 410
 Savrani (Savran), 610, 754–756, 811
 Savranka River, 754
 Sayennes, 135
 Sbhkha (Aş Subaykhah), 899, 901
 Scârba, 818
 Scazineţ (Scazeñti, Skazinets, Scazineţi, Skazintsy, Skazyntsi), 657, 694, 715, 756–758, 799, 822
 Schachter House, 679
 Schmierer School, 679
 Scipione, 400, 456, 458–459
 Scirocca. See Villa Shiroka
 Scolaire School for Boys, 205
 Scuola Santa Croce, 459–460
 Scutari. See Shkodër
 Sdraussina. See Poggio Terza Armata
 Sebenico. See Šibenik
 Sebikotane (Sebikhoutane), 241, 293–294
 Secchia River, 453
 Secretarca, 658
 Secureni, 677, 758–760
 Seesjärvi Lake, 81
 Ségur, 128
 Seine Prefecture, 134, 135
 Seine-et-Marne Département, 154
 Seine-et-Oise Département (Val d'Oise), 102
 Sekernice. See Szeklence
 Selce, 554
 Seletin, 759
 Seleuşu Mare. See Nagyszöllös
 Selişte. See Siliştea
 Semlin (Sajmište, Belgrade Fairgrounds), 74, 833, 835, 836
 Senchou, 116
 Senegal (Sénégale), 240, 241, 247, 248, 271, 276, 280, 286, 297
 Senigallia, 460–461
 Senise, 419
 Senta, 381
 Sepsiszentgyörgy (Sfântu Gheorghe, Szentgyörgy), 309, 371
 Septemvri. See Saran'ovo
 Septfonds, 116, 182, 189
 Serb, Croat, and Slovene State. See Yugoslavia
 Serbia, 7, 19, 40, 41, 45, 47, 49, 74, 75, 304, 305, 311, 320, 359, 381, 415, 468, 479, 482, 484, 491, 493, 496, 831, 831–840
 Serchio Valley, 404
 Serebria (Serebriya), 760
 Sered', 846, 847, 849, 855, 862, 864, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 874, 877, 881–883, 887, 889
 Sereilhac, 124, 158, 159, 230–231
 Sereni Castle. See Pietrafitta-Tavernelle
 Seres, 19
 Serghieşti (Serhiivka), 615
 Sermoneta, 428
 Servigliano, 422, 435, 461–462
 Sestrimo, 13, 28, 29
 Sète, 146
 Sétif-Satne-Saint-Arnaud, 268, 290
 Settāt (Fqih ben Salh), 294
 Sevastopol, 615
 Sevchenko farm. See Vigoda
 Severin, 761
 Severnaja. See Äänislinna
 Sevlievsko, 13
 Sevluš. See Nagyszöllös
 Sfântu Gheorghe. See Sepsiszentgyörgy
 Sfax, 896, 901
 Sforzacosta, 447, 450, 462, 470
 Shano, 504
 Shargorod (Sharhorod). See Şargorod
 Shevchenkove. See Halcinţi
 Shijak, 491, 496
 Shikora Villa, 489
 Shiroka Polyana, 29
 Shkodër (Scutari), 482, 489, 490, 500, 501
 Shkodra, Lake, 500
 Shpykiv (Shpikov). See Spicov
 Shtip, 31, 32
 Shumen, 3, 11, 30–31, 33, 42
 Shumilovka (Shumilovca). See Şumilovca
 Shumyliv. See Şumilovca
 Shyoltozero. See Soutjärvi
 Siam, 169
 Šibenik (Sebenico), 69, 441, 547, 553, 556
 Siberia, 613, 677, 735, 750, 758, 767, 773, 784, 808
 Sibuljine, 58
 Sicily, 410, 427
 Sidi Allal el Bahraoui. See Monod
 Sidi Azaz (Sidi Said), 527, 529–530
 Sidi El Ayachi (Azemmour, Kaid El Ayachi), 247, 275, 289, 293, 294–295
 Sidi Hadjej (Sidi Hadjadj, Sidi Hajaj), 283
 Sidi Said. See Sidi Azaz
 Sidi-Bel-Abbès, 263, 291
 Sierra Leone, 260, 298
 Sighet. See Máramarosziget
 Siklós, 371–372
 “The Silent City.” See Cité de la Muette
 Silesia, 842
 Siliştea, 736
 Silnitsia River, 807
 Sima, 364
 Simeonovets, 29
 Şimleul-Silvaniei. See Szilágysomlyó
 Sinaia, 571, 794
 Siófok, 311
 Siófok Szentgál, 385
 Siret, 673, 821
 Siret River, 571, 622, 627, 668, 669, 673, 679, 705, 773, 808, 809
 Şiria, 761–762
 Sirova, 658
 Sisak I and II, 49, 73–75
 Sisteron (Fort Sisteron), 129, 141, 210, 232–233
 Skazintsy (Skazyntsi, Skazinets). See Scazineţ
 “Ski Factory.” See Äänislinna
 Skopje (Skopje, “Monopol” tobacco warehouse), 9, 31–33, 496, 497
 Skrirat (Skhirat, Skhrirat), 295–296
 Slana, 58
 Slatina, 814
 Slavija Hotel, 549
 Slavonia (Slavonija), 48, 53, 76, 302, 554
 Slavonska Požega, 49, 75–76
 Slavonski Brod, 69
 Slavošovce, 880

- Sliven, 27
 Slivina (Slyvyne), 579, 687, 762–764
 Slobodca, 579, 728, 777
 Slobozia, 672, 708, 738
 Slobozia Doamnă (Slobozia Doamnei), 736
 Slobozia/LPRS No. 1, 764–766, 794
 Slobozia Veche cemetery, 764
 Slovakia, 302, 315, 318, 327, 338, 340, 350,
 356, 360, 363, 370, 424, 841, 842–891, 895
 Slovenia, 46, 53, 75, 391, 410, 416, 449, 459, 466, 477, 545, 550
 Sluserevo, 658
 Slyvyne. See Slivina
 Smederevska Palanka, 835, 836, 839–840
 Smedovo, 14, 33–34
 Šmerinca (Zhmerynka, Zhmerinka), 575,
 577, 578, 625, 629, 630, 713, 714,
766–767, 771, 797, 798, 799
 Smrikama, 69
 Sobibor, 145, 152, 235
 Sofia, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17,
 18, 19, 21, 22, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33,
34–36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42
 Sofia–Plovdiv highway, 7, 8, 28, 29, 42
 Sofia–Varna highway, 26
 Sofiivka. See Dobra-Nadejda
 Sokolovo, 26
 Sokyryany, 758
 Şoldanu, 621
 Soleşti, 814
 Solofra, 462–463
 Sologne region, 162
 Soltvadkert, 345
 Soludervent, 22, 23
 Somalia (Italian-occupied), 502–504
 Sombor. See Zombor
 Somlyócséhi (Cehei), 377–378
 Somogy County, 342
 Somogyszil, 343
 Somorja, 337
 Somovit, 10, 28, 35, 36–37
 Sondrio, 401, 463–464
 Sopron (Ödenburg), 311, 372–373, 380
 Sopron-Bánfalva, 306
 Sorge Villa. See Lanciano
 Soroca, 574, 601, 603, 636, 651, 710, 749,
767–769, 774, 783
 Soroksár, 311
 Sorponbánfalva, 372
 Sortavala, 82
 Sosnowiec, 887
 Sospello (Sospel), 531, 532, 535, 536–538
 Sotiria, 506
 Soudain Français. See French Sudan
 Soudeilles, 138, 233
 Souge, 178
 South Africa, 529
 Southern Kingdom (Italy), 401
 Southern Oran, 262, 271, 278, 281
 Southern Zone, Vichy France (Zone nonoccupée, ZNO), 91, 92, 93, 94, 96,
 101, 109, 111, 114, 118, 124, 125, 139, 140,
 144, 148, 156, 167, 169, 172, 176, 206, 214,
 215, 220, 225, 227, 232, 236, 531
 Soutjärvi (Shyoltozero), 82
 Soviet Asia, 736
 Soviet Karelia (Suojärvi), 81, 86, 87
 Soviet Union, 19, 20, 24, 67, 70, 80, 83, 84,
 86, 87, 103, 303, 343, 364, 485, 562, 570,
 571, 580, 606, 613, 615, 620, 622, 625,
 627, 628, 631, 633, 640, 646, 648, 647,
 654, 656, 659, 660, 670, 671, 673, 677,
 678, 679, 690, 697, 698, 702, 705, 706,
 707, 708, 710, 715, 720, 721, 727, 728, 737,
 738, 748, 752, 754, 759, 764, 766, 768,
 770, 773, 781, 783, 788, 789, 791, 792,
 793, 795, 797, 802, 805, 807, 809, 814,
 815, 817, 820, 823, 825, 833, 848, 863, 895
 Sozopol, 3
 Spain, 50, 101, 108, 125, 131, 150, 158, 191,
 294, 297, 485
 Spalato. See Split
 Spanish camp. See Casseneuil
 Spicov (Spikov, Shpikov, Shpykiv), 742,
769–770, 805
 Spitalul Militar Regina Elisabeta. See
 Queen Elisabeth Military Hospital
 Split (Spalato), 494, 543, 546, 547, 549, 556
 Spotorno camp. See Bergeggi
 Srem, 832
 Sremska Mitrovica. See Hrvatska Mitrovica
 Stains, 130
 Stalag 309, 82, 83
 Stalag 322 (Kriegsgefangenen-Mannschafts-Stammlager), 82
 Stalingrad, 19, 108, 579
 Stalino, 579, 701, 732, 807
 Stanislavcic (Stanislavchik, Stanislavchyc, Stanislavcia), 579, 629, 770–772
 Stara Gradiška. See Jasenovac V
 Stara Kanjižz, 381
 Stará Máša, 880
 Stara Zagora, 11
 Stari Bečej, 381
 Stari Grad (Cittavecchia), 548, 549
 Stari Vrabas, 381
 Stary Tekov, 350
 Stavanger, 562
 Ştefan Cel Mare farm, 730
 Ştefăneşti, 574
 Stepanchi (Stepanky, Stepanki, Stepanca),
772–773
 Ştioborăni, 814
 Stokit (Stokite), 13
 Stone Quarry camp. See Ladijin/Stone Quarry
 Storojineţ (Storozhynets'), 677, 710, 715,
 758, 759, 773–775, 817, 820
 Straflager, 320
 Străjescu, 679
 Strasbourg, 133, 226, 408
 Strasshof, 315, 317, 333, 335, 342, 375, 379
 Strážske, 844, 855, 874, 878
 Struma Valley, 37–39
 Struthof. See Natzweiler
 Ştubnianske Teplice, 864
 Stuhlweissenburg. See Székesfehérvár
 Stúpava train station, 877
 Stuttgart, 221
 Stutthof/Thorn, 352, 366
 Ştvrtok na Ostrove, 872
 Subcarpathian Rus' (Zakarpats'ka, Zakarpattia), 340, 347, 355, 357, 872, 873, 886
 Subotica. See Szabadka
 sub-Saharan Africa, 240, 241
 Suceava, 622, 629, 671, 715, 752, 817, 820
 Suchava, 667
 Sucleia, 797
 Suha Balca (Suha Balka, Suhaia Balca, Sukha Balka, Ferma de Stat Suha Balca),
 690, 775–777
 Suha Verba (Sukha Verba, Suhaia Verba),
 720, 777–778
 Suhaia Balca. See Suha Balca
 Sukha Balka. See Suha Balca
 Sukha Verba. See Suha Verba
 Suksitehdas. See Äänislinna
 Sumartin (San Martino), 543
 Şumilovca (Shumilovka, Shumilovca, Shumyliv, Şumilova, Şumilovo), 707,
778–779
 Sumovca (Sumovka, Şumovca, Sumofca, Sumivka), 779–781
 Sunja, 75
 Suojärvi. See Soviet Karelia
 Suomussalmi, 82
 Supetar (San Pietro della Brazza), 543
 Surdulica, 7
 Şúr River, 883
 Suşarca, 713
 Süttő, 329
 Suzzara, 462
 Svätý Jur, 845, 862, 868, 870, 883–884
 Sveta Anastasia, 3
 Sveti Kirik, 3
 Sveti Nikola, 3
 Sveti Vrach (Sandanski), 3, 8, 37, 38
 Svezhen, 29
 Svir River (Syväri River), 81
 Svishtov, 14, 26, 39–40
 Svishtovsko, 13
 Sweden, 81, 87, 566, 567
 Swedish Empire, 80
 Switzerland, 81, 105, 167, 184, 228, 229, 230,
 335, 339, 402, 533, 848
 Syamozero. See Säämäjärvi
 Sydspissen, 562
 Syros Island, 508, 512
 Syväri River. See Svir River
 Szabadka (Subotica), 311, 315, 381, 382
 Szabó brickyard, 376
 Szabolcs County, 364
 Szabolcs Street (Budapest), 327, 329
 Szabolcs-Szatmár-Bereg County, 347
 Szalárd (Sälard), 362
 Száldobos, 377
 Szamosújvár, 309, 336, 348
 Szandapuszta, 378
 Szarvas, 311
 Szászrégen (Reghin), 309, 371, 373
 Szatmár, 309, 357, 358
 Szatmárnémeti (Satu Mare, Szatmárnémeti), 309, 319, 335, 357, 373–374
 Szécsény, 374–375
 Szeged, 304, 307, 311, 342, 375–376, 383
 Székelyhid, 362
 Székesfehérvár (Stuhlweissenburg), 304,
 307, 310, 311, 376–377
 Szeklenca (Sekernice), 377
 Szekszárd, 365

- Szelis. See Nagyszöllős
 Szentendre, 311
 Szentes, 311
 Szentgotthárd, 379
 Szentgyörgy. See Sepsiszentgyörgy
 Szentkirályszabadja, 354, 387
 Szentlőrinc, 366, 371
 Sziget (Győrsziget), 339
 Szigetszentmiklós, 331, 332
 Szigetvár, 316, 343
 Szikszó, 353
 Szilágy County, 309, 353
 Szilágysomlyó (Șimleul-Silvaniei), 309, 377–378
 Szob, 341
 Szöllősvégardó, 361
 Szolnok, 311, 378–379
 Szolnok-Doboka County, 309, 335, 348
 Szombathely, 304, 307, 311, 359, 379–380
 Szőny, 329
 Szrencs, 353
 Sücs-és Szőrmeárúgyár. See Tschuk
- Tab, 343
 Tabakova Cheshma, 21, 28, 36, 37
 Tacovo. See Técső
 Tafilalet, 256
 Taksony, 331
 Tállya, 353, 370
 Talzaza Menabba, 296
 Tamarar (Mogador, Tamana, Tanoundja Tamarar), 284, 296–297
 Tamlelt, 254, 255
 Tandara. See Tendirara
 Țândărei, 672
 Țândăreni, 764
 Tangiers, 289
 Tanoundja Tamarar. See Tamarar
 Țânțari, 823
 Tapolca, 386
 Tarañ, 857
 Taranto, 449
 Taravölgy (Taracvölgy), 380
 Tarbe jail, 120
 Tarcal, 370
 Târgoviște. See Teiș-Târgoviște
 Târgu Frumos, 624
 Târgu Jiu, 571, 622, 627, 647, 656, 673, 674, 679, 687, 705, 706, 781–783, 809
 Târgul Vertujeni (Vertiujeni, Vârtejani, Vertijeni), 575, 608, 651, 691, 747, 749, 751, 768, 783–784
 Târgu Mureș. See Marosvásárhely
 Târgușor, 574
 Tarn Département, 104, 113, 114, 117, 122, 129, 146, 155, 177, 207, 212, 213, 225, 226
 Tarn-et-Garonne Département, 116, 123, 182
 Tarnovano, 450
 Tarpa, 318
 Tarsia. See Ferramonti di Tarsia
 Tarutino (Tarutyne), 613, 784–785
 Tash Boaz (Dospatski Prokhod, Rock Pass), 29
 Taşlác, 797
 Tasnád, 304
- Tassit, 251
 Tătărești (Tătărași, Tatarbunary), 785–787
 Tatarovca (Tatarovka), 787–788
 Tatra, 856
 Tatra Mountains, 879
 Tattersall (Budapest), 330–331
 Tattersall racetrack, 326–327, 330
 Tavernelle. See Pietrafitta-Tavernelle
 Teatro Olimpico. See Olympic Theater
 Teceu Mare. See Técső
 Técső (Tacovo, Teceu Mare, Tiachiv, Tyachovo), 308, 380–381
 Tecuci, 571, 614, 669, 788–789
 Téglás, 311, 335
 Teiș, 571
 Teiș-Târgoviște, 789–790
 Tekeháza, 361
 Teleorman (Vlașca), 615, 751, 817
 Telerghma (Telerghma), 297
 Teliki Square, 326
 Temanar. See Tamarar
 Tence, 233–234
 Tendirara (Tandara, Tendarra), 297–298
 Tenje, 49, 75, 76–77
 Tapa, 540
 Teramo, 415, 419, 422, 434, 435, 445, 446, 464, 465, 466
 Terezín, 849, 883
 Teslić, 73
 Tét, 364
 Teteven, 3, 13, 30
 Tevere River, 454
 Thebes (Thēva), 522–523
 Theresienstadt, 315, 330, 333, 342, 360, 375, 376
 Thessalia, 505
 Thessalonika (Thessaloniki, Salonika), 2, 19, 508, 510, 518
 Thessaly, 509, 519, 520, 523
 Thēva. See Thebes
 Third Army Hill. See Poggio Terza Armata
 Thorn. See Stutthof/Thorn
 Thrace, 24, 25, 508
 Tiachiv. See Técső
 Tiaret, 266
 Tibana, 574
 Tibriv. See Tivriv
 Țibulovca (Tsybulivka, Tzibulovca), 651, 790–792
 Tige bet, 504
 Tighina (Bender), 601, 615, 638, 658, 687, 718, 785, 795, 796, 797, 812
 Tighrina. See Triginna
 Timbuktu (Timbuctoo). See Tombouctou
 Timiș, 654, 705, 761, 792, 818
 Timișoara/LP No. 17, 789, 792–793
 Timișul de Jos, 618
 Timișul de Jos/LPRA No. 18, 793–795
 Tiranë (Tirana), 401, 402, 479, 484, 485, 490, 491, 492, 496, 497, 501
 Tiraspol, 575, 591, 612, 615, 638, 658, 659, 682, 687, 716, 718, 720, 736, 739, 740, 755, 762, 763, 795–797, 827
 Tiraspol/LPRS Nos. 5 and 11, 620, 682, 730, 797–798, 824
 Tisovec, 880
 Tisza River, 311
- Tiszacsege, 335
 Tiszaeszlar, 353, 364
 Tiszaladány, 364
 Tiszalúc, 353, 370
 Tiszaújfal, 361
 Titel, 383
 Tivriv (Tivarif, Tibriv, Tyvrov, Tyvrviv), 757, 799–800, 825
 Tniet-Agarev (El Agareb), 896, 901
 Todorovtsi, 3
 Tokaj, 370
 Tököl, 331, 332
 Tolcsva, 370
 Tolentino, 469
 Tollo, 406, 464
 Tolmino, 410
 Tolna County, 365
 Toloncház I & II. See Mosonyi Street
 Toloncház II. See Kistarcsa
 Tomány, 358
 Tomaszpol (Tomashpil, Tomashpol), 800–802, 811
 Tomba Grammar School, 261
 Tombebouc, 93, 124
 Tombo Island, 260
 Tombouctou (Timbuctoo, Timbuktu), 241, 261, 274, 280, 298–299
 Tonezza del Cimone (Colonia alpina Umberto I, Umberto I Alpine estate), 464–465, 474
 Tönsberg, 561, 565
 Tönyestál, 337
 Toplit Izvori, 28
 Topol'čany, 848, 868
 Topolita, 373
 Topolya (Backa Topola), 303, 311, 315, 375, 381–382, 383
 Torino, 408, 409, 415, 529
 Törtel, 345
 Tortoreto, 465
 Tortoreto Stazione (Alba Adriatica), 445, 465
 Tossicia (Mirti House, Casa Mirti), 435, 440, 466
 Toszigetsiliköz, 339
 Toul, 137
 Toulboubou. See Pontivy
 Toulouse, 108, 109, 114, 118, 120, 140, 155, 183, 207, 208, 209, 212, 218
 Tourelles. See Paris
 Tours, 157, 160, 161, 186
 Train Station camp. See Casseneuil
 Transcarpathia. See Carpatho-Ruthenia
 Trans-Carpathian highway (Transfăgărășan), 646
 Transdanubia, 310, 311
 Transfăgărășan. See Trans-Carpathian highway
 Transnistria, 534, 569, 570, 572, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593n1, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 604, 605, 606, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 621, 622, 625, 626, 628, 629, 630, 632, 634, 635, 636, 637, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 656, 657, 658, 660, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 670,

- 672, 673, 674, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 707, 709, 710, 711, 713, 714, 715, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 723, 724, 725, 726, 728, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 739, 740, 741, 742, 745, 746, 747, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 758, 760, 762, 763, 766, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 782, 783, 784, 785, 790, 791, 795, 796, 797, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 806, 807, 809, 811, 812, 815, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 824, 825, 826, 827, 829, 830
- Trans-Saharan Railroad. See Mediterranean-Niger railway
- Transylvania, 310, 319, 347, 351, 357, 580, 654, 755, 803. See also Northern Transylvania
- Travnik, 69, 70
- Trebeža River, 58
- Treblinka, 16, 19, 31, 33, 36
- Trebusa Inferiore (Dolenja Trebuša), 545
- Trei Scaune, 371
- Treia (Villa La Quiete, Villa Spada), 446, 466–467
- Treize-Septiers, 181
- Tremiti Islands (San Nicola and San Domino), 420, 435, 467–468, 469
- Trenčín, 856, 860, 864
- Trento, 463
- Treviso, 442, 543
- Trevna, 13
- Trianon, 311
- Tridubi (Triduby, Triduve, Tridube, Triduba), 802–803
- Trieste, 410, 429, 432, 439, 450, 464, 470, 477, 546, 557
- Trieste Coroneo, 429
- Trieste-Capodistria, 439
- Triginná (Tighrina), 528
- Trihaiy, 811
- Trihati (Trikhaty), 579, 590, 645, 667, 703, 712, 722, 723, 730, 742, 746, 747, 753, 771, 803, 804, 807, 826
- Trikala, 506, 523–525
- Trikhaty. See Trihati
- Tripoli, 413, 527, 529, 530
- Triveneto, 399
- Trnava, 848, 854
- Troița, 593
- Tromsdalen, 562
- Tromsø, 562
- Trondheim, 562, 567
- Tropova, 803–805
- Trostineț (Trostianeț, Trostineți, Trostianets), 598, 626, 634, 684, 698, 699, 700, 707, 725, 731, 732, 805–806
- Troyan, 11, 30
- Troyanski Pass. See Beklemeto Pass
- Troyansko, 13
- Troyes, 234–236
- Trünska Klisura, 7, 40–41
- Trüvna, 8, 13
- Tryavna, 13
- Tschuk (Tsuk, Szűcs-és Szörmeárúgyár), 332, 333
- Tserovo, 4, 17
- Tsuk. See Tschuk
- Tsybulevca, 707
- Tsybulivka. See Țibulovca
- Tulcin (Tulchin, Tūlcyn), 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 626, 634, 645, 684, 691, 698, 699, 700, 701, 703, 714, 716, 724, 725, 731, 732, 740, 742, 746, 747, 753, 769, 774, 775, 796, 797, 799, 806–808, 811, 826
- Tunis, 894, 895, 896, 899
- Tunisia, 144, 240, 242, 250, 528, 893, 894–897, 898, 899–902
- Turin, 404, 421, 432
- Turkey, 2, 31, 438
- Turku, 83
- Turnu Măgurele. See Bolgrad/Turnu Măgurele
- Turnu Severin (Drobeta-Turnu Severin), 571, 808–809
- Tuscany, 470
- Tutova, 669, 678
- Tuusula, 82
- Tyachovo. See Técső
- Tyit-bet, 504
- Tylihul River, 592
- Tyrrhenian Sea, 451
- Tyvrov (Tyvriiv). See Tivriv
- Tzia Island. See Kea Island
- Tzibulovca. See Țibulovca
- Udine, 410, 427, 454, 476
- Údolie, 860
- Udvarhely, 309, 352
- Ugliano (Ugljian), 468–469
- Úgocsa County, 360
- Újfehértó, 364
- Újlaki Brickyards, 229, 327, 329
- Újpest, 311, 323, 331
- Újtelep. See Horthyliget
- Újvidék (Novi Sad), 311, 381, 382–383
- Ukraine, 125, 303, 304, 305, 318, 340, 347, 348, 355, 359, 360, 364, 368, 370, 377, 380, 384, 575, 576, 588, 589, 591, 592, 595, 596, 604, 608, 611, 613, 615, 616, 618, 625, 626, 629, 630, 631, 634, 636, 640, 641, 642, 643n1, 644, 650, 652, 657, 658, 664, 665, 666, 670, 680, 682, 683, 685, 690, 691, 693, 695, 697, 698, 700, 701, 702, 703, 706, 709, 711, 713, 715, 718, 719, 720, 721, 723, 724, 726, 731, 732, 737, 739, 741, 742, 745, 750, 752, 754, 756, 758, 760, 762, 766, 769, 770, 772, 773, 775, 777, 778, 779, 784, 785, 786, 787, 790, 799, 800, 802, 803, 805, 806, 807, 811, 813, 816, 818, 820, 821, 824, 827, 828, 830, 842, 843
- Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, 570
- Ulven, 562
- Umberto I Alpine estate. See Tonezza del Cimone
- Ung County, 384
- Ungheni, 648
- Ungvár (Uzhhorod, Užhorod), 308, 360, 384–385
- United Kingdom. See Great Britain
- United States, 80, 94, 169, 393, 401, 409, 457, 467, 484, 848, 871
- Unteraltertheim, 104
- Urbisaglia, 415, 432, 447, 462, 469–470
- Uriage, 205, 236
- Uriage-les-Bains, 205
- Urmín, 857
- Uroševac (Ferizaj), 488, 492
- Urziceni, 764
- Uskočke šume, 64
- Ussel, 138
- USSR. See Soviet Union
- Ustia (Ustie), 707, 809–810
- Ustica, 455, 494, 495, 499
- Ustica Island (Isola di Ustica), 470–471
- Ústie nad Oravou, 844, 884–885
- Uzbekistan, 736
- Uzhhorod (Užhorod). See Ungvár
- V. E. barracks (Caserma Vittorio Emanuele III), 550
- Vaasa, 82
- Vabre, 155
- Vacarjani (Odessa subcamp), 731, 797
- Vădeni, 680
- Vado, 407
- Vadul-Roșca, 679
- Vaghia, 523
- Váh River, 864, 865, 866, 868, 869, 890
- Vakarel, 12, 22, 23
- Valbonnais, 236
- Vălcov, 785
- Val di Chiana. See Civitella della Chiana
- Val d'Oise. See Seine-et-Oise Département
- Valea Burcutului. See Borpatak
- Valea Homorod. See Vlădeni-Homorod/LPRS No. 2
- Valea lui Mihai. See Érmihályfalva
- Valence, 173
- Valgros Chateau, 112
- Vălișoara, 655
- Valjevo, 835
- Valkeakoski, 82
- Valkeala, 22
- Valkjärvi, 22
- Vallecrosia, 471–472
- Valle d'Aosta, 401
- Valle Grande (Vallegrande, Vela Luka), 468, 546, 547
- Vallo della Brazza. See Bol
- Valona (Vlorë), 479, 487, 488, 501
- Valovishte, 8
- Vameș, 697, 823–824
- Vámospércs, 335
- Vannes, 204
- Vapniarca (Vapniarka, Vapnearca), 579, 580, 674, 687, 707, 720, 733, 754, 755, 777, 782, 802, 811–813
- Varaždin, 48, 71
- Var Département, 94, 122, 129, 145, 169, 226
- Varjúlapos, 364–365
- Varna, 8, 11, 18, 25, 26
- Várpalota, 385
- Vártejeni. See Târgul Vertujeni
- Värtsilä, 82, 87

- Varvarovca (Varvarivka), 579, 650, 652, 726, 762, 803
- Vas County, 369, 379
- Vásárosnamény, 318
- Vásárút, 337
- Vășcăuți, 759
- Vaselínovo (Veselinovo, Veselynové), 690, 719, 775, 813–814
- Vaslui, 571, 574, 607, 614, 615, 669, 782, 818
- Vaslui/LPRS No. 4, 620, 656, 814–815, 823
- Vasto Marina. See Istonio Marina
- Vasvár, 379
- Vatican City, 410
- Vatici, 601
- Vaubeurs, 147
- Vaucluse, 122, 264
- Vaudeurs, 222
- Vaulnavays-le-Haut, 205
- Vazdovca (Cvozdavca, Gvozdovka, Hvozdavka Druha), 815–816
- Vazdovca, Golta Prefecture (Ivanovka), 830
- Vela Luka. See Valle Grande
- Vel d'Hiv. See Vélodrome d'Hiver
- Veľebít Mountains, 48, 54, 55
- Veles, 32
- Veliki Bečkerek, 73
- Veliki Strug River, 58, 60
- Veliko Tŕrnovo, 4, 7, 18, 19, 42
- Veljun, 48
- Vel'ká Bytča, 842
- Vel'ký Kýr, 844, 871, 872, 873, 885–887
- Vélodrome d'Hiver (Vel d'Hiv), 92, 96, 134, 135
- Velyka Mykhailivka. See Grosulovo
- Vence, 214, 531, 537, 538–539
- Vencsellő, 364
- Vendée, 182, 203
- Vendychanca River, 821
- Vendychany. See Vindiceni
- Veneto province, 433, 442
- Venezia Giulia (Friuli–Venezia Giulia), 400, 401, 406, 409–410, 420, 429, 434, 436, 443, 445, 448, 449, 459, 465, 469
- Venice, 472
- Venier Villa. See Vo' Vecchio
- Vénissieux, 217
- Ventimiglia, 471
- Ventotene, 432, 471, 472–474, 493
- Verbőc, 361
- Vercelli, 402, 438
- Verebély (Vráble), 385
- Verhovca (Verkhivka), 727, 816–817
- Verinsko, 12
- Verkhivka. See Verhovca
- Vernonvilliers, 234
- Veroli, 439
- Verona, 430, 431, 457, 464, 465, 474
- Verpelét, 337
- Versailles, 103
- Vertujeni (Vertiujeni). See Târgul Vertujeni
- Veselinovo (Veselynové), 14n42
- Vesima, 409
- Veszprém, 365, 385–386
- Vicenza, 464, 474–475
- Vichy Africa, 240–299, 894–897, 898, 899–901
- Vichy France. See France/Vichy
- Victor Emmanuel II Orphanage, 458
- Videle, 751, 817–818
- Vidima, 13n14
- Vidin, 11
- Vienna, 16, 315, 317, 329, 335, 375, 416, 537, 832, 883
- Vienne Département, 161, 180, 186, 202, 203, 215, 216, 237
- Vieux Port, 145
- Vigneux, 102
- Vigoda (Vyhoda, Sevchenko farm), 591, 739, 818–820
- Viipuri, 22, 82, 83
- Viitvka. See Voitovca
- Vijnița (Vijnitsa, Vișnița, Vyzhnytsya), 759, 820–821
- Vikulenszki house, 341
- Vilga, 81
- Villa La Quiete. See Treia
- Villa La Selva. See Bagno a Ripoli
- Villa Lauri. See Pollenza
- Villány, 371
- Villary, 119
- Villa Shiroka (Scirococa), 500–501
- Villa Spada. See Treia
- Villemur-sur-Tarn, 236–237
- Villeneuve, 124
- Villeneuve-le-Comte, 154
- Villeneuve-Sainte-Odile castle, 202
- Villeneuve-sur-Lot, 232
- Vilmány, 353
- Vinchiaturo, 475–476
- Vindiceni (Vendychany), 756, 821–823
- Vinnitsa (Vinnysia, Vinnys'ka), 689, 771, 800. See also Balta
- Vinohradov. See Nagyszöllős
- Vipacco, 450
- Vis Island, 542, 547
- Visco (Borgo Piave, Luigi Sbaiz barracks), 476–477, 550, 557
- Vișnița. See Vijnița
- Visterniceni, 637, 638
- Vitez, 69
- Vitrovitica, 76
- Vittel, 185, 234
- Vizhnitsa, 667, 743
- Vlădeni-Homorod/LPRS No. 2, 793, 823–824
- Vladimirovca, 590
- Vlașca. See Teleorman
- Vlorë. See Valona
- Vocational School, 679
- Vodizza (Vodice), 552
- Voidvodina Province, 383
- Voinești, 680
- Voitovca (Voitovka, Viitvka), 780, 824–825
- Vojvodina, 302, 315
- Volce, 410
- Volcineț, 601
- Volos, 523, 524
- Voluyak, 13
- Vonitsa, 513, 515, 519, 525–526
- Vorarlberg, 320
- Voronezh, 305
- Voroșilovca (Voroșilofca, Voroshylivka), 757, 825–827
- Vosges Département, 234
- Vo' Vecchio (Venier Villa, Vo' Euganeo), 477–478
- Voves, 103, 130, 201, 216, 237–239
- Vráble. See Verebély
- Vrachan, 16, 41
- Vradievcă (Vradiivka), 588, 612, 827–828
- Vradiyevca, 815
- Vrancea. See Putna
- Vranov nad Topľou, 844, 870
- Vratsa, 11, 12, 41–42
- Vulcan/LPRS No. 9, 654–656
- Vuolijoki, 22
- Vütren, 13
- Vyhne, 847, 864, 867, 870, 877, 882, 887–888
- Vyhoda. See Vigoda
- Vynohradiv. See Nagyszöllős
- Vyšný Žipov, 855
- Vyzhnytsya. See Vijnița
- Wapniarca, 747
- Wargla. See Quargla
- Warsaw, 323
- Wartu Chagal, 503
- Watenstedt, 238
- West Africa. See Vichy Africa
- Westfalen, 320
- Wiener-Neudorf, 140
- William Ponty School, 293
- Xanthi, 16, 19, 24
- Yalant'. See Elanet
- Yalkala. See Jalkala
- Yampil (Yampol). See Iampol
- Yannena. See Ioannina
- Yarışev. See Iarișev
- Yaroshenka (Iaroșinca), 722
- Yaruha. See Iaruga
- Yasenove. See Iasinova
- Yasnopillya, 777
- Yassy. See Iași
- Yefren. See Jefren
- Yonne Département, 22, 147, 181, 222
- Ytrac, 128
- Yugoslavia, 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 11, 24, 31, 40, 41, 46, 47, 50, 53, 67, 71, 73, 131, 206, 302, 311, 326, 354, 357, 381, 382, 383, 387, 390, 391, 392, 393, 400, 401, 404, 418, 420, 427, 432, 433, 454, 458, 462, 479, 485, 490, 494, 496, 500, 540–557, 792, 793, 832, 836, 840, 895
- Yugoslavia (Italian-occupied), 400, 401, 404, 418, 420, 427, 432, 454, 485, 540–557
- Zábala, 371
- Zabocrici (Zabokrich, Zhabokrych, Iabocricior, Jabocrici), 828–830
- Zachariyevca, 815
- Zadar. See Zara
- Zagabria, 468
- Zaghouan (Zaghwan), 895, 899, 901–902
- Zagorje, 48

- Zagreb, 46, 47, 48, 49, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 416, 547, 554, 555
- Žagubica, 320
- Zahariovca (Sakharove, Zaharovca, Zakharivka, Zakhariovka), 690, 830
- Zaist'ováci tábor v Ilave. See Ilava/Detention Center
- Zakarpats'ka (Zakarpattia). See Subcarpathian Rus'
- Zakharivka (Zakhariovka). See Zahariovca
- Zala County, 311, 345, 358, 369, 386
- Zalaegerszeg (Egersee, Jageršek, Jegersek), 311, 345, 386
- Zaouia Kadrya, 258
- Zara (Zadar), 58, 440, 458, 464, 468, 469, 486, 494, 552, 553, 556
- Zaravecchia (Biograd na Moru), 552
- Zarfati, 428
- Zarzecze, 887
- Zatish'e (Zatişcea, Zatişa). See Noschiveţ
- Zavadovca, 594, 642
- Zdravščina. See Poggio Terza Armata
- Željecare, 69
- Zemplén County (Zemplin), 334, 338, 368, 370, 856
- Zemun. See Semlin
- Zenica, 69
- Zhabokrych. See Zabocrici
- Zhelūzartsi (Zhelezartsi), 13, 19, 42
- Zhitomir, 305
- Zhmerynka (Zhmerinka). See Şmerinca
- Zhugastru. See Jugastru
- Zilah, 336
- Žilina, 842, 847, 855, 862, 874, 881, 889–890
- Zlarino (Zlarin), 556–557
- Zlataustovo (Zlatoustove), 690
- Zlaté Moravce, 886
- Zlatusha, 7
- ZNO. See Southern Zone, Vichy France
- ZO. See Occupied Zone, Vichy France
- Zohor, 845, 868, 891
- Zombor (Sombor), 381, 382, 386–387
- Zone interdite. See Forbidden Zone, Vichy France
- Zone nonoccupée. See Southern Zone, Vichy France
- Zone occupée. See Occupied Zone, Vichy France
- Zōsimaia School, 514, 516
- Zrenjanin. See Petrovgrad
- ZTI. See Ilava/Detention Center
- Zvūnichevo, 13, 42–44

ORGANIZATIONS AND ENTERPRISES INDEX

This index lists organizations and entities, such as industrial firms, governmental agencies, political parties, educational institutions, private associations, and small businesses mentioned in the text. Some German titles refer to both the person and the office; therefore they are included here. Note that extremely prevalent organizations such as Jewish Councils and the Jewish police have not been indexed. Page numbers in italics refer to illustrations and their captions.

- Abbazia di Santa Croce. See Holy Cross, Abbey of the - Academic Hlinka Guard (Akademická Hlinkova garda), 843, 871, 885
- Action Française. See French Action party
- Administration des Forêts et Voies navigables. See French Administration of Forests and Waterways (Administration des Forêts et Voies navigables)
- AFSC. See American Friends Service Committee
- Agrarian Party, 3
- AJJDC. See American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee
- Akademická Hlinkova garda. See Academic Hlinka Guard
- Albanian Communist Party (PKSh), 492
- Albanian Council of Ministers, 481, 482, 487, 491, 493, 494, 496, 499
- Albanian Fascist Militia, 482, 500
- Albanian Fascist Party (Partia Fashiste Shqiptarë, PFSH), 490, 491
- Albanian Finance Ministry, 499
- Albanian High Commissioner, 490, 496
- Albanian Interior Ministry, 479, 482, 485, 487, 488, 493, 495, 496, 497, 499, 500
- Albanian Office of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 484
- Albanian Red Cross (Kryqi i Kuq Shqiptar, KKSh), 487, 490, 499
- Albanian Territorial Defense Command, 494
- Aleksandër Nevski Cathedral, 35
- Algerian Communist Party, 266
- Algerian National Railway, 268
- Algerian People's Party (Parti Poulair Algérien, PPA), 266
- Algerian Workers Group, 249
- Algiers Office of Manpower and Work, 276
- Algiers Regional Office of Labor, 252, 253, 259
- Allied Control Commission, 83, 619, 620, 672
- Allied Displaced Persons Sub-Commission, 412
- Allied High Command (Înaltul Comandament Aliat), 672, 708
- A.M. Kir. Rednörseg topolyai kiségitőtonchäza. See Royal-Hungarian Transport Firm
- American Committee of Assistance (Comité américain de Secours, CAS), 176
- American Friends Service Committee (AFSC), 111, 118, 124, 156, 169, 172, 190, 191, 192, 193, 198, 205, 214, 241, 242, 255, 262, 271, 287
- American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (AJJDC, JDC), 12, 192, 209, 241, 242, 578, 716, 848, 877, 887
- American Mennonites, 214
- Amitié Chrétien. See French Christian Friendship
- Anafi, Commune of Political Exiles of, 507
- ANSC. See Christian National Student Association
- Apărarea Patriotică. See Patriotic Defense
- Arenai Street synagogue, 376
- Armée secrete (AS). See French Secret Army
- Armeoberkommando Norwegen. See German Army
- Armistice Commission, 531, 615
- Arrow Cross Party (Nyilaskeresztes Párt), 305, 306, 307, 309, 312, 322, 324, 325, 326, 327, 329, 330, 343, 349, 350, 353, 357, 358, 378, 385
- AS. See French Secret Army
- Asociația Națională a Studenților Creștini. See Christian National Student Association
- Assembly of Slovak Republic. See Slovak National Parliament
- Association of the Agricultural Cooperatives of Trikala, 523
- Association of the Friends of Foreign Legion Volunteers, 532
- l'Aumônier Israélite, 124
- Australian Air Force (RAAF), 117, 280
- Austrian forced labor camps for Jews. See German forced labor camps for Jews
- Autonomous Group of Foreign Workers, 241, 252, 292
- Autonomous Group of Ground Anti-Aircraft Forces, 250
- Bačić & Co., 60, 61
- Baiersdorf Old Age Home, 877
- Balta Gendarmes Legion, 616, 726, 754, 790
- Balta Labor Battalion, 608, 747
- Balta Medical Service, 662
- Banca Națională a României. See Romanian National Bank
- Banda Maro. See Maro Gang
- Banderovci brigades, 756
- Baptists, 575, 734, 735, 782, 783
- Baross Association, 358
- Batalion de Granicerio. See Bucharest 3rd Frontier Battalion
- Batalion de Lucru. See Romanian Labor Battalion
- Bavarian Army, 161
- BdO. See German Order Police Commander/Headquarters
- BdS. See German Security Police and the Security Service
- Beauséjour Hotel, 103
- Befehlshaber der Sicherheitspolizei und des Sicherheitsdienstes. See German Security Police and the Security Service
- Beit Midrash school, 820
- Belgian Army, 101, 550
- Belgian Rexists, 171
- Belgrade Einsatzkommando. See Einsatzkommando Belgrade
- Bereichkommando 11 (BK 11), 642, 719, 720
- Bereichkommando 20 (BK 20), 720, 777
- Bereichkommando 26 (BK 26), 592
- Bernáth Iron and Metal Works, 358
- Bertrand de Brioude, 220
- Bevollmächtigter des Auswärtiges Amtes. See Plenipotentiary of the German Foreign Office
- BK 11. See Bereichkommando 11
- BK 20. See Bereichkommando 20
- BK 26. See Bereichkommando 26
- BL. See Romanian Labor Battalion
- Black Legion, 47
- Blackshirts. See Italian Volunteer Militia for National Security
- BNR. See Romanian National Bank
- Bon Pasteur du Faubourg Madeleine, 153
- Bor Copper Mine and Metallurgy (Bor Kupferbergwerke und Hütten AG), 320
- Brannik youth group, 11, 16, 37
- Bratislava Construction Company (Bratislavská stavebná spoločnosť), 867
- Bratislava Police Directorate (Policajné riaditeľstvo v Bratislave), 854
- Bratislavská stavebná spoločnosť. See Bratislava Construction Company
- BRCS. See British Red Cross Society
- Brens Camp, Jewish Social Committee of the, 114
- Brethren, 575, 680, 692, 693
- British Army, 275, 462; Eighth Army, 425, 527, 529, 530, 896, 899, 901
- British Fleet Air Arm (FAA), 280
- British MI-9, 117, 282
- British Parliament, 269
- British Pioneer Corps, 271, 278, 296
- British Red Cross Society (BRCS), 274, 298

- British Royal Air Force (RAF), 30, 103, 238, 274, 280, 527, 618, 793, 900
- British Royal Merchant Navy, 274, 275, 298
- British Royal Naval Reserves (RNR), 298
- British Royal Navy (RN), 260, 275, 280, 282
- British Special Operations Executive (SOE), 117
- British West African Governors' Conference, 298
- Bucharest 3rd Frontier Battalion, 730
- Bucharest People's Tribunal/Court, 582, 589, 600, 601, 612, 614, 617, 632, 643, 647, 659, 670–671, 678, 689, 696, 711, 718, 720, 722, 729, 733, 735, 736, 751, 755, 757, 759, 763, 768, 774, 778, 782, 796, 803, 804, 808, 812, 819
- Budapest, Relief and Rescue Committee of, 375–376
- Bugan and Danišovič engineering, 884
- Bulgarian Army, 2, 3, 29, 30, 37, 41; 1st Construction Company, 18; 1st Labor Battalion, 4, 7, 12, 17, 18n1, 22, 23, 40, 42; 2nd Labor Battalion, 8, 13n20, 28–29, 30nn5–6, 42; 4th Labor Battalion, 33, 34; 5th Labor Battalion, 4, 7, 13n14, 18, 19, 39, 42; 6th Labor Battalion, 8, 12, 25–26, 39, 40; 12th Labor Battalion, 8, 38; 14th group of the 2nd Detachment, 12; Sveti Vrach Detachment, 8
- Bulgarian Bureau of Temporary Labor (Otdel vremenna trudova povinnost, OVTP), 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 19, 26, 29, 33, 37, 40, 42, 43
- Bulgarian Commissariat of Jewish Affairs (Komisarstvo za evreiskite vüprosi, KEV), 2, 7, 8–12, 16, 20–21, 22, 23, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41
- Bulgarian Communist Party, 2
- Bulgarian Council of Ministers, 3, 6, 8, 21, 23, 42
- Bulgarian Interior Ministry, 2, 9, 11, 24, 25, 32, 33
- Bulgarian Ministry of Public Works (Ministerstvo naobshchestvenite sgradi, pütishtata i blagoustroistvoto, OSPB), 2, 5, 6, 19, 22, 26, 28, 33, 34, 37, 40, 42
- Bulgarian Orthodox Church, 2, 11, 28
- Bulgarian Parliament, 34
- Bulgarian security police, 18
- Bulgarian State Security Section of the Police Directorate (DPODS), 2–4, 9, 13, 30
- Bulgarian War Ministry, 26
- Bulgarian Workers Youth League, 3
- Bundesfinanzministerium. See German Federal Ministry of Finance
- Cagoulards. See La Cagoulle
- Căile Ferate Române. See Romanian Railways Company
- Camicie Nere (Blackshirts). See Italian Volunteer Militia for National Security Camps et Centres d'Internement. See French Camps and Internment Centers
- Canadian Air Force (RCAF), 117, 298
- Canadian Merchant Navy, 279
- CAR. See French Committee of Assistance to Refugees
- Caritas (Catholic Relief Services), 66, 209
- Carthusian Order, 205
- CAS. See American Committee of Assistance
- Catholic Relief Services. See Caritas
- CCI. See French Camps and Internment Centers
- CDEC. See Milan Center of Contemporary Jewish Documentation
- CDJ. See French Committee for the Protection of Jews
- Central Bureau of Romanian Jews (Centrala Evreilor din România, CER), 578, 588, 591, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 604–605, 607, 612, 617, 621, 622, 625, 626, 628, 629, 630, 633, 635, 640, 645, 649, 650, 657, 660, 664, 666, 667, 674, 676, 681, 683, 684, 685, 689, 693, 694, 698, 699, 701, 703, 704, 709, 712, 716, 722, 723, 725, 726, 729, 733, 737, 740, 741, 743, 746, 753, 755, 757, 766, 767, 771, 779, 780, 787, 791, 796, 799, 800, 801, 802–803, 804, 806, 807, 810, 811–812, 822, 824–825, 826, 829
- Central Office for State Justice Administrations for the Investigation of National Socialist Crimes (Zentrale Stelle der Landesjustizverwaltungen zur Aufklärung nationalsozialistischer Verbrechen, ZdL), 73
- Central Supplies Warehouse (Depozitul Central de Materiale), 789
- Centrala Evreilor din România. See Central Bureau of Romanian Jews
- Centrála pre riešenie židovského problému na Slovensku. See Slovak Center for the Solution of the Jewish Problem
- Centre d'accueil du Service Social des Étrangers. See French Office of Social Services for Foreigners
- Centre de Propagande de la Révolution Nationale. See French Propaganda Center of the National Revolution
- Centres Scolaires Médicaux de Megève. See Megève, Medical Teaching Institutions of
- Centro di Documentazione Ebraica Contemporanea. See Milan Center of Contemporary Jewish Documentation
- Centrolomy construction, 857
- Centrul de Recrutare Tecuci. See Tecuci Military Recruitment Center
- CER. See Central Bureau of Romanian Jews
- Cercul de Recrutare Cernăuți. See Cernăuți Recruitment Center
- Cercul Teritorial Covurlui. See Covurlui Territorial Circle
- Cernăuți Insane Asylum, 700
- Cernăuți Old Age Home, 700
- Cernăuți Recruitment Center (Cercul de Recrutare Cernăuți), 632
- Četnicki movement. See Chetnik movement
- CFL. See Franc Corps of Liberation
- CFR. See Romanian Railways Company
- CGC. See Chemin de Grande Communication
- CGQJ. See French General Commissariat on the Jewish Question
- CGT. See French General Confederation of Labor
- CGTU. See French Unitary General Confederation of Labor
- Chantiers de la jeunesse Française. See French Obligatory Youth Service Corps
- Chemin de Fer du Maroc Oriental. See Morocco, Eastern Railroads of
- Chemin de Grande Communication (CGC), 212
- Chemins de Fer de la Méditerranée au Niger. See Mediterranean Niger Company
- Chetnik movement, 401
- Chevra Kadisha, 425
- ChGK. See Soviet Extraordinary State Commission (Chrezvychainaia Gosudarstvennaia Komissia)
- Christian and Missionary Alliance (CMA), 274
- Christian National Student Association (Asociația Națională a Studenților Creștini, ANSC), 362
- Christian Welcome Home for Children (Maison d'Accueil Chrétienne pour Enfants, MACE), 214
- CIAF. See Italian Commission of the Armistice with France
- CIMADE. See French Committee to Coordinate Activities for the Displaced
- Circle of Hungarian Fitness Activists (Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre, MTK), 332
- CJF. See French Obligatory Youth Service Corps
- Clairfond Center, 183
- Cluj People's Tribunal. See Kolozsvár People's Tribunal
- CMA. See Christian and Missionary Alliance
- CMO. See Railroads of Eastern Morocco
- COJASOR. See French Jewish Committee for Community Care and Reconstruction
- Collegio Gentile, 423
- Comandamentul Detașamentelor Lucrări Căi Ferate. See Romanian Railway Works Detachments Command
- Comandamentul Etapelor de Est. See Romanian Headquarters Rear Area for the East
- Comandamentul Forțelor de Apărare Interioară a Teritoriului. See Romanian Command Office of the Interior Defense Forces
- Comandamentul Lagărelor de Internați Evrei Galați. See Galați Command of Jewish Internment Camps
- Comando Superiore FF. AA. "Slovenia e Dalmazia." See Superior Command of the Italian Armed Forces, "Slovenia and Dalmatia"
- Combicorn, 730

- Comisia de Ajutorare. See Romanian Autonomous Assistance Committee
- Comité américain de Secours. See American Committee of Assistance
- Comité d'assistance aux Réfugiés. See French Committee of Assistance to Refugees
- Comité de Recrutement de la Main-d'Oeuvre Juive. See French Recruitment Committee of Jewish Labor
- Comité generalde defense de Juifs. See French Committee for the Protection of Jews
- Comité Inter-Mouvements Auprés des Évacués. See French Committee to Coordinate Activities for the Displaced
- Comité Juif d'Action Sociale et de Reconstruction. See French Jewish Committee for Community Care and Reconstruction
- Comité Juif de bienfaisance de Toulouse. See Toulouse, Jewish Charity Committee of
- Comité Social Israélite du Camp de Brens. See Brens Camp, Jewish Social Committee of
- Commissariat Général aux Questions Juives. See French General Commissariat on the Jewish Question
- Commissariat à la Lutte contre le Chômage. See French Commissariat for Unemployment Relief
- commission de criblage. See French Prefecture Screening Committee
- Commission de triage. See French Sorting Commission
- Commission italienne d'armistice avec la France/Commissione Italiana di Armistizio con la Francia. See Italian Commission of the Armistice with France
- Committee to Coordinate Activities for the Displaced (Comité Inter-Mouvements Auprés des Évacués, CIMADE), 114, 156, 177, 198, 209, 214, 236
- Commonwealth War Graves Commission, 279
- Communist Party, 2, 3, 70, 190, 750, 769
- Companies de Travailleurs Étrangers (CTE), 93, 121, 131, 171, 191, 205, 219, 258
- Confédération Générale du Travail. See French General Confederation of Labor
- Confédération Générale du Travail Unitaire. See French Unitary General Confederation of Labor
- Confederazione dei Lavoratori dell'Agricoltura. See Italian Confederation of Agricultural Workers
- Confederazione dei Lavoratori dell'Industria. See Italian Confederation of Industrial Workers
- Conference for Jewish Material Claims against Germany, 292
- Constanța Agricultural Inspectorate, 823
- Constanța Recruitment Center (Cercul Teritorial Constanța), 574
- Contrôle Social des Étrangers. See French Social Control of Foreigners
- Controspionaggio. See Italian Counter Espionage
- Corps Franc de Libération. See Franc Corps of Liberation
- Cosenza Fascist Party, 424
- Covurlui Territorial Circle (Cercul Teritorial Covurlui), 574
- Cowl, The. See La Cagouille
- Crédit Lyonnais, 248
- CRF. See French Red Cross
- Croatian Army (Domobrani), 47, 49, 63
- Croatian Caritas, 66
- Croatian Directorate for Land Reclamation and Water Regulation (Ravnateljstvo melioracijskih i regulacijskih radova), 59
- Croatian Directorate for Public Order and Security (Ravnateljstvo za javni red i sigurnost, RAVSIGUR), 48, 53, 59, 60, 61, 63
- Croatian gendarmerie (Oružništvo), 47
- Croatian German Commissioner. See German Commissioner in Croatia
- Croatian Internal Affairs Ministry (Ministarstvo unutrašnjih poslova, MUP), 54, 59, 60, 67, 68
- Croatian Ministry of Health (Ministarstvo zdravstva, MZ), 53
- Croatian paramilitary, 418
- Croatian Peasant Party (Hrvatska seljačka stranka, HSS), 46
- Croatian Red Cross (Hrvatski Crveni Križ, HCK), 74, 416
- Croatian Revolutionary Movement. See Ustaša regime
- Croatian Revolutionary Organization. See Ustaša regime
- Croix-Rouge Française. See French Red Cross
- CRR. See Romanian Red Cross
- Crucea Roșie din România. See Romanian Red Cross
- C.S. See Italian Counter Espionage
- CSE. See French Social Control of Foreigners
- CSMM. See Megève, Medical Teaching Institutions of
- CTE. See Companies de Travailleurs Étrangers
- Czechoslovak Army, 849
- Czechoslovak National Court (Národný súd), 849
- Danube Airplane Factory (Dunai Repülőgépgyár, DR), 332, 333
- DCA. See French air-defense training center
- Défense contre avion. See French air-defense training center
- DELASEM. See Italian Delegation for the Assistance of Jewish Emigrants
- Delegazione per l'Assistenza degli Emigranti Ebrei. See Italian Delegation for the Assistance of Jewish Emigrants
- Délégué des les Territoires Occupés du Secrétariat Général pour la Police Nationale. See French Delegate of the Occupied Territories of the General Secretariat for the National Police
- Demobilized Foreign Workers Group, 140, 247, 259, 283, 287
- Demobilized Workers Group, 241, 268, 277, 278, 281
- Deployment Command of the Security Police and SD with Army Command Norway, Headquarters Finland. See Einsatzkommando Finnland
- Depozitul Central de Materiale. See Central Supplies Warehouse
- Dessewffy Estate, 364
- Detachment Sveti Vrach, 8
- Detășamentul de Grinzi Beton. See Romanian Concrete Beams Brigade
- Deutsche Jugend. See German Youth
- Deutsche Partei. See German Party
- Deutscher Bevollmächtigter General in Kroatien. See German Commissioner in Croatia
- 2ème Bureau. See Second Bureau of the French General Staff, Intelligence
- DGPN. See French General Directorate of the National Police
- Dgps. See Italian General Directorate of Public Security
- Dgsg. See Italian General Directorate of War Services
- Diderot School, 234, 235
- Diéfthinsi Eidikís Asfaleías tou Krátous. See Greek Directorate of Special Security of the State
- Diracția Drumurilor. See Ovidiopol Road Directorate
- Direction de la Production Industrielle. See French Department of Industrial Production
- Direction des Affaires Politiques. See French Direction of Political Affairs
- Direction des Réfugiés. See French Directorate of Refugees
- Direction Générale de la Police Nationale. See French General Directorate of the National Police
- Direktسيا na politsiata, otdel dŕzhavna sigurnost. See Bulgarian State Security section of the Police Directorate
- Direzione generale della pubblica sicurezza. See Italian General Directorate of Public Security
- Direzione generale servizi di guerra. See Italian General Directorate of War Services
- DK. See Yugoslav State Commission to Investigate Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators
- DNL. See Norwegian Legion
- Dohány Street Synagogue, 312, 324
- Domobrani. See Croatian Army
- DP. See German Party
- DPODS. See Bulgarian State Security section of the Police Directorate
- DR. See Danube Airplane Factory
- Dreher-Haggenmacher brewery, 363
- Državna komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača. See

- Yugoslav State Commission to Investigate Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators
- DTOSGPN. See French Delegate of the Occupied Territories of the General Secretariat for the National Police
- Dunai Repülőgépgyár. See Danube Airplane Factory
- EA. See Greek National Solidarity movement
- EAM. See Greek National Liberation Front
- East Karelia Military Administration Headquarters (Itä-Karjalan Sotilashalinnon Esikunnalle), 86
- Eaux-et-Forêts. See French Water and Forest Department
- Eclaireurs Israélites de France. See French Jewish Scouts
- Éclaireuses et Éclaireurs unionistes de France. See French Unionist Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts
- École Lamartine. See Lamartine School
- EDES, 515
- EES. See Hellenic Red Cross
- ÉÉUF. See French Unionist Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts
- E&F. See French Water and Forest Department
- Egercsehi Coal and Portland Cement Mine, 337
- EG-J. See Einsatzgruppe of the Security Police and Security Service for Yugoslavia
- EIF. See French Jewish Scouts
- Einsatzgruppe C, 799
- Einsatzgruppe D, 575, 592, 594, 608, 631, 637, 642, 675, 691, 698, 715, 756, 768, 769, 795, 827
- Einsatzgruppe G, 680
- Einsatzgruppe H, 849, 871, 882
- Einsatzgruppe of the Security Police and Security Service for Yugoslavia (Einsatzgruppe der Sipo und des SD für Jugoslawien, EG-J), 832, 833
- Einsatzgruppe Russland Süd, 650, 799
- Einsatzkommando 5, 606, 799
- Einsatzkommando Belgrade (Einsatzkommando der Sipo und des SD Belgrad), 832
- Einsatzkommando Finnland (Einsatzkommando der Sicherheitspolizei und des SD beim Armeeeoberkommando Norwegen, Befehlsstelle Finnland), 83, 84
- Einsatzkommando Tunis, 895
- Einsatzkommandos in Norway, 562
- Einsatzstaffel, 71, 72, 73
- ELAS. See Greek People's Liberation Army
- Ellinikós Erythrós Staurós. See Hellenic Red Cross
- Ellinikós Laikós Apeleftherotikós Stratós. See Greek People's Liberation Army
- Empeirikio Asylum of Homeless Children, 510
- Engagés volontaires à la Légion étrangère pour la durée de la guerre. See French Foreign Legion for the duration of the war
- Enlisted Volunteers of Montauban (Amicale des Engagés Volontaires de Montauban), 182
- Ente Sardo di Colonizzazione. See Sardinian Authority for Colonization
- l'entre'Aide Sociale. See French National Mutual Social Aid
- l'équipe Glasberg. See Glasberg team
- ESC. See Sardinian Authority for Colonization
- Estonian General Staff, 80
- Ethiopian Christian Coptic church, 502
- Ethniki Allileggyi. See Greek National Solidarity movement
- Ethnikó Apeleytherotikó Métopo. See Greek National Liberation Front
- Evangelical Teacher-Training Institute (Evangelikus Tanítóképző Intézet), 372
- EVDG. See French Foreign Legion for the duration of the war
- FAA. See British Fleet Air Arm
- Farfa, Benedictine Abbey of, 424
- Fatherland and Liberty (Patria e libertà), 470
- Fatherland Front (Otechestven Front, OF), 3, 4, 23, 43
- Federatia Comunităților Evreiești din România. See Romanian Federation of the Jewish Communities
- Fédération Amicale Engagés Volontaires étrangers. See Association of the Friends of Foreign Legion Volunteers
- Federation of Jewish Communities, 555, 578, 677, 759
- Fédération protestante de France. See French Protestant Federation
- Feldkommandantur. See German field headquarters
- Ferrus & Elambert, 134
- FFI. See French Forces of the Interior
- Finnish Army, 80, 86, 87
- Finnish Communist Party (Suomen Kommunistinen Puolue), 80
- Finnish General Headquarters, 81, 87
- Finnish Security Police (Valtiollinenpoliisi, Valpo), 83, 84
- Finnish Social Democratic Party (Suomen Sosialidemokraattinen Puolue, SDP), 80
- Finnish-Soviet Union Peace and Friendship Society (Suomen-Neuvostoliiton rauhan ja ystävyyden seuran, SNS 1), 87
- First Legion of Indochinese Workers, 101
- First Sisak Partisan Brigade, 49
- FK. See German field headquarters
- Flemish National Union (Vlaamsch Nationaal Verbond, VNV), 171
- Florence Public Security Office, 443
- Forces Françaises de l'Intérieur. See French Forces of the Interior
- Ford automotive plant (Odessa), 730
- Foreign Workers Group, 92, 93, 94, 101, 105, 113, 115, 116, 119, 121, 123, 125, 138, 140, 146, 151, 165, 169, 178, 179, 182, 184, 197, 205, 206, 215, 217, 219, 220, 223, 229, 230, 231, 233, 241, 247, 248, 251, 254, 255, 256, 259, 260, 261, 262, 267, 271, 272, 273, 276, 277, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 290, 291, 294, 295, 296, 297
- Foundation Gigante, 400
- Fourth French Republic. See French Fourth Republic
- Franc Corps of Liberation (Corps Franc de Libération, CFL), 155
- Franco-German Armistice Commission, 139, 281, 531
- Franco-German Commission of Ernst Kundt. See Kundt Commission
- Francs-Tireurs et Partisans Français. See French partisans
- Free French Army, 250, 292
- Freemasons, 835
- Freiwillige Schutzstaffel (FS), 842, 843, 847, 854
- French 37th Aviation Regiment, 256
- French Action (Action Française) party, 95, 139
- French Administration of Forests and Waterways (Administration des Forêts et Voies navigables), 289
- French air-defense training center (Défense contre avion, DCA), 237
- French Army, 107, 116, 119, 121, 165, 168, 171, 181, 205, 212, 234, 241, 249, 250, 253, 258, 259, 263, 273, 278, 283, 284, 285, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 297, 298; 41st Infantry Regiment, 127; 17th French Military Regiment, 119. See also Free French Army
- French Army Service (Service de l'Armée de Terre), 261
- French Attorney General of the Republic (Procureur de la République), 208
- French Camps and Internment Centers (Camps et Centres d'Internement, CCI), 162
- French Children's Aid Society (Oeuvre de Secours aux Enfants, OSE), 105, 154, 155, 169, 175, 214, 533, 578-579
- French Christian Friendship, 175
- French Colonial Army, 284
- French Commissariat for Unemployment Relief (Commissariat à la Lutte contre le Chômage), 119, 133, 165
- French Committee for Assistance to Refugees (Comité d'assistance aux Réfugiés, CAR), 122, 158, 172, 192, 193
- French Committee for the Protection of Jews (Comité generalde defense de Juifs, CDJ), 105
- French Committee to Coordinate Activities for the Displaced (Comité Inter-Mouvements Auprès des Évacués, CIMADE), 114, 156, 177, 198, 209, 214, 236
- French Committee for the Recruitment of Jewish Labor (Comité de Recrutement de la Main-d'Oeuvre Juive), 895, 899, 901, 902
- French Communist Party (Parti communiste français, PCF), 103, 130, 131, 160, 201, 226
- French Defense Ministry. See French War and National Defense Ministry

- French Delegate of the Occupied Territories of the General Secretariat for the National Police (Délégué des les Territoires Occupés du Secrétariat Général pour la Police Nationale, DTOSGPN), 160–161
- French Directorate of Industrial Production (Direction de la Production Industrielle), 251, 259, 267, 272, 276, 285, 286, 288, 289
- French Departmental Union-General Confederation of Labor (L'Union Départementale-Confédération Générale du Travail, UD-CGT), 121
- French Directorate of Political Affairs (Direction des Affaires Politiques), 289
- French Directorate of Refugees (Direction des Réfugiés), 157
- French Forces of the Interior (Forces Françaises de l'Intérieur, FFI), 147, 159, 178, 225, 226
- French Foreign Affairs Ministry, 183
- French Foreign Legion (Légion Étrangère, LE), 131, 145, 241, 247, 248, 249, 250, 262, 263, 264, 266, 269, 270, 271, 276, 277, 284, 287, 291, 293, 294, 296, 900
- French Foreign Legion for the duration of the war (Engagés volontaires à la Légion étrangère pour la durée de la guerre, EVDG), 131, 165, 241, 248, 251, 256, 277, 278, 285, 291, 294
- French Fourth Republic, 145, 148, 156, 168
- French Garde Civil, 177
- French Gaullists. See Gaullists
- French Gendarmerie Nationale (GN), 121, 132, 160, 186, 537
- French General Commissariat on the Jewish Question (Commissariat Général aux Questions Juives, CGQJ), 95, 96, 158
- French General Confederation of Labor (Confédération Générale du Travail, CGT), 130, 139
- French General Directorate of the National Police (Direction Générale de la Police Nationale, DGPN), 93, 128
- French General Inspectorate of Camps (Inspection Générale des Camps, IGC), 93, 168, 172, 200, 211, 232, 237
- French Industrial and Commercial Societies, 226
- French Industrial Production and Labor Ministry (Ministère de la Production Industrielle et du Travail), 93, 241
- French Inspectorate of Concentration Camps. See French General Inspectorate of Camps
- French Interior Ministry. See French/Vichy Interior Ministry
- French Jewish Committee for Community Care and Reconstruction (Comité Juif d'Action Sociale et de Reconstruction, COJASOR), 177
- French Jewish Scouts (Eclaireurs Israélites de France, EIF), 116, 155
- French Jewish Union for Resistance and Mutual Aid (Union des Juifs pour la Résistance et l'Entr'aide, UJRE), 199
- French Justice Ministry, 190
- French Labor and Industrial Production Ministry, 119
- French Labor Ministry, 101, 158, 159, 207, 230
- French Left, 151, 171
- French Legion of Veterans (Legion française des combattants, LFC), 123, 262
- French militia, 179
- French Ministry of Prisoners of War, Deportees, and Refugees (Ministère des Prisonniers de guerre, Déportés et Réfugiés), 221
- French Mobile Police (Garde-Mobile), 132, 234
- French Mobile Reserve Group (Groupe Mobile de Réserve, GMR), 103, 116, 139, 140, 169
- French National Defense Ministry. See French War and National Defense Ministry
- French National Movement against Racism (Mouvement National contre le Racisme, MNCR), 177
- French National Mutual Social Aid (l'entre'Aide Sociale), 159
- French National Police (Sûreté Nationale), 206, 207, 214, 534
- French National Relief (Secours Nationale), 177, 237
- French Naval Construction Service, 258
- French Navy, 241, 257
- French Obligatory Labor Service (Service du Travail Obligatoire, STO), 92, 116, 153, 171, 186, 203
- French Obligatory Youth Service Corps (Chantiers de la jeunesse Française, CJF), 133, 256
- French Office of Social Services for Foreigners (Centre d'accueil du Service Social des Étrangers, SSE), 105, 116, 124, 125, 133, 158, 184, 210
- French Office of the Social Control of Foreigners (Service du Contrôle Social des Étrangers, SSCE), 103, 104, 133
- French Parliament, 90
- French partisans (Francs-Tireurs et Partisans Français, FTPF), 156
- French police. See French National Police; French/Vichy police
- French Police of Territory and Foreigners (Police du Territoire et des Étrangers), 94
- French Popular Front (Front Populaire), 90, 144
- French Popular Party (Parti Populaire Français, PPF), 266
- French Prefecture Screening Committee (commission de criblage), 183
- French Propaganda Center of the National Revolution (Centre de Propagande de la Révolution Nationale), 90
- French Protestant Federation (Fédération protestante de France), 169
- French Provisional Government (Gouvernement Provisoire), 93, 94, 159
- French Public Health Ministry, 197, 198
- French Reconstruction Ministry, 231
- French Red Cross (Croix-Rouge Française, CRF), 111, 114, 140, 153, 163, 192, 193, 203, 209, 222, 236, 237, 249
- French Resistance, 92, 116, 123, 135, 137, 155, 160, 178, 190, 201, 212, 214, 216, 231, 236, 536
- French Saharan Army, 285
- French Second Bureau of General Staff, Intelligence. See Second Bureau of the French General Staff, Intelligence
- French Secret Army (Armée secrète, AS), 232
- French Social Control of Foreigners (Contrôle Social des Étrangers, CSE), 103, 158, 184, 207, 230
- French Sorting Commission (Commission de triage), 206
- French Third Republic, 90, 91, 93, 112, 115, 143, 144, 171, 181, 234, 250, 26
- French Unionist Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts (ÉÉUF), 155
- French Unitary General Confederation of Labor (Confédération Générale du Travail Unitaire, CGTU), 102
- French War and National Defense Ministry, 93, 101, 127, 131, 164, 185, 221
- French Water and Forest Department (Eaux-et-Forêts, E&F), 93, 181, 219, 222
- French Workers' and Peasants' Party (Parti ouvrier et paysan français, POPF), 103
- French/Vichy Interior Ministry, 93, 101, 103, 104, 107, 109, 116, 117, 120, 122, 124, 129, 133, 137, 143, 146, 148, 167, 171, 183, 188, 189, 198, 200, 201, 206, 207, 212, 213, 221, 223, 225, 228, 234, 241
- French/Vichy police, 91, 92, 95, 96, 101, 103, 112, 114, 133, 134, 293
- Freyer company, 864, 865
- Front Populaire. See French Popular Front
- FS. See Freiwillige Schutzstaffel
- FTPF. See French partisans
- Furnir Deta, 793
- GAFTA. See Autonomous Group of Ground Anti-Aircraft Forces
- Galați Command of Jewish Internment Camps (Comandamentul Lagărelor de Internați Evrei Galați), 679
- Galați Military Tribunal, 680
- Garda de Fier. See Romanian Iron Guard
- Garde-Mobile. See French mobile police
- Garibaldi partisan brigade, 420
- Gaullists, 137, 140, 190, 280, 535, 536
- Geheime Feldpolizei. See German Secret Military Police
- Geheime Staatspolizei. See German Secret State Police
- General Delegation of the French Government in the Occupied Territories, 183
- General Plenipotentiary for the Economy in Serbia (Generalbevollmächtigter für die Wirtschaft in Serbien), 832
- General Union of French Jews (Union Générale des Israélites de France,

- UGIF), 104, 124, 125, 138, 154, 169, 192, 207, 209, 210, 220, 232
- Generalbevollmächtigter für die Wirtschaft in Serbien. See General Plenipotentiary for the Economy in Serbia
- Génie Artillerie. See Artillery Engineering Corps
- German Afrika Korps, 896
- German Armed Forces. See High Command of the German Armed Forces
- German Army, 49, 82, 234, 237, 281, 318, 362, 400, 437, 472, 572, 603, 615, 652, 680, 710, 732, 738, 750, 759, 760, 762, 766, 768, 769, 770, 771, 805, 816, 820, 821, 824, 825, 827, 828, 830, 849, 859, 865, 866, 869; Armeeeoberkommando (AOK), 20, 82; Armeeeoberkommando (AOK) Lappland, 82; Armeeeoberkommando (AOK) Norwegen, 80, 82, 83; Army Group E, 49; Eleventh Army, 575, 602; Fifth Panzer Army, 895; XC Army Corps, 894
- German Command Office of the Security Police and Security Service (Kommandeur der Sicherheitspolizei und des Sicherheitsdienstes, KdS), 532, 849
- German Commissioner in Croatia (Deutscher Bevollmächtigter General in Kroatien), 73
- German Embassy (France), 95, 183
- German Federal Ministry of Finance (Bundesfinanzministerium), 292
- German field headquarters (Feldkommandantur, FK), 92, 152, 153, 157, 161, 177, 179, 186, 202, 203, 215–216, 234
- German forced labor camps for Jews (Zwangsarbeitslager für Juden, ZALfJ), 316, 807
- German Foreign Office in Tunisia, 895
- German Order Police (Ordnungspolizei, Orpo), 833
- German Order Police Commander/Headquarters (Befehlshaber der Ordnungspolizei, BdO), 835
- German Party (Deutsch Partei, DP), 842, 843, 871, 885
- German Secret Military Police (Geheime Feldpolizei, GFP), 82
- German Secret State Police (Geheime Staatspolizei, Gestapo), 104, 105, 125, 144, 169, 179, 196, 318, 319, 328, 330, 346, 361, 362, 378, 496, 534, 561, 567, 602, 725, 833
- German Security Police (Sicherheitspolizei, Sipo), 49, 82, 83, 95, 306, 346, 477, 528, 562, 833, 895
- German Security Police and the Security Service (Sicherheitspolizei Sicherheitsdienst, Sipo-SD), 83, 84, 95, 532, 562, 832, 833, 835, 839
- German Security Police and Security Commander/Headquarters (Befehlshaber der Sicherheitspolizei und des Sicherheitsdienstes, BdS), 561, 562
- German Social Democrats, 173
- German Youth, 843
- Gestapo. See German Secret State Police
- GFP. See German Secret Military Police
- Gittonists, 103
- Glasberg team, 122
- GMR. See French Mobile Reserve Group
- GN. See French Gendarmerie Nationale
- Gnome-et-Rhône factory, 188
- Gnr. See Italian National Republican Guard
- Goita Agricultural Office (Serviciul Agricol), 682
- Goita Praetor's Office (Pretura), 683
- Gouvernement Provisoire. See French Provisional Government
- GPTEs. See Palestinian Foreign Workers Group
- Gramsci partisan brigade, 420
- Greek Army, 24, 516, 518, 521
- Greek Communist Party (Kommounistikó Kómma Elládas, KKE), 506, 507, 513, 515, 517, 522
- Greek Directorate of Special Security of the State (Diéfhinsi Eidikís Asfaleías tou Krátous), 505
- Greek Interior Ministry, 505
- Greek National Liberation Front (Ethnikó Apeleytherotikó Métopo, EAM), 507, 513, 514, 515, 517, 520, 522, 525
- Greek National Solidarity movement (Ethniki Allileggyi, EA), 505, 506, 513, 516, 518, 520, 522, 526
- Greek People's Liberation Army (Ellinikós Laikós Apeleftherotikós Stratós, ELAS), 506, 508, 516, 520, 522
- Greek Red Cross. See Hellenic Red Cross
- Greek Sub-Ministry of Public Security, 505
- Grenadiers of Sardinia. See under Italian Army
- Group of Algerian workers. See Algerian Workers Group
- Group of Jewish workers. See Jewish Workers Group
- Groupe Autonome des Forces Terrestres Antiaériennes. See Group of Ground Anti-Aircraft Forces
- Groupe Mobile de Réserve. See French Mobile Reserve Group
- Groupement des Travailleurs Algériens (GTA). See Algerian Workers Group
- Groupement des Travailleurs Démobilisés (GTDs). See Demobilized Workers Group
- Groupement des Travailleurs Étrangers (GTEs). See Foreign Workers Group
- Groupement des Travailleurs Étrangers Autonome (GTEAs). See Autonomous Group of Foreign Workers
- Groupement des Travailleurs Étrangers Démobilisés (GTEDs). See Demobilized Foreign Workers Group
- Groupement Palestiniens des Travailleurs Étrangers (GPTEs). See Palestinian Foreign Workers Group
- Groupe de Travailleurs Israélites (GTI). See Jewish Workers Group
- GTA. See Algerian Workers Group
- GTDs. See Demobilized Workers Group
- GTEAs. See Autonomous Group of Foreign Workers
- GTEDs. See Demobilized Foreign Workers Group
- GTEs. See Foreign Workers Group
- GTI. See Jewish Workers Group
- Guardia Nazionale Repubblicana. See Italian National Republican Guard
- Hali Market, 35
- Hashomer Hatzair, 328, 882
- Haute-Vienne Department of Bridges and Roads (Service des Ponts et Chaussées de la Haute-Vienne), 221, 224
- HCK. See Croatian Red Cross
- Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society (HIAS), 169
- Hebrew Immigration/Jewish Colonisation Association/Emig-Direkt (HICEM), 169, 218, 241, 265, 275, 872
- Hellenic Red Cross (Ellinikós Erythros Staurós, EES), 505, 506, 507, 511, 516, 517, 518, 520, 526
- HG. See Hlinka Guard
- HIAS. See Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society
- HICEM. See Hebrew Immigration/Jewish Colonisation Association/Emig-Direkt
- High Command of the German Armed Forces (Oberkommando der Wehrmacht, OKW), 80, 561. See also Wehrmacht
- Higher SS and Police Leader (Höherer SS- und Polizeiführer, HSSPF), 561
- Hirden. See Norwegian paramilitary
- Hitler Youth, 5, 842
- Hlinka Guard (Hlinkova garda, HG), 842, 843, 844, 847, 848, 849, 854, 857, 858, 864, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 874, 876, 877, 879, 881, 882, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891. See also Academic Hlinka Guard
- Hlinka Slovak People's Party (Hlinkova slovenská ľudová strana, HSES), 842, 843, 844, 845, 848, 849, 863, 871, 885
- Hlinka Youth (Hlinkova mládež), 842
- Hlinkova garda. See Hlinka Guard
- Hlinkova mládež. See Hlinka Youth
- Hlinkova slovenská ľudová strana. See Hlinka Slovak People's Party
- Höherer SS- und Polizeiführer. See Higher SS and Police Leader
- Holy Cross, Abbey of (Abbazia di Santa Croce), 458
- Holy See, 847, 848
- Honvéd. See Hungarian Army
- HrNa. See Hrvatski narod
- Hrvatska revolucionarna organizacija. See Ustaša regime
- Hrvatska seljačka stranka. See Croatian Peasant Party
- Hrvatski Crveni Križ. See Croatian Red Cross
- Hrvatski narod (HrNa), 59
- Hrvatski revolucionarni pokret. See Ustaša regime
- HSES. See Hlinka Slovak People's Party
- HSS. See Croatian Peasant Party
- HSSPF. See Higher SS and Police Leader
- HSSPF Norway, 561, 562
- Hungarian Academic Hlinka Guard. See Academic Hlinka Guard

- Hungarian Army (Honvéd), 304, 305, 306, 320, 321, 322, 362
 Hungarian Arrow Cross Party. See Arrow Cross Party
 Hungarian Center of National Defense, 330
 Hungarian Christian National Student Association. See Christian National Student Association
 Hungarian Council of Ministers, 303, 304, 307, 308, 384
 Hungarian Defense Ministry, 303, 304, 305, 306, 320, 329
 Hungarian Gendarmerie, 306, 315
 Hungarian Interior Ministry, 303, 306–307, 308, 310, 312, 316, 318, 323, 324, 329, 335, 345, 348, 357, 368, 369, 371
 Hungarian Jews, Benevolent Society of, 368
 Hungarian Labor Battalions, 304, 320, 346, 349, 355, 357, 358, 362, 366
 Hungarian labor camps for Jews (ZALDJ), 359
 Hungarian National Center for Secondary Sports Clubs (Középiskolai Sportkörök Országos Központja, KISOK), 326–327
 Hungarian National Central Alien Control Office (Külföldiek Ellenőrző Országos Központi Hatóság, KEOKH), 338, 368
 Hungarian National Central Authority for Controlling Foreigners, 332
 Hungarian National Council of People's Courts (Népbíróságok Országos Tanácsa, NOT), 343
 Hungarian National Rabbinical Institute (Országos Rabbiképző Intézet, ORI), 303, 330, 346
 Hungarian Party, 842, 843
 Hungarian Public Kitchen of the Orthodox Jewish community, 338
 Hungarian Public Labor Service (A Közérdekű Munkaszolgálat Országos Felügyelője, KMOF), 303, 316, 320, 341, 344, 354, 362, 363, 366, 368, 374, 376, 378, 379, 383, 387
 Hungarian Socialist Workers Party, 326
 Hungarian State Railway, 366
 Iqşi Recruitment Center, 574
 ICRC. See International Committee of the Red Cross
 IEQJ. See Institute for the Study of the Jewish Question
 IGC. See French General Inspectorate of Camps
 IKL. See SS Inspectorate of Concentration Camps
 IMIs. See Italian Military Internees
 Imperial War Museum (IWM), 282
 IMT. See International Military Tribunal
 Întalul Comandament Aliat. See Allied High Command
 Ing. Danisovič, 866
 Ing. Dohnányi, 864, 865
 Ing. Gustáv Hamburger, 891
 Ing. Kruliš, 864, 865
 Ing. Lozovský and Štefanec, 855, 856, 859, 860, 861
 Ing. Petri, 859, 866
 Inochentists, 575, 680, 734, 735, 768
 Inspection académique de Maine-et-Loire. See Maine-et-Loire, Academic Inspectorate Inspection Générale des Camps. See French General Inspectorate of Camps
 Inspectoratul Agricol Constanța. See Constanța Agricultural Inspectorate
 Inspectoratul General al Taberelorși Coloanelor de Muncă. See Romanian General Inspectorate of Labor Camps and Brigades
 Inspektion der Konzentrationslager. See SS Inspectorate of Concentration Camps
 Institut d'Étude des Questions Juives. See Institute for the Study of the Jewish Question
 Institute for the Study of the Jewish Question (Institut d'Étude des Questions Juives, IEQJ), 95
 Intendenza Civile delle Terre Annesse. See Italian Civil Intendancy of the Annexed Lands
 Inter-Allied Reparations Agency, 50–51
 International Brigade (Interbrigade), 18, 107, 117, 118, 150, 197, 211, 264, 269, 278, 296–297
 International Commission, 62
 International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), 31, 39, 62, 64, 66, 113, 156, 249, 250, 251, 252, 254, 255, 256, 259, 265, 267, 272, 276, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 294, 296, 326, 391, 403, 406, 412, 413, 414, 416, 420, 422, 437, 442, 447, 451, 452, 457, 458, 466, 467, 476, 482, 487, 490, 494, 505, 510, 513, 518, 520, 522, 541, 598, 619, 629, 708, 753, 794, 796, 798
 International League against Antisemitism (Ligue internationale contre l'antisemitisme, LICA), 253, 265, 266
 International Military Tribunal (IMT), 356
 International Solidarity of Anti-Fascists (Solidarité internationale antifasciste, SIA), 266
 International Tracing Service (ITS), 70, 73, 74, 75, 92, 111, 118, 136, 152, 190, 217, 218, 219, 229, 238, 260, 261, 281, 296, 315, 327, 328, 334, 359, 402, 408, 416, 417, 433, 434, 437, 438, 459, 471, 474, 476, 482, 487, 531, 532, 535, 536, 537, 541, 555, 557, 788, 862
 Iron Guard (Garda de Fier). See Romanian Iron Guard
 Israelita Siketnémak Országos Intézete. See Jewish National Institute for the Deaf and Dumb l'Istituto Elioterapico Merello. See Merello Heliotherapeutic Institute
 Itä-Karjalan Sotilashallinnon Esikunnalle. See East Karelia Military Administration Headquarters
 Italian Africa, Police of (Polizia dell' Africa Italiana, PAI), 528, 530
 Italian Anti-Communist Voluntary Militias (MVAC), 541
 Italian Army, 43, 47, 55, 57, 58, 65, 393, 400, 410, 413, 422, 427, 430, 447, 450, 453, 454, 471, 479, 482, 484, 490, 491, 498, 500, 516, 518, 531, 540, 545, 548, 553, 555, 895, 896, 901; Second Army, 391, 416, 422, 427, 432, 476, 540, 543, 544, 545, 546, 548, 549, 550, 552, 553, 555; Fourth Army, 531, 532, 535, 536, 537; Ninth Army, 482, 540; Eleventh Army, 519; V Army Corps, 544, 554, 555; VI Army Corps, 468, 545, 548, 549, 551, 553; VIII Army Corps, 515; XI Army Corps, 422; XIII Army Corps, 409; XVIII Army Corps, 543, 549, 556; XXVI Army Corps, 515; 1st Mountain "Superga" Division, 899, 901–902; 21st Infantry Division, "Sardinia Grenadiers," 432, 550
 Italian Army Engineers, 481
 Italian Civil Intendancy of the Annexed Lands (Intendenza Civile delle Terre Annesse), 437
 Italian Commission of the Armistice with France (Commission italienne d'armistice avec la France/Commissione Italiana di Armistizio con la Francia, CIAF), 533, 537
 Italian Communist Party (Partito Comunista Italiano, PCI or PCd'I), 131
 Italian Confederation of Agricultural Workers (Confederazione dei Lavoratori dell'Agricoltura), 557
 Italian Confederation of Industrial Workers (Confederazione dei Lavoratori dell'Industria), 557
 Italian Council of Ministers, 409
 Italian Counter Espionage (Controspionaggio, C.S.), 512
 Italian Customs Office, 435
 Italian Delegation for the Assistance of Jewish Emigrants (Delegazione per l'Assistenza degli Emigranti Ebrei, DELASEM), 402, 404, 405, 406, 411, 454, 484, 491, 496, 547
 Italian Directorate of Fascist Women, 463
 Italian Education Ministry, 400
 Italian Foreign Affairs Ministry (Ministero degli Affari Esteri), 436, 454, 484, 487
 Italian General Directorate of Public Security (Direzione generale della pubblica sicurezza, Dgps), 424, 439, 449
 Italian General Directorate of War Services (Direzione generale servizi di guerra, Dgsg), 426, 439
 Italian Interior Ministry, 390, 391, 399, 400, 401, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 420, 422, 423, 424, 428, 429, 431, 432, 434, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 473, 475, 479, 482, 487, 544, 552, 557
 Italian Military Intelligence Service (Servizio Informazioni Militare, SIM), 532, 535
 Italian Military Internees (Italienische Militärinternierte, IMIs), 320, 575
 Italian Military Mission, 647
 Italian National Fascist Party (Partito Nazionale Fascista, PNF), 423

- Italian National Republican Guard (Guardia Nazionale Repubblicana, Gnr), 402, 404, 407, 421, 445, 460, 461, 471, 474
- Italian Navy, 400
- Italian Office of the Prime Minister (Presidenza del Consiglio dei ministri), 468
- Italian Organization for Vigilance and Repression of Anti-Fascism (Organizzazione Vigilanza Repressione Antifascismo, OVRA), 452, 531, 532, 537
- Italian Public Security (Pubblica Sicurezza), 390, 399, 401, 402, 403, 404, 407, 409, 410, 414, 424, 431, 434, 441, 443, 449, 450, 452, 456, 459, 466
- Italian Red Cross (Croce Rossa Italiana, CRI), 391, 392, 406, 413, 415, 416, 417, 419, 422, 428, 443, 451, 454, 458, 459, 463, 487, 505, 526
- Italian Royal General Lieutenancy (Regia Luogotenenza Generale, RLG), 479, 482, 484, 487, 493, 494, 496, 499, 500
- Italian Social Democratic Party (PSI), 470
- Italian Social Republic (Repubblica Sociale Italiana, RSI), 392, 393, 403, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 411, 412, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 425, 428, 430, 431, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 451, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 464, 472, 474, 477, 534, 647
- Italian Society for Construction and Public Works (Società Italiana Costruzioni e Lavori Pubblici, SICELP), 501
- Italian Special Court for the Defense of the State (Tribunale Speciale per la Difesa dello Stato), 450
- Italian Superior Command. See Superior Command FF. AA. Albania; Superior Command of the Italian Armed Forces, "Slovenia and Dalmatia"
- Italian Volunteer Militia for National Security (Milizia Volontaria per la Sicurezza Nazionale, MVSN), 391, 392, 403, 425, 427, 450, 451, 456, 457, 459, 471, 472, 473, 554
- Italian War Ministry, 390, 442, 449, 462
- Italienische Militärinternierte. See Italian Military Internees
- ITS. See International Tracing Service
- IWM. See Imperial War Museum
- Jasenovac Assembly Camps, Central Command Post for, 63
- JDC. See American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee
- Jedinstveni narodnoslobodilački. See Unitary People's Liberation Front
- Jehovah's Witnesses, 304, 320, 359, 382, 575, 734, 735
- Jewish Agency, 229, 578
- Jewish National Institute for the Deaf and Dumb (Israelita Siketnémak Országos Intézete), 325
- Jewish Social Work (Oeuvres sociales israélites), 220
- Jewish Workers Group, 249, 297
- JNOF. See Unitary People's Liberation Front
- Jó Pásztor Bizottság. See Protestants of Jewish Origin of the Good Shepherd Committee
- Joint, the. See American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee
- JSU. See Unified Socialist Youth
- Juventudes Socialistas Unificadas. See Unified Socialist Youth
- Kaposvár People's Tribunal, 343
- KdS. See German Command Office of the Security Police and Security Service
- KEOKH. See Hungarian National Central Alien Control Office
- KEV. See Bulgarian Commissariat of Jewish Affairs
- KGB. See Soviet Committee for State Security
- KISOK. See Hungarian National Center for Secondary Sports Clubs
- KKE. See Greek Communist Party
- KKSH. See Albanian Red Cross
- Klein Brickworks, 378
- KMOF. See Hungarian Public Labor Service
- Kolozsvár People's Tribunal, 320, 352, 363, 371, 373, 374, 762
- Komisarstvo za evrejskite vüprosi. See Bulgarian Commissariat of Jewish Affairs
- Komitet gosudarstvennoi bezopasnosti (KGB). See Soviet Committee for State Security
- Kommandeur der Sicherheitspolizei und des Sicherheitsdienstes. See German Command Office of the Security Police and Security Service
- Kommunistikó Kómma Elládas. See Greek Communist Party
- Komunistická strana Slovenska. See Slovak Communist Party
- König Glass Factory, 358
- Konštruktíva company, 864, 865
- Kovpak Partisans, 829
- Középiszkolai Sportkörök Országos Központja. See Hungarian National Center for Secondary Sports Clubs
- Közérdekű Munkaszolgálat Országos Felügyelője. See Hungarian Public Labor Service
- Krajinský úrad. See Slovak Country Office
- Kryqi i Kuq Shqiptar. See Albanian Red Cross
- KSS. See Slovak Communist Party
- KÚ. See Slovak Country Office
- Külföldieket Ellenőrző Országos Központi Hatóság. See Hungarian National Central Alien Control Office
- Kundt Commission, 91, 119, 136, 168, 171, 173, 174, 175, 206, 211
- La Cagouille, 139
- Ladislav Hits engineering, 867, 868, 880
- Landeschützbataillon 726, 172
- Lanna construction, 856, 870, 878
- LE. See French Foreign Legion
- Légion de Gendarmerie, 134
- Légion Étrangère. See French Foreign Legion
- Legion française des combattants. See French Legion of Veterans
- Legion of the Archangel Michael (Legiunea Arhanghelului Mihail), 570, 618, 781, 819
- Legionary Order Service (Service d'Ordre Légionnaire), 116, 249, 258
- Legionnaires, 116, 128, 285, 291, 296, 474
- Legiunea Arhanghelului Mihail. See Legion of the Archangel Michael
- Legiunea de Jandarmi. See Romanian Gendarmes Legion
- LFC. See French Legion of Veterans
- LICA. See International League against Antisemitism
- Ligue internationale contre l'antisémitisme. See International League against Antisemitism
- Lipoveni. See Old Believers
- Loffredo Orphanage, 444
- Ludáks. See Hlinka Slovak People's Party
- Luftwaffe, 133, 505, 562, 621
- MACE. See Christian Welcome Home for Children
- Magdelene's Hospice for the Poor (Ospizio dei Poveri della Maddalena), 402
- Magyar Izraeliták Pártfogó Irodája. See Welfare Bureau of Hungarian Jews
- Magyar Párt. See Hungarian Party
- Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre. See Circle of Hungarian Fitness Activists
- MAI. See Romanian Ministry of Internal Affairs
- Maine-et-Loire Academic Inspectorate, 186
- Maison d'Accueil Chrétienne pour Enfants. See Christian Welcome Home for Children
- Makabi Hacair, 882
- Manfréd Weiss Works, 331, 332
- Marele Cartier General. See Romanian Army General Headquarters
- Marele Stat Major. See Romanian Army General Staff
- Marienheim monastery, 792
- Maro Gang (Banda Maro), 43
- Marxists, 507
- Masons. See Freemasons
- Mattéoli Commission. See Study Commission on the Spoliation of the Jews of France
- Mayer Machine Works, 379, 380
- MCG. See Romanian Army General Headquarters
- MDVP. See Slovak Transportation and Public Works Ministry
- Mediterranean Niger Company (Chemins de Fer de la Méditerranée au Niger, MN), 247, 251, 254, 259, 260, 273, 277, 286, 289, 296, 297
- Megève, Medical Teaching Institutions of (Centres Scolaires Médicaux de Megève, CSMM), 534

- Mennonites, 214
 Merello Heliotherapeutic Institute (l'Istituto Elioterapico Merello), 407
 Mer-Niger Company. See Mediterranean Niger Company
 Mestský športový klub Žilina. See Municipal Sports Club Žilina
 Mezey Lumberyard, 362
 Mihai Viteazul Guard Regiment, 618
 Milan Center of Contemporary Jewish Documentation (Centro di Documentazione Ebraica Contemporanea, CDEC), 404
 Milice. See French militia
 Milizia volontaria anticomunista. See Italian anti-communist voluntary militias
 Milizia volontaria per la Sicurezza Nazionale. See Italian Volunteer Militia for National Security
 Ministarstvo unutrašnjih poslova. See Croatian Internal Affairs Ministry
 Ministarstvo zdravstva. See Croatian Ministry of Health
 Ministère de la Production Industrielle et du Travail. See French Industrial Production and Labor Ministry
 Ministère des Prisonniers de guerre, Déportés et Réfugiés. See French Ministry of Prisoners of War, Deportees, and Refugees
 Ministero degli Affari Esteri. See Italian Foreign Affairs Ministry
 Ministerstvo dopravy a verejných prác. See Slovak Transportation and Public Works Ministry
 Ministerstvo naobšttestvenite sgradi, pütishtata i blagoustroivstvo. See Bulgarian Ministry of Public Works
 Ministerstvo národnej obrany. See Slovak National Defense Ministry
 Ministerstvo Vnútra. See Slovak Interior Ministry
 Ministerstvo zahraničných vecí. See Slovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs
 Ministerul Afacerilor Interne. See Romanian Ministry of Internal Affairs
 Ministerul Apărării Naționale. See Romanian National Defense Ministry
 MIPI. See Welfare Bureau of Hungarian Jews
 Mission d'Étude sur la Spoliation des Juifs de France, Mission Mattéoli. See Study Commission on the Spoliation of the Jews of France—the Mattéoli Commission
 MN Company. See Mediterranean Niger Company
 MNCR. See French National Movement against Racism
 MNO. See Slovak National Defense Ministry
 Moghilev Gendarmes Legion, 618, 625, 713–714, 715, 721, 752, 756, 760, 799, 804
 Moghilev Jewish Labor Office, 630, 644
 Moldavian Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic, 608
 Molokans, 575
 Montauban, Friends of Enlisted Volunteers (Amicale des Engagés Volontaires de Montauban), 182
 Moravod. See Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative
 Moroccan Sharpshooters, 2nd Regiment (Regiment de tirailleurs marocains, 2nd RTM), 284
 Moroccan Society of the Coal Mines at Djerrada (Société Chérifiennes Charbonnages de Djérada), 248
 Morocco, Eastern Railroads of, 241, 297
 Mouvement National contre le Racisme. See French National Movement against Racism
 Mpoumpoulina, 509
 MSM. See Romanian Army General Staff
 MTK. See Circle of Hungarian Fitness Activists
 Municipal Sports Club Žilina (Mestský športový klub Žilina), 890
 MUP. See Croatian Internal Affairs Ministry
 MV. See Slovak Interior Ministry
 MVAC. See Italian Anti-Communist Voluntary Militias
 MVSN. See Italian Volunteer Militia for National Security
 MZ. See Croatian Ministry of Health
 MZV. See Slovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs
 Nalchik College of Medicine, 662
 Nancy Justice Court, 137
 Nansenhjelpen, 567
Narodne novine, 62
 Narodnooslohdilacky pokret. See Yugoslav National Liberation Movement
 Národný súd. See Czechoslovak National Court
 Narodnyi komissariat vnutrennikh del. See Romanian People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs
 Nasjonal Samling. See Norwegian National Unity party
 National Bank of Romania. See Romanian National Bank
 National Society of the Red Cross of Romania (Societatea Națională de Cruce Roșie din România, SNCRR), 610, 612
 Nazi Storm Troopers (Sturmabteilungen, SA), 271, 560
 Neo-Destour Party. See Tunisian Neo-Destour Party
 Népbírószágok Országos Tanácsa. See Hungarian National Council of People's Courts
 New Constitutional Party of Tunisia. See Tunisian Neo-Destour Party
 NKVD. See Romanian People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs
 NOP. See Yugoslav National Liberation Movement
 Norwegian Legion (Den Norske Legion), 560
 Norwegian National Unity party (Nasjonal Samling, NS), 560, 561, 565, 566
 Norwegian paramilitary (Hirden), 561, 565, 566
 Norwegian Parliament (Storting), 560
 Norwegian Red Cross, 565
 Norwegian Reichskommissariat (Reichskommissariat Norway), 560, 561, 566
 Norwegian State Police (Statspolitiet, Stapo), 561, 565, 566, 567
 Norwegian Supreme Court, 566
 NOT. See Hungarian National Council of People's Courts
 NS. See Norwegian National Unity party
 Nyilas. See Arrow Cross Party
 Nyilaskeresztes Párt. See Arrow Cross Party
 OBE. See Order of the British Empire
 Oberkommando der Wehrmacht. See High Command of the German Armed Forces
 Obschestvo remeslennogo i zemledel'cheskogo truda. See Society for Handicrafts and Agricultural Work
 Ocolul Silvic. See Ovidiopol Forestry Department
 Odeljenje specijalne policije. See Serbian Special Police
 Odessa 590th Infantry Battalion, 730
 Odessa Agricultural University, 730
 Odessa Office of Labor, 730
 Odessa Orthodox Church Mission Office, 730
 Oeuvre de Secours aux Enfants. See French Children's Aid Society
 Oeuvres sociales israélites. See Jewish Social Work
 OF. See Fatherland Front
 Office of Economic Aryanization, 240
 Office of the Military Government for Germany, United States (OMGUS), 409
 Ohel David Home and Shelter, 877
 OKW. See High Command of the German Armed Forces
 Old Believers, 507, 624
 Old Calendar Believers (Stiliști), 575, 680, 768
 Omada Symviōsēs Politikōn Exoristōn Anaphēs. See Anafi, Commune of Political Exiles of Omada Symviōsēs Politikōn Exoristōn Pholegandrou. See Pholegandos, Commune of the Political Exiles of OMGUS. See Office of the Military Government for Germany, United States
 Order of the British Empire (OBE), 532
 Order Police (Ordnungspolizei, Orpo), 833, 835
 Ordine di Nostra Signora della Misericordia. See Our Lady of Mercy, Order of Ordnungspolizei. See German Order Police
 Organisation Todt (OT), 92, 93, 106, 114, 119, 138, 179, 205, 216, 320, 321, 477, 562, 598, 637, 650, 699, 700, 701, 731, 792, 799
 Organizația Sionistă. See Romanian Zionist Organization
 Organizzazione Vigilanza Repressione Antifascismo. See Italian Organization

- for Vigilance and Repression of Anti-Fascism
- ORI. See Hungarian National Rabbinical Institute
- Orpo. See German Order Police
- Országos Rabbiképző Intézet. See Hungarian National Rabbinical Institute
- ORT. See Society for Handicrafts and Agricultural Work
- Oružništvo. See Croatian gendarmerie
- OSE. See French Children's Aid Society
- Oslobodilna Fronta. See Slovenian Liberation Front
- OSP. See Serbian Special Police
- OSPB. See Bulgarian Ministry of Public Works (Ministerstvo na obshchestvenite sgradi, pūitshitata i blagoustroistvoto, OSPB)
- OSPEA. See Anafi, Commune of Political Exiles of
- OSPEPh. See Pholegandos, Commune of the Political Exiles of
- Ospizio dei Poveri della Maddalena. See Magdelene's Hospice for the Poor
- OT. See Organisation Todt
- Otdel vremenna trudova povinnost. See Bulgarian Bureau of Temporary Labor
- Otechestven Front. See Fatherland Front
- Our Lady of Mercy, Order of, 423
- Ovidiopol Forestry Department (Ocolul Silvic), 740
- Ovidiopol Road Directorate (Direcția Drumurilor), 740
- OVRA. See Italian Organization for Vigilance and Repression of Anti-Fascism
- OVTP. See Bulgarian Bureau of Temporary Labor
- PAI. See Italian Africa Police (Polizia dell'Africa Italiana, PAI)
- Palestinian Foreign Worker Group, 93, 123, 169, 233
- Parrini Company, Eugenio, 416, 424
- Parti communiste français. See French Communist Party
- Parti ouvrier et paysan français. See French Workers' and Peasants' Party
- Parti Populaire Français. See French Popular Party
- Parti Poulair Algérien. See Algerian People's Party
- Partia Fashiste Shqiptarë. See Albanian Fascist Party
- Partia Komuniste e Shqipërisë. See Albanian Communist Party
- Partido Comunista de España. See Spanish Communist Party
- Partido Socialista Unificado de Cataluña. See Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia
- Partidul Comunist Român. See Romanian Communist Party
- Partito Comunista Italiano. See Italian Communist Party
- Partito Nazionale Fascista. See Italian National Fascist Party
- Passionist Fathers, Order of, 434
- Patria e libertà. See Fatherland and Liberty
- Patriotic Defense (Apărarea Patriotică), 793
- PCd'I. See Italian Communist Party
- PCE. See Spanish Communist Party
- PCF. See French Communist Party
- PCI. See Italian Communist Party
- PCR. See Romanian Communist Party
- Pentecostals, 448, 575, 680
- People's Court Panel VII, 12, 20, 26, 34, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42
- People's Tribunal in Kolozsvár. See Kolozsvár People's Tribunal
- People's Tribunal/Court in Bucharest. See Bucharest People's Tribunal
- Permanent Assembly of Social Workers of the Camps at Pithiviers and Beaune-la-Rolande, 111
- Peugeot, 142
- PFSH. See Albanian Fascist Party
- Pholegandos, Commune of the Political Exiles of, 521
- Phónix Factory, 358
- Pious Institute of the Holy Spirit (Pio Istituto di S. Spirito), 416
- PKSh. See Albanian Communist Party
- Plenipotentiary of the German Foreign Office (Bevollmächtigter des Auswärtigen Amtes), 832
- Plovdiv Jewish Community Fund, 28
- PNF. See Italian National Fascist Party
- Poglavnik Bodyguard Battalion, 47
- POHG. See Hlinka Guard
- Pohotovostné oddiely Hlinkovej gardy. See Hlinka Guard
- Policajné riaditeľstvo v Bratislave. See Bratislava Police Directorate; Slovak Police Directorate in Bratislava
- Police du Territoire et des Étrangers. See French Police of Territory and Foreigners
- Polish Army, 275
- Polizeihaftlager. See SS-police detention camp
- Polizia dell'Africa Italiana. See Italian Africa, Police of
- POPF. See French Workers' and Peasants' Party
- Popular Front, 536
- Poudrerie Nationale de Toulouse. See Toulouse National Gunpowder Factory
- PPA. See Algerian People's Party
- PPF. See French Popular Party
- Pracovná skupina. See Slovak Working Group
- Premier Spahis, 282
- Presidenza del Consiglio dei ministri. See Italian Office of the Prime Minister
- Pretura. See Golta Praetor's Office
- Prisoners Office, The, 487
- Procureur de la République. See French Attorney General of the Republic
- Promeyrat, 220
- Propagandaabteilung Südost. See Serbian Propaganda Department Southeast
- Pro-Palestine League, 352
- Protecting Power, 298, 794
- Protestants of Jewish Origin of the Good Shepherd Committee (Jó Pásztor Bizottság), 368
- PSI. See Italian Social Democratic Party
- PSUC. See Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia (Partido Socialista Unificado de Cataluña, PSUC)
- Publica Sicurezza. See Italian Public Security
- Quakers, 177. See also American Friends Service Committee
- RAAF. See Australian Air Force
- rabotnicheskia mladezhki sūioz. See Bulgarian Workers Youth League
- RAD. See Reich Labor Service
- Radio Moscow, 67
- RAF. See British Royal Air Force
- Ravnateljstvo melioracijskih i regulacijskih radova. See Croatian Directorate for Land Reclamation and Water Regulation
- Ravnateljstvo za javni red i sigurnost. See Croatian Directorate for Public Order and Security
- RAVSIGUR. See Croatian Directorate for Public Order and Security
- RCAF. See Canadian Air Force
- Red Army, 12, 19, 31, 34, 39, 40, 81, 83, 86, 108, 201, 279, 307, 310, 312, 325, 327, 329, 333, 335, 349, 355, 358, 363, 375, 376, 386, 574, 579, 580, 581, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 600, 604, 606–607, 608, 609, 610, 612, 613, 615, 617, 618, 621, 622, 625, 626, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 636, 637, 640, 643, 644, 645, 650, 657, 659, 660, 662, 665, 666, 667, 669, 674, 675, 677, 678, 681, 683, 685, 687, 689, 691, 693, 694, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 707, 709, 710, 711, 712, 714, 715, 716, 720, 721, 722, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 732, 733, 735, 736, 737, 740, 741, 742, 743, 745, 746, 747, 748, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 763, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 773, 774, 776, 778, 779, 780, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 791, 793, 795, 796, 798, 800, 801, 802, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 811, 812, 813, 820, 822, 825, 826, 828, 829, 849, 862, 863, 883
- Red Cross, 74, 107, 111, 114, 140, 148, 149, 153, 163, 192, 193, 203, 209, 214, 215, 222, 236, 237, 241, 391, 392, 406, 413, 415, 416, 419, 422, 428, 443, 451, 454, 458, 459, 463, 487, 490, 499, 505, 506, 507, 511, 516, 517, 518, 520, 522, 526, 565, 595, 610, 612, 619, 620, 624, 670, 697, 708, 714, 794, 815. See also International Committee of the Red Cross
- Reds, the. See Finnish Social Democratic Party
- Reformed Adventists, 575
- Regia Luogotenenza Generale. See Italian Royal General Lieutenancy
- Regiment de tirailleurs marocains. See Moroccan Sharpshooters, 2nd Regiment

- Reich Labor Service (Reichsarbeitsdienst, RAD), 5
- Reich Security Main Office (Reichssicherheitshauptamt, RSHA), 8, 82, 83, 95, 430, 433, 537. See also SS-Reich Security Main Office
- Reich Traffic Directorate (Reichsverkehrsdirektion), 771
- Reichsarbeitsdienst. See Reich Labor Service
- Reichskommissariat Norway. See Norwegian Reichskommissariat
- Reichssicherheitshauptamt. See Reich Security Main Office
- Reichstag, 118
- Reichsverkehrsdirektion. See Reich Traffic Directorate
- Renault factory, 186, 188
- Repubblica di Salò, 515
- Repubblica sociale italiana. See Italian Social Republic
- Rescue Committee of the Zionist Organization, 578
- Riaditeľ'stvo štátnych lesov a majetkov v Banskej Bystrici. See Slovak Directorate of State Forests and Properties in Banská Bystrica
- Riaditeľ'stvo štátnych lesov Žarnovica. See Slovak Directorate of State Forests, Žarnovica
- Righteous Among the Nations, 104, 109, 116, 123, 162, 169, 204, 214, 215, 357, 582, 624, 687, 812
- Ripault gunpowder factory, 157, 158
- RKU. See Ukrainian Reichskommissariat
- RLG. See Italian Royal General Lieutenantcy
- RMAI. See Romanian Ministry of Internal Affairs
- RN. See British Royal Navy
- RNR. See British Royal Naval Reserves
- Roata wagon factory, 730
- Roman Catholic Church, 47, 74. See also Vatican
- Roman Catholic Order of Notre Dame, 792
- Roman Property Management Company (Società Gestione Immobiliare Romana), 424
- Romanian Army, 312, 349, 358, 363, 574, 575, 576, 577, 590, 594, 596, 599, 600, 603, 604, 610, 615, 623, 627, 637, 638, 647, 652, 653, 654, 677, 696, 708, 710, 728, 730, 749, 750, 758, 760, 762, 764, 766, 768, 769, 770, 773, 774, 783, 786, 789, 805, 816, 820, 821, 824, 825, 827, 828, 830; Ist Rear Area Command, 668; I Territorial Corps/Command, 623, 627, 646, 672; II Territorial Corps/Command, 574, 620, 707, 764; III Territorial Corps/Command, 615, 679, 696, 814; IV Army Corps, 649; IV Territorial Corps/Command, 574, 600, 649, 672, 678; V Territorial Corps/Command, 649, 823, 824; VI Territorial Corps/Command, 792; VII Army Corps, 654, 761; VII Territorial Corps/Command, 706; Infantry Regiments/Battalions, 609, 624, 686, 710, 730, 765, 816; Pioneer Regiments, 648, 668, 761; Roads Battalions, 574, 614, 648, 649, 668, 678, 768, 785
- Romanian Army Corps of Engineers, 573, 601
- Romanian Army General Headquarters (Marele Cartier General, MCG), 673
- Romanian Army General Staff (Marele Stat Major, MSM), 572, 573, 574, 599, 615, 619, 620, 622, 623, 627, 668, 669, 672, 682, 696, 705, 706, 707, 745, 761, 781, 794, 808, 809, 814, 818
- Romanian Autonomous Assistance Committee (Comisia de Ajutorare), 578, 579, 580
- Romanian Command Office of the Interior Defense Forces (Comandamentul Forțelor de Apărare Interioară a Teritoriului), 823, 824
- Romanian Communist Party (Partidul Comunist Român, PCR), 582
- Romanian Concrete Beams Brigade (Detașamentul de Grinzi Beton), 668–669
- Romanian Council of Ministers, 581, 582, 646, 673–674, 688, 819
- Romanian Department of Health, 729
- Romanian Department of Industries, 729
- Romanian Department of Labor, 728
- Romanian Federation of the Jewish Communities (Federatia Comunităților Evreiești din România), 578, 677, 759
- Romanian Gendarmes Legion (Legiunea de Jandarmi), 589, 590, 594, 597, 602, 604, 606, 611, 613–614, 618, 625, 638, 641, 651, 654, 658, 660, 670, 675, 677, 682, 686, 690, 691, 694, 697, 699, 700, 714, 715, 717, 721, 726, 730, 732, 734, 736, 739, 742, 744, 747, 748, 752, 754, 756, 760, 762, 766, 768, 769, 773, 777, 786, 790, 799, 802, 804, 805, 807, 813, 818, 821–822
- Romanian General Inspectorate of Gendarmes, 572, 573, 600, 622, 627, 701, 777, 797
- Romanian General Inspectorate of Labor Camps and Brigades (Inspectoratul General al Taberelorși Coloanelor de Muncă), 572
- Romanian Headquarters Rear Area for the East (Comandamentul Etapelor de Est), 730, 731, 797
- Romanian Interior Ministry. See Romanian Ministry of Internal Affairs
- Romanian Iron Guard, 347, 570
- Romanian Jewish Labor Bureau, 659, 799
- Romanian Jews, Central Bureau of. See Central Bureau of Romanian Jews
- Romanian Labor Battalion (Batalion de Lucru, BL), 599–600, 747
- Romanian Labor Ministry, 572, 771
- Romanian Legion of Gendarmes. See Romanian Gendarmes Legion
- Romanian Ministry of Internal Affairs (Ministerul Afacerilor Interne, RMAI), 572, 580, 582, 610, 612, 622, 623, 624, 627, 628, 638, 673, 705, 706, 733, 744, 759, 781, 782, 789, 808, 809, 811, 812, 817
- Romanian National Bank (Banca Națională a României, BNR), 611, 638, 651, 710, 711, 768, 774
- Romanian National Defense Ministry (Ministerul Apărării Naționale), 572, 583, 646, 649, 789
- Romanian National Legionary State, 570
- Romanian People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs (Narodnyi komissariat vnutrennikh del, NKVD), 728
- Romanian Railway Works Detachments Command (Comandamentul Detașamentelor Lucrări Căi Ferate), 817
- Romanian Railways Company (Căile Ferate Române, CFR), 654, 679, 726, 817, 823
- Romanian Rear Echelon Command, 573
- Romanian Red Cross (Crucea Roșie din România, CRR), 595, 619, 620, 624, 670, 697, 708, 714, 794, 815. See also National Society of the Red Cross of Romania
- Romanian Security Services (Siguranța), 670, 679, 684, 691
- Romanian War Ministry, 672
- Romanian Zionist Organization (Organizația Sionistă), 578
- Romanianization Bureau, 638
- Royal Air Force (RAF). See British Royal Air Force
- Royal Army. See British Royal Army
- Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF). See Australian Air Force
- Royal Bavarian Army. See Bavarian Army
- Royal Canadian Air Force. See Canadian Air Force
- Royal Hungarian Army (Honvéd). See Hungarian Army
- Royal Hungarian Gendarmerie. See Hungarian Gendarmerie
- Royal Italian Army. See Italian Army
- Royal Merchant Navy. See British Royal Merchant Navy
- Royal Naval Reserves. See British Royal Naval Reserves
- Royal Navy. See British Royal Navy
- Royal Yugoslav Army. See Yugoslav Army
- Royal-Hungarian Transport Firm (A.M. Kir. Rednörseg topolyai kiségitőtoncháza), 381
- RSHA. See Reich Security Main Office
- RSI. See Italian Social Republic
- RTM. See Moroccan Sharpshooters, 2nd Regiment
- Ružomberok textile company, 875
- SA. See Nazi Storm Troopers
- Saharan Army. See French Saharan Army
- Saim Company, 407
- SAP. See Squad of Patriotic Action
- Sardinia Grenadiers. See Italian Army
- Sardinian Authority for Colonization (Ente Sardo di Colonizzazione, ESC), 426
- SBU. See Siemens Construction Union
- Schück Steam Mill, 385

- Schutzstaffel. See SS
- SD. See German Security Police and Security Service; SS Security Service
- SDK. See Serbian Volunteer Corps
- SDP. See Finnish Social Democratic Party
- SDS. See Serbian State Guard
- Sebenico, Commission for the Verification of War Crimes Perpetrated by the Occupiers and their Supporters in the Commune of, 556
- Second Bureau of the French General Staff, Intelligence (2ème Bureau), 263
- 2nd RTM. See Moroccan Sharpshooters, 2nd Regiment
- Secours National. See French National Relief
- Secours Suisse. See Swiss Relief Organization
- Secours Suisse aux Enfants. See Swiss Relief Organization for Children
- Selbstschutz, 606
- Serbian Education Ministry, 836, 839
- Serbian General Plenipotentiary for the Economy. See General Plenipotentiary for the Economy in Serbia
- Serbian Institute for Compulsory Youth Education, 836, 839–840
- Serbian Interior Ministry, 836, 839
- Serbian Orthodox Church, 369
- Serbian Propaganda Department Southeast (Propagandaabteilung Südost), 832
- Serbian Special Police (Odeljenje specijalne policije, OSP or Specijalna policija Srbije, SPS), 833, 836
- Serbian State Guard (Srpska državna straža, SDS), 835, 836, 839
- Serbian Volunteer Corps (Srpski dobrovoljački korpus, SDK), 833, 839
- Service de l'Armée de Terre. See French Army Service
- Service des Construction Navales. See French Naval Construction Service
- Service des Ponts et Chaussées de la Haute-Vienne. See Haute-Vienne Department of Bridges and Roads
- Service d'Ordre Légionnaire. See Legionary Order Service
- Service du Contrôle Social des Étrangers. See French Office of the Social Control of Foreigners
- Service du réfugiés espagnols. See Service of Spanish Refugees
- Service du Travail Obligatoire. See French Obligatory Labor Service
- Service of Spanish Refugees (Service du réfugiés espagnols), 257
- Service Social des Étrangers. See French Office of Social Services for Foreigners
- Serviciul Agricol. See Golta Agricultural Office
- Servizio Informazioni Militare. See Italian Military Intelligence Service
- Seventh-Day Adventists, 68, 320, 575, 734, 735, 811
- Shoah Foundation, 137, 217, 218, 219
- SIA. See International Solidarity of Anti-Fascists
- SICELP. See Italian Society for Construction and Public Works
- Sicherheitsdienst. See German Security Police and Security Service; SS Security Service
- Sicherheitspolizei. See German Security Police
- Siemens Construction Union (Siemens Bauunion, SBU), 320
- Šiesti Rabotný Prápor. See Slovak Sixth Labor Battalion
- Siguranța. See Romanian Security Services
- SIM. See Italian Military Intelligence Service
- Simoncini, 481
- Sipo. See German Security Police
- Sipo-SD. See German Security Police and Security Service
- Sisters of Marie-Joseph, 194
- Sisters of Saint Vincent Convent, 74
- Škoda ammunition factory, 859, 860
- SkR. See Sonderkommando Russland
- Slovak Army, 848, 859, 872, 886
- Slovak Center for the Solution of the Jewish Problem (Centrála pre riešenie židovského problému na Slovensku), 871, 885–886
- Slovak Central Economic Office (Ústredný hospodársky úrad, ÚHÚ), 845, 846
- Slovak Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps (Ústredná kancelária pre pracovné tábory Židov), 848, 858, 869
- Slovak Central Office of the Autonomous Orthodox Jewish Religious Communities (Ústredná kancelária autonómnych ortodoxných židovských náboženských obcí), 872, 886
- Slovak Committee for the Solution of the Jewish Question, 844
- Slovak Communist Party (Komunistická strana Slovenská, KSS), 882
- Slovak Construction Consortium (Slovenská Konštruktíva), 864, 865
- Slovak Country Office (Krajinský úrad, KÚ), 873, 886
- Slovak Directorate of State Forests, Žarnovica (Riaditeľstvo štátnych lesov Žarnovica), 878
- Slovak Directorate of State Forests and Properties in Banská Bystrica (Riaditeľstvo štátnych lesov a majetkov v Banskej Bystrici), 862
- Slovak Educational Asylum for Women (Ženský výchovný ústav), 854
- Slovak Forced Labor Battalions, 846. See also Slovak Sixth Labor Battalion
- Slovak General Construction Cooperative (Všeobecné stavebné družstvo), 877
- Slovak Interior Ministry (Ministerstvo Vnútra, MV), 843, 844, 846, 847, 848, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 873, 874, 875, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 883, 884, 885, 887, 889, 890, 891
- Slovak Jewish Center (Ústredňa Židov, ÚŽ), 845, 846, 848, 855, 866, 869, 874, 875, 887, 888, 889
- Slovak Jewish Central Bureau (Židovská ústredná úradovňa, ŽÚÚ), 887
- Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative (Slovenské dolnomoravské vodné družstvo, Moravod), 866, 870, 883, 884, 891
- Slovak Military Center (Vojenské ústredie, VÚ), 848
- Slovak Ministry of Economy, 845
- Slovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Ministerstvo zahraničných vecí, MZV), 843, 844, 871
- Slovak National Bank (Slovenská národná banka), 858
- Slovak National Council (Slovenská národná rada, SNR), 848, 849, 854
- Slovak National Court, 854, 855, 889
- Slovak National Defense Ministry (Ministerstvo národnej obrany, MNO), 843, 845, 847, 858, 859, 860, 870, 874, 879, 883, 889, 891
- Slovak National Parliament, 843, 845
- Slovak National Uprising (Slovenské národné povstanie, SNP), 849, 857, 860, 867, 876, 882, 888, 890
- Slovak Orthodox Jewish Religious Communities, 872, 886
- Slovak People's Party. See Hlinka Slovak People's Party
- Slovak Police Directorate in Bratislava (Policajné riaditeľstvo v Bratislave), 871
- Slovak Propaganda Office (Úrad propagandy), 842, 874
- Slovak Red Cross, 854
- Slovak Sixth Labor Battalion (Šiesti Rabotný Prápor, ŠP), 845, 870, 883, 891
- Slovak State Council (Štátnarada), 843
- Slovak State Security Headquarters (Ústredňa štátnej bezpečnosti, ÚŠB), 843, 863, 871, 884
- Slovak Transportation and Public Works Ministry (Ministerstvo dopravy a verejných prác, MDVP), 858, 865, 869, 880
- Slovak Working Group (Pracovná skupina), 848, 877
- Slovenian Liberation Front (Oslobodilna Fronta), 442, 542
- Slovenská Konštruktíva. See Slovak Construction Consortium
- Slovenská národná banka. See Slovak National Bank
- Slovenská národná rada. See Slovak National Council
- Slovenské dolnomoravské vodné družstvo. See Slovak Lower Moravian Water Cooperative
- Slovenské národné povstanie. See Slovak National Uprising
- SNCRR. See National Society of the Red Cross of Romania
- Snem Slovenskej republiky. See Slovak National Parliament
- SNP. See Slovak National Uprising
- SNR. See Slovak National Council
- SNS 1. See Finnish-Soviet Union Peace and Friendship Society

- Società Gestione Immobiliare Romana. See Roman Property Management Company
- Società Italiana Costruzioni e Lavori Pubblici. See Italian Society for Construction and Public Works
- Società Montecatini, 410
- Societatea Națională de Cruce Roșie din România. See National Society of the Red Cross of Romania
- Société Chériennes Charbonnages de Djérada. See Moroccan Society of the Coal Mines at Djerrada
- Society for Handicrafts and Agricultural Work (Obshchestvo remeslennogo i zemledel'cheskogo truda, ORT), 169, 209, 214
- Society of Saint Vincent de Paul, 180
- SOE. See British Special Operations Executive
- SOL. See Legionary Order Service
- Solidarité internationale antifasciste. See International Solidarity of Anti-Fascists
- Sonderkommando 10a and 10b, 592, 604, 691, 698, 715
- Sonderkommando Russland (SkR), 592, 642, 719, 720, 777
- Soviet Army. See Red Army
- Soviet Committee for State Security (Komitet gosudarstvennoi bezopasnosti, KGB), 808
- Soviet Extraordinary State Commission (Chrezvychainia Gosudarstvennaia Komissia, ChGK), 650, 663, 707, 712, 737, 772
- ŠP. See Slovak Sixth Labor Battalion
- Spanish Communist Party (Partido Comunista de España, PCE), 113
- Spanish Red Cross, 107
- Spanish Republican Army, 107, 108, 205
- Spanish Republicans, 90, 91, 93, 108, 191, 216, 241, 255, 264, 271, 287, 900
- Specijalna policija Srbije. See Serbian Special Police
- Sports Club Institute, 840
- SPS. See Serbian Special Police
- Squad of Patriotic Action (Squadre di azione patriottica, SAP), 461
- Srpska državna straža. See Serbian State Guard
- Srpski dobrovoljački korpus. See Serbian Volunteer Corps
- SS (Schutzstaffel), 24, 25, 35, 37, 48, 92, 96, 111, 134, 141, 144, 169, 199, 200, 216, 232, 238, 301, 306, 311, 315, 316, 323, 326, 330, 338, 339, 348, 349, 351, 356, 357, 359, 361, 362, 364, 379, 382, 385, 401, 408, 419, 431, 445, 451, 459, 528, 532, 538, 560, 561, 567, 579, 594, 602, 642, 675, 690, 699, 700, 720, 726, 743, 770, 777, 778, 786, 807, 825, 832, 833, 835, 846, 848, 863, 871, 874, 877, 879, 881, 882, 885, 895. See also Einsatzgruppe; Einsatzkommando; Einsatzstaffel; Higher SS and Police Leader; Waffen-SS
- SS Deutschland Regiment, 115
- SS Inspectorate of Concentration Camps (Inspektion der Konzentrationslager, IKL), 48
- SS Office for Ethnic German Affairs (Volksdeutsche Mittelstelle, VoMi), 592, 641, 642, 719, 777, 813
- SS Security Service (Sicherheitsdienst, SD), 67, 73, 83, 95, 151, 310, 348, 528, 562, 847, 894, 895, 896, 900, 901. See also German Security Police and Security Service
- SSCE. See French Office of the Social Control of Foreigners
- SSE. See French Office of Social Services for Foreigners
- SS-Main Office of Budget and Buildings, Office II, 24
- SS-police detention camp (Polizeihaftlager), 230
- SS-Reich Security Main Office (SS-Reichssicherheitshauptamt, SS-RSHA), 433, 845
- SS-Selbstschutz, 642
- Stapo. See Norwegian State Police
- Štátnarada. See Slovak State Council
- Statspolitiet. See Norwegian State Police
- Status Quo Ante synagogue, 337, 364, 370
- Stiliști. See Old Calendar Believers
- STO. See French Obligatory Labor Service
- Storm Troopers. See Nazi Storm Troopers
- Storting. See Norwegian Parliament
- Study Commission on the Spoliation of the Jews of France—the Mattéoli Commission (Mission d'Étude sur la Spoliation des Juifs de France, Mission Mattéoli), 92, 206
- Sturmabteilungen. See Nazi Storm Troopers
- Suomen Kommunistinen Puolue. See Finnish Communist Party
- Suomen Sosialidemokraattinen Puolue. See Finnish Social Democratic Party
- Suomen-Neuvostoliiton rauhan ja ystävyyden seuran. See Finnish-Soviet Union Peace and Friendship Society
- Superior Command FF. AA. Albania, 479, 481, 482, 487, 488, 492, 494, 499
- Superior Command of the Italian Armed Forces, “Slovenia and Dalmatia” (Comando Superiore FF. AA. “Slovenia e Dalmazia,” Supersloda), 422, 476, 477, 542, 544
- Sûreté Nationale. See French National Police
- Šürskej Basin State Building Office, 867
- Swiss Embassy (Italy), 413
- Swiss legation, 413, 439
- Swiss Red Cross, 148, 149, 214, 215
- Swiss Relief Organization (Secours Suisse), 177, 214, 215
- Swiss Relief Organization for Children (Secours Suisse aux Enfants), 214
- Szeged Railway Athletic Association, 375
- Tatra construction company, 868
- Tatranská construction company, 868, 869
- Tecuci Military Recruitment Center (Centrul de Recrutare Tecuci), 788
- Third French Republic. See French Third Republic
- Tito Partisans. See Yugoslav Partisans
- Toulouse, Jewish Charity Committee of, 114
- Toulouse Executive Committee, 218
- Toulouse National Gunpowder Factory (Poudrerie Nationale de Toulouse), 207
- Transnistria Department of Labor, 609, 621
- Transnistrian Government's Health Service, 662
- Traunstein District Court, 73
- Tre Venezie National Institution, 429
- Tribunale Speciale per la Difesa dello Stato. See Italian Special Court for the Defense of the State
- Tsardakas Group, 508
- Tunis Einsatzkommando. See Einsatzkommando Tunis
- Tunisian Neo-Destour Party, 144, 900
- Účastinárske Brickworks and Chemical Companies, 857–858
- UCII. See Union of Italian Jewish Communities
- UD-CGT. See French Departmental Union-General Confederation of Labor
- UGIF. See General Union of French Jews
- UHRO. See Ustaša regime
- ÚHÚ. See Slovak Central Economic Office
- UJRE. See French Jewish Union for Resistance and Mutual Aid
- Ukrainian Front, 39
- Ukrainian Nationalists, 618, 756, 769, 820
- Ukrainian Reichskommissariat (RKU), 362, 576, 577, 579, 799
- UNES. See Union of Electrical Concerns
- Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia (Partido Socialista Unificado de Cataluña, PSUC), 113
- Unified Socialist Youth (Juventudes Socialistas Unificadas, JSU), 113
- Unió Mill, 366, 371
- L'Union Départementale-Confédération Générale du Travail. See French Departmental Union-General Confederation of Labor
- Union des Juifs pour la Résistance et l'Entr'aide. See French Jewish Union for Resistance and Mutual Aid
- Union des sociétés de bienfaisance israélites. See Union of Jewish Charitable Associations
- Union Générale des Israélites de France. See General Union of French Jews
- Union of Electrical Concerns (Unione Esercizi Elettrici, UNES), 460
- Union of Italian Jewish Communities (Unione delle Comunità Israelitiche Italiane, UCII), 417, 484, 496
- Union of Jewish Charitable Associations (Union des sociétés de bienfaisance israélites), 183
- Unione delle Comunità Israelitiche Italiane. See Union of Italian Jewish Communities

- Unione Esercizi Elettrici. See Union of Electrical Concerns
- Unitarian Service Committee (USC), 118
- Unitary People's Liberation Front (Jedinstveni narodnooslobodilački, JNOF), 551
- United Combative Organization of Labor (Združena Borbena Organizacija Rada, Zbor), 832, 833, 836, 839
- United Nations, 392
- United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA), 242
- United Nations War Crimes Commission (UNWCC), 523, 532
- United States Armed Forces, 849, 894
- United States Army, 130, 137, 253
- United States Army Air Force (USAAF), 30, 117, 280, 333, 438, 618, 793
- United States consulates (Africa), 261, 275, 298
- United States Embassy (Italy), 467
- United States Office of the Military Government for Germany. See Office of the Military Government for Germany, United States
- United States State Department, 242, 794
- UNRRA. See United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration
- UNS. See Ustaša Security Police
- UNWCC. See United Nations War Crimes Commission
- Upper Bácska Mill, 382, 383
- Úrad propagandy. See Slovak Propaganda Office
- USAAF. See United States Army Air Force
- ÚŠB. See Slovak State Security Headquarters
- USC. See Unitarian Service Committee
- USIKS. See Ustaša Disciplinary and Criminal Court
- Ustaša Battalions, 56, 59, 61, 63, 69, 70, 75, 440, 832
- Ustaša Defense (Ustaška obrana), 59, 61, 63
- Ustaša Disciplinary and Criminal Court (Ustaški stegovni i kazneni sud, USIKS), 56
- Ustaša militia, 47, 49, 57, 59, 68
- Ustaša (Ustaše) regime, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 401, 440, 476, 546
- Ustaša Security Police (Ustaška Nadzorna Služba, UNS), 45, 48, 53, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 69, 71, 76
- Ustaška Nadzorna Služba. See Ustaša Security Police
- Ustaška obrana. See Ustaša Defense
- Ustaški stegovni i kazneni sud. See Ustaša Disciplinary and Criminal Court
- Ústredná kancelária autonómnych ortodoxných židovských náboženských obcí. See Slovak Central Office of the Autonomous Orthodox Jewish Religious Communities
- Ústredná kancelária pre pracovné tábory Židov. See Slovak Central Office for Jewish Labor Camps
- Ústredňa štátnej bezpečnosti. See Slovak State Security Headquarters
- Ústredňa Židov. See Slovak Jewish Center
- Ústredný hospodársky úrad. See Slovak Central Economic Office
- ÚŽ. See Slovak Jewish Center
- Vaada. See Zionist Aid and Rescue Committee in Budapest
- Va'adat ha-'ezrah vaha-hatsalah be-Budapesht. See Zionist Aid and Rescue Committee in Budapest
- Valpo. See Finnish security police
- Valtioliinenpoliisi. See Finnish security police
- Vatican, 435, 454, 847, 848
- Vichy Interior Ministry. See French/Vichy Interior Ministry
- Vichy Office of Economic Aryanization, 240
- Vichy paramilitary. See French Mobile Reserve Group
- Vlaamsk Nationaal Verbond. See Flemish National Union
- VNV. See Flemish National Union
- Vojenské ústredie. See Slovak Military Center
- Volksdeutsche Mittelstelle. See SS Office for Ethnic German Affairs
- Volunteers engaged in the French Foreign Legion for the duration of the war. See French Foreign Legion for the duration of the War
- VoMi. See SS Office for Ethnic German Affairs
- Všeobecné stavebné družstvo. See Slovak General Construction Cooperative
- VÚ. See Slovak Military Center
- Waffen-SS, 121, 321, 747
- Wehrmacht, 2, 5, 10, 92, 134, 153, 169, 171, 182, 210, 306, 346, 422, 425, 442, 445, 516, 550, 562, 575, 576, 615, 620, 621, 672, 792, 793, 894, 895. See also German Army, Luftwaffe
- Welfare Bureau of Hungarian Jews (Magyar Izraeliták Pártfogó Irodája, MIPI), 303, 334, 338, 346, 368
- Whites, the (Finland), 80
- Wiesbaden (Armistice) Commission, 139
- WJC. See World Jewish Congress
- Workers' International, 536
- World Jewish Congress (WJC), 229, 578
- Yad Vashem, 104, 109, 116, 123, 162, 167, 169, 203–204, 214, 215, 346, 357, 582, 624, 687, 800, 812
- Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA), 169, 207, 209, 214, 253
- Yugoslav Army, 46, 75, 427, 476, 482, 486, 493, 494, 495, 550, 792, 836
- Yugoslav Communist Party, 70, 486
- Yugoslav Federation of Jewish Communities, 555
- Yugoslav National Liberation Army, 836
- Yugoslav National Liberation Movement (Narodnooslobodilački pokret, NOP), 70, 382
- Yugoslav Navy, 418
- Yugoslav Partisans, 39, 49, 62, 63, 65, 70, 108, 354, 446, 540, 542, 544, 547, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 557, 793, 833, 835, 839, 840
- Yugoslav Sokol, 74
- Yugoslav State Commission to Investigate Crimes by the Occupiers and their Collaborators (Državna komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njihovih pomagača, DK), 836, 840
- Yugoslav War Crimes Commission, 65
- Zagreb Academy of Fine Arts, 547
- ZALDJ. See Hungarian labor camps for Jews
- ZALFJ. See German forced labor camps for Jews
- Zanetti Company, 448
- Zapovjedništvo sabirnih logora Jasenovac. See Jasenovac Assembly Camps
- Zavod za prinudno vaspitanje omladine. See Serbian Institute for Compulsory Youth Education
- Zbor. See United Combative Organization of Labor
- ZdL. See Central Office for State Justice Administrations for the Investigation of National Socialist Crimes
- Združena Borbena Organizacija Rada. See United Combative Organization of Labor
- Ženský výchovný ústav. See Slovak Educational Asylum for Women
- Zentrale Stelle der Landesjustizverwaltungen zur Aufklärung nationalsozialistischer Verbrechen, ZdL. See Central Office for State Justice Administrations for the Investigation of National Socialist Crimes
- Židovská ústredná úradovňa. See Slovak Jewish Central Bureau
- Zionist Aid and Rescue Committee in Budapest (Va'adat ha-'ezrah vaha-hatsalah be-Budapesht, Vaada), 357
- Zionist organizations, 357, 578, 882
- Zoodochos Pigi, 523
- ŽÚÚ. See Slovak Jewish Central Bureau
- Zwangsarbeitslager für Juden. See German forced labor camps for Jews